THE NOVELTY most recently introduced by Messrs NICOLL is called NICOLL'S RIDER DOWN PALETOT; and is the result of the adaptation of older forms in the formation of NICOLL'S PALETOT, the original elegance and utility of which it combines and improves.
Riders are found in greatest numbers in Iceland and the Fern Islands, where the severity of the climate renders down a well known to be proof against the most severe cold; and even the small quantity which can be compressed and concealed between the two hands will serve in the formation of a Garment which in its new material possesses lightness, impermeability, more warmth than the finest and thickest beaver, the finest cashmere, and the lightest gauzing that has ever been compiled, namely, personal warmth without fatigue
Paletôts prepared in Arctic Down, £10 10s.
Rider Paletôts in various materials at Messrs. NICOLL'S wholesale and retail warerooms, 114, 116, and 120, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill, London.

THE NICOLL PALETOT (registered 6 & 7 Vict., c. 65) WAREHOUSES, 114, 116, 120, REGENT-STREET, and 22, CORNHILL.—Many have assumed the use of the word Paletot, but the Paletot is the exclusive property of the designs and material. The Wholesale and Gauzing-house Departments for all London branches are the same as Messrs. Woodyer Trades area Jan paley, Cornhill, and 120, Regent-street.
The Nicoll is the only outstanding name given to a garmentmaker by Royal Letters Patent from the Crown, in imitation. It has all the advantages of Messrs NICOLL'S original invention, the B. A. TERRIS PALETOT CLOTH. The Nicoll Paletot, charged One, Two, Three, and Three-and-a-half Guineas, according, with the different degrees of expense in the material.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

SUPPLEMENT.

SUPPLEMENT TO No. 412.] SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1850. [GRATIS.

EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

THIS is the forty-fourth exhibition of "modern masters" at the British Institution, and is one, we think, of a very pleasing character—one, indeed, of more than average merit. The number of exhibitors is 339, and the number of works exhibited 500, or not two works apiece. The most prolific contributor is Mr. Lance, the fruit painter, who has six pictures, and all of merit.

The striking feature of the Exhibition is, that, with the single exception of Mr. George Jones, R.A., it is wholly unsupported by the forty Royal Academicians. Mr. Jones could be spared, we think, without much, or indeed any, detriment to the merit of the Exhibition. It was once otherwise at the British Institution. The Royal Academicians, we remember, used formerly to occupy the principal places in the North or best Room. Till within these very few years Edwin Landseer used to send. We believe this change may be attributed to the increased sale of works of art; and that where purchases used to be effected in the Exhibition room, they are now made almost entirely in the studios of the artists. The British Institution, it should always be remembered, was established for facilitating the sale of pictures by living British artists, and that one of its leading characteristics is the exclusion of portraits from its walls.

Six Associates of the Royal Academy contribute to the Exhibition: Mr. Sydney Cooper has three pictures; Mr. Creswick three; Mr. Redgrave one; Mr. Frost one; Mr. Danby one; and Mr. Marshall has a bust of "Sabrina." Of the 500 works of art, therefore, of which the Exhibition consists, twelve alone are contributed by that influential body against which Mr. Coningham and the Times are now running a tilt.

Most of our readers are aware of the size, and shape, and lighting of the British Institution; that the gallery, so called, consists of three rooms, with a staircase running up the centre, so as to turn every inch of ground to good account; that the principal room is to the north, and that a better light for pictures could hardly be desired. But we may observe in passing, that the plan of the central staircase might be imitated at the National Gallery, with much advantage. The waste of room at the Gallery with that excessive hall, is much to deplored.

The places of honour in the present Exhibition have been assigned by the "hanging" directors to Mr. Sydney Cooper, Mr. F. Goodall, Mr. Frank Stone, Mr. Linnell, Mr. Jutsum, Mr. Creswick, and others. Mr. Cooper occupies the place of honour immediately above the fire-place—a capital position for a cabinet picture; Mr. F. Goodall has the centre of the east side of the principal room, and Mr. F. Stone the centre of the west side. Mr. Goodall is supported by Mr. E. W. Cooke and Mr. Jutsum; and Mr. Stone by Mr. Harding and Mr. Linnell.

The ambitious painters, as far as subject is concerned, are Sir George Hayter, who sends "Our Saviour after the Temptation;" Mr. Salter, who exhibits "The Tedder Vows;" and Mr. Vowenham, who contributes "Oliver Cromwell dictating to Milton." The less ambitious painters, and, certainly, the more successful, are Mr. Frost, Mr. Danby, Mr. Sydney Cooper, Mr. Creswick, Mr. F. Goodall, Mr. Lance, Mr. Linnell, Mr. E. W. Cooke, Mr. F. Stone, Mr. Copley Fielding, Mr. Jutsum, Mr. Ansdell, Mr. Herring, Mr. Gilbert, Mr. G. Cole, and Mr. Carpenter. The gem or Jew's-eye of the Exhibition is a small picture by Mr. Frost, "Musidora," from Thomson's "Seasons." But the most taking with the public at large will be found to be Mr. Stone's "Sympathy," and Mr. Goodall's "Village Post-Office." In the high poetic line Mr. Danby takes the lead. But in real excellence of landscape art the palm of superiority must be given to Mr. Linnell on land and to Mr. Cooke at sea. After this brief prefatory description we shall now proceed with our comments, taking the pictures in the numerical order in which they are presented to us.

No 1. "A Group on a Common." T. Sydney Cooper, A.R.A.—This carefully-finished picture occupies the place of honour over the fire-place, in the North Room, and represents a donkey and three sheep. The drawing and colouring are of the greatest nicety of hand and touch. It is a small picture, two feet two inches by two feet six inches, and is in Mr. Cooper's best style. There is the blow of a healthy breeze upon the canvas. It is long since we have seen a donkey among the cattle pieces of this unequalled master in his own way—the Cuyp of our English school of art.

2. "Medora." W. Fisher.—A half-length portrait of an Eastern sdy, as the name denotes. The face is very beautiful, the expression good, and the execution careful. It forms a striking but pleasing contrast to its pendent "The Highland Gleaner (No. 17).

3. "A Farm-yard." J. F. Herring.—One of those masterly representations of horses, ponies, pigs, peacocks, and ducks, for which Mr. Herring is so deservedly distinguished. We doubt if he has succeeded on any other occasion in rendering the texture of the skin of horses with such painstaking truth of touch as in the picture before us, which, in point of size (three feet five inches by four feet one inch), as well as of execution, is one of Mr. Herring's most successful works. The picture will bear the minutest examination throughout—there is no shrinking in any part of it.

6. "A View of Pesth, in Hungary." G. Jones, R.A.—A small picture, chiefly remarkable as the contribution of a Royal Academician. The composition is not displeasing, but the execution is feeble and monotonous. It is not, however, devoid of truth.

16. "Oliver Cromwell, Lord Protector of England, dictating to John Milton, his Latin secretary, the celebrated despatch in favour of the persecuted Protestants of the Valleys of Piedmont." The Protector declared his determination to move the power of England in their behalf, if justice were not promptly rendered them.—F. Newenham.

> Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughter'd saints, whose bones
> Lie scatter'd on the Alpine mountains cold;
> Ev'n them who kept thy truth so pure of old,
> When all our fathers worship'd stocks and stones.
> Forget not, in thy book record their groans
> Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
> Slain by the bloody Piedmontese, that roll'd
> Mother with infant down the rocks.—Milton's Sonnets.

This is a large picture of 9 feet in height by 11 feet 10 inches in width, with figures of Cromwell and Milton of the size of life. Milton is seated listening to catch the words as Cromwell utters them. There is great dignity about Cromwell's face and figure, and the youthful look of Milton has been caught successfully. All the accessories—the chest with its iron bands, the carved table and chair, the globe, &c.,—are all well introduced and well painted. But Cromwell may be dictating any other dispatch than that in favour of the persecuted Protestants of Piedmont. There is nothing to mark or indicate the particular dispatch. Painters often fall into this error. We have more than one picture representing the Duke of Wellington writing his Waterloo dispatch; but one and all might be called his Salmanca or his Talavera dispatch, so almost impossible is it to represent a real difficulty of this kind. When the statue to Grattan was given to Chantrey, the committee asked the artist to place the statue on "the rock of the Constitution," for a pedestal. "But how," said Chantrey, "am I to represent this particular rock? Shall I carve a rock and cut beneath: 'This is the rock of the Constitution?'—I know no other way." So with Mr. Newenham; we want the catalogue to tell us that this is the Piedmontese despatch The price of the picture is 300 guineas.

17. "The Highland Gleaner." T. Brooks.—Hardly worthy of Wordsworth's beautiful lines—

> Sweet Highland girl! a very shower
> Of beauty is thy earthly dower;

but still a nice picture, and true to the characteristics of Scottish beauty. The artist has caught the ruddy look of health very successfully.

18. "The Miller's Home." T. Creswick, A.R.A.—One of those truthful representations of English scenery for which Mr. Creswick is so deservedly distinguished. The very title conjures up pleasant associations, all of which Mr. Creswick has happily succeeded in transferring to his canvas. The rustic stone bridge, the groups of happy children, the sweet position of the mill, the running water, are all most appropriately introduced and rendered. This we have had engraved for our present paper.

19. "Kenilworth from the Tilt-Yard." G. Barnard.—True and careful: a little picture which every year will invest with greater interest.

21. "Rich and Ripe." G. Lance. (Two pictures of grapes and peaches in one frame.)—Marvellous for truth, and sufficient to justify the story of the bird which pecked at the painted grapes of the Greek artist.

22. "Study of Kids." J. F. Herring.—A small and very beautiful picture. The still life is admirably painted; the birch-broom and old boots most appropriately introduced.

30. "Astronomy." J. Sant.—A fine picture, representing, in a circle, a female head gazing heavenward. The figure is leaning over a globe; the expression is poetic. How grand was Raphael in subjects of this nature! how noble in his "Philosophy!" how still nobler in his "Poetry!" This is the best picture that we have ever seen from Mr. Sant's pencil. It is marked 'sold,' and deserved to find an early and a liberal purchaser.

40. "The Regretted Companion." R. Ansdell.—A large oblong picture, representing an old wayfaring man kneeling by the side of his ass, that has just expired. The thoughtful look of the old man is shared by his dog. The dead ass, the dog—every portion of animal nature—is painted with admirable dexterity and truth. The story, too, is well told. The hands of the old man are careful, and finished studies from nature.

45. "Dutch Pilots Warping their Craft out of Harbour in Rough Weather." E. W. Cooke.—A busy scene, full of sea life, and suggestive of healthy breezes. Mr. Cooke's well-deserved reputation for pictures of this character hardly requires that we should say more than that he is here true to himself and to nature, as well as to the peculiarities of Dutch skies and Dutch craft. No artist more thoroughly understands the different hues of sky and scene which characterise the countries of Cuyp, Vandervelde, and Ruysdael. Mr. Cooke should paint three pictures in one frame, with divisions, showing the peculiarities which he feels, and can paint so thoroughly.

52. "The Post-Office." F. Goodall.—This is Mr. Goodall's single contribution to the Exhibition. It is a large picture, 4 ft. 5 in. in height by 5 ft. 10 in. in width, and represents the exterior of a country post-office, with a barber busy reading the Times aloud to a group of anxious listeners: a boy loiters with a tray of fish; the "boots" of an inn (another Sam Weller) ceases to polish a pair of top boots; and all gather round the consequential barber. In another part of the picture, a pretty girl is reading a letter she has just received to an old Chelsea pensioner. On the door-step of the office, another pretty girl, overcome with the news she has received, is hiding her head in grief; while, with admirable indifference to what is passing, the guard of the mail, who had brought the post-bag, is whistling aloud, as if to say, "This is stale news to me! I knew all this before I mounted my box." Such is the story of the picture. The execution is, of course, careful: every part has been well considered; but the composition is somewhat scattered, and the expression of the several faces is not above the ordinary mark of Mr. Goodall's former pictures. This we have had engraved.

54. "The Salmon-Leap at Lynmouth, North Devon"—J. Uwins—is the work of a young artist, who seems to divide his time between Italy and Devon. He has shown great variety in what he does. He is more true, however, to Italy than to England.

56. "A Peep in the Palace of William III." J. D. Wingfield.—A carefully-painted interior of that part of Hampton Court Palace wherein the Charles II. beauties are hung. The picture supplies a peep into the adjoining room. The portraits of the beauties are faithfully introduced. This is a nice memorial of an Anglo-Dutch palace.

57. "Evening: Coming Home to the Farm." H. Jutsum.—A large landscape, 4 feet in height by 5 feet 8 inches in width, and certainly the best picture (in point of composition and execution) that we have seen of Mr. Jutsum's. It is true to English scenery, and to the effect of evening. It is marked "sold." Good pictures are soon picked up. A really good picture is seldom suffered to pass unsold.

64. "The Pinys of Shakspere." J. Gilbert.—A clever embodiment of all the principal characters in the plays of Shakspere, not on Stothard's principle—seen on one line, but on a double stage. The principal figures are Henry VIII., Shylock, and Lear; but every character has its due consequence on the canvas. The grouping is most ingenious, and the several attributes most carefully distinguished. There is some nice painting in parts.

70. "Scene near Cuckfield, Sussex." Copley Fielding.—A little bit of genuine wild English nature: containing many of the beauties which Mr. Fielding catches so well in water-colours transferred to canvass. The peep between the stems of the trees at the stack of red and white buildings is introduced with great judgment and effect.

77. "Elizabeth Castle, Jersey."—R. C. Leslie—is by the son of Mr. C. R. Leslie, the Royal Academician. Young Mr. Leslie is improving in his art, but his advance is less rapid than an earlier effort, still better than this, had taught us to expect.

78. "Girl with Water-cresses." E. U. Eddis.—A full-length, seated on a bank, nearly the size of life; far from good in point of colour, but with a thoughtful character of face about it both pleasing and appropriate. Mr. Eddis is always attentive to the requirements of his art, but he has not a good eye for colour. His drawing is generally careful.

81. "Domestic Ducks." J. F. Herring.—A small oval. Mr. Herring is as true to duck nature as Mr. Lance is true to fruit nature, and Mr. W. Hunt to flower nature. The execution in this picture is particularly careful.

87. "The Corsair." E. W. Cooke.

> O'er the hush'd deep the yellow beam he throws,
> Gilds the green wave, that trembles as it glows.

One of those beautiful coast scenes of Italy, which the admirers of Mr. Cooke call upon him to multiply from year to year. A sweeter picture, of its class and character, Mr. Cooke never painted. It is sold.

88. "A Group in the Meadows." T. Sydney Cooper, A.R.A.—Three cows—most beautifully drawn. An unusually small-sized picture for Mr. Cooper.—2 ft. 7 in. by 3 ft. 1 in.

94. "Morning." J. P. Pettitt.

> Nor long the sun his daily course withheld,
> But added colours to the world revealed.—DRYDEN.

Dryden has not been very successful in his descriptions of external nature; and this, which Mr. Pettitt quotes in illustration of his picture, is one of his worst. It is not worse, however, than the picture it is dragged in to illustrate.

96. "The Watchful Shepherd." R. Redgrave, A.R.A.—Mr. Redgrave's single contribution to the Exhibition, representing the slope of a hill, on which sheep are feeding, with a peep into one of those thickets which Mr. Redgrave is so fond of painting. The execution is unusually hard, but the general composition is novel and pleasing.

97. "Harvest Time." F. Taylor.—A small half-length of a gleaner carrying wheat on her head. The pose of the figure is good, and the face pretty; but it has more studio nature about it, than field nature.

98. "Painting." C. H. Stanley, jun.—A small full-length, representing a young lady copying a picture by Cuyp. She wears a bonnet, and her face is altogether unseen. The execution is careful, but hard.

100. "Sancho's Surprise on seeing the Squire of the Woods' Nose." George Cruikshank.—By the admirable caricaturist, who has this year (for the first time, we believe) taken to painting in oil-colours. Mr. Cruikshank will not add to his reputation by pictures of this class and character. It is very bad.

101. "Cottage Scene: Dolgelly, North Wales." R. Brandard.—An interior, painted in a style something between Isaac Ostade and F. Goodall. There is a young mother, a cottage repast, a girl feeding a goat, chickens feeding, &c. The feeling throughout is excellent: the execution, too, is good.

102. "The Jewels and the Gem." G. Lance.—Rich stones most richly painted. The gem is a minature of the Princess Royal set in diamonds.

107. "The Pilgrim—vide 'All's Well that Ends Well.'" H. W. Phillips.—A female head, by the son of the late Royal Academician Phillips. There is a solemn thoughtfulness about this head, that lifts it a little beyond mere portraiture.

118. "Fecamp, Coast of Normandy." J. D. Harding.—Mr. Harding's single contribution to the collection. The composition is careful; but it is not what collectors call a pleasing picture. It is true to the coast of Normandy, and reminds us, in parts, of Mr. Collins.

120. "Gypsy Trampers." F. Tayler.—Girls (with donkeys) begging. The look of the elder girl, who is holding out a hat, is nicely felt and rendered. The group is well put together, and the whole picture is in Mr. Tayler's best manner; and what that manner is, is well known to all Exhibition-goers.

123. "Southdowns." T. Creswick, A.R.A., and R. Ansdell.—A joint affair (we disavow the least allusion to a joke)—one of those combinations which Callcott and Landseer, Lee and Cooper, have rendered so popular. Mr. Ansdell has painted the sheep, and Mr. Creswick the clown, with all their accustomed truth of nature and dexterity of pencil. We hope to see them again in other and equally successful efforts. This sort of combinations puts both artists on their mettle.

129. "Sympathy." F. Stone.—Two beautiful girls; one sympathising with, and soothing the (nicely indicated) sorrow of the other. We could have wished that the dresses had been somewhat different—less in Mr. Stone's well-known style. But with the faces we could not wish for the slightest change. This charming picture has been bought by Mr. Graves, of Pall-mall, and will be engraved.

133. "Opening the Gate." J. Linnell.—A small landscape, fit, in point of size, for any gentleman's drawing-room, and fit, in point of quality and execution, for any collection of English pictures. The cows and children might be somewhat better defined—but with the trees, the foliage throughout, and the distance, there could be no change that would tend to improve it. A sweeter landscape Mr. Linnell never painted.

134. "Minna Troil—vide 'The Pirate.'" T. M. Joy.—One of those transition-pictures, half portrait, half ideal. We will not say that Mr. Joy has caught the Minna Troil of the great novelist, but he has succeeded in making a pleasing work of art.

137. "A Welsh Mill." H. J. Boddington.—With all Mr. Boddington's well-known fidelity and finish.

138. "The Novice." Alex. Johnston.

> This vestal cloak shall fold my fading bloom—
> Of virgin vows and purity the token.
> This cell, sepulchral-like, shall be the tomb
> Of mother'd hopes, vows broke as soon as spoken;
> Of love despised, of pains destroy'd and of a heart quite broken.
> MS, WALKER MARSHALL.

Small full-length of a lady fastening a bracelet. It is not good in point of expression, or even of composition, but it is rich in colour. The "Novice" would seem a misnomer.

140. "Dover." J. Holland.

> There is a cliff, whose high and bending hail
> Looks fearfully in the confined deep.—SHAKESPEARE.

One of those pictures representing common scenes which defy detection. But for the catalogue, we should never have taken this odd combination of blue and red for Shakspeare's Cliff. This is a perversion of landscape painting. Dull, common fidelity is better than this.

143. "Musidora." W. E. Frost, A.R.A.

> At the doubtful breeze alarmed.

We have already alluded to this charming little picture, as the gem of the Exhibition. Often as "Mus.dora" has been painted before, she was never made so beautiful, or done so much artistic justice to, as by Mr. Frost in this picture. For exquisite female delicacy, tor beauty of face, and general excellence of composition, this little picture is worth fifty of those rude studies which Mr. Etty's patrons kept him employed upon for so long a period. This fine picture was "sold" before it went to the Exhibition.

145. "Cottage near Lindfield, Sussex." Copley Fielding.—One of Mr. Fielding's truthful transcripts from the scenery of his favourite Sussex.

147. "The Gleaner's Child." Mrs. Carpenter.—A small, well-painted picture, representing the head and shoulders of a fine healthy child. The name has not been inaptly given.

148. "A View of Angers." E. A. Goodall.—A faithful map of a picturesque place (by the way, very unlike Mr. Holland's "Dover," just noticed). Mr. Goodall should, in works of this character, give more attention to the pictures of Mr. Stanfield and Mr. Roberts. We do not wish to see these artists re-produced at second-hand; but there is much that Mr. Goodall might learn with advantage, without copying.

156. "The Triumph of Venus." W. Fisher.

> She, with a subtle smile in her mild eyes,
> The herald of her triumph drawing nigh,
> Half-whisper'd in his ear, "I promise thee
> The fairest and most loving wife in Greece."
> She spoke and straightway: I shut my sight for fear;
> But when I look'd, Paris had raised his arm,
> And I beheld great Juno's angry eyes,
> As she withdrew into the golden cloud.
> Œnone.—ALFRED TENNYSON.

This is by the painter of "Medora" (No. 2), already noticed. We have said that Mr. Goodall might study Roberts and Stanfield with advantage, so in the same way Mr. Fisher might study Mr. Frost. "The Musidora" (No. 143) has all those excellences which the Venus should have in the same degree. There is merit in Mr. Fisher's composition and some nice painting in parts. He works as if he loved his subject and he shows that love for what he is about.

157. "English Peasantry." W. E. D. Stuart.—This is an oval, representing the interior of a kitchen, with a young mother and young affectionate husband by her side, an old woman teaching a child, and a girl and a boy making love of the back-kitchen. It is very stiffly painted, but the idea is not ill made out, while the whole picture evinces a promise of success in future efforts.

We now enter the MIDDLE ROOM.

160. "Castle of Wellburg." C. R. Stanley.—A large and an ambitious picture, somewhat in the style of Mr. Pyne, but without his airy excellence and his knowledge of perspective. There is much, however, in many parts that is good, and it is a large picture.

172. "San Lorenzo, Coast of Genoa." T. S. Robins.—We have too many pictures annually produced hovering on the debateable land between amateur art and artistic excellence, and we take this picture to be a composition of the kind. Artists only half-fledged should restrict their flight, and take less canvas. What is pardonable on a small scale, becomes offensive when paraded on a large surface. Mr. Robins, however, has many merits to redeem his defects.

182. "Ruins of the Library in Hadrian's Villa." W. Linton.—A small but most effective little picture, imbued with the poetry of association which it calls up. There is not much in it in point of labour, but what is there is good.

184. "A View of Buda and Ofen, from Pesth." G. Jones, R.A.—Only remarkable as the work of a Royal Academician.

191. "A Good Place for Trout." T. Danby.—Not up to the mark of Mr. Danby's last year's efforts. Let us trust that he is reserving himself, as we hear he is, for the Royal Academy Exhibition. It is frequently unfair to weigh the merits of an artist by his British Institution pictures, which are generally small things painted to pay off Christmas bills; the greater efforts are sent to the Academy.

192. "The Portico of the National Gallery." A. C. Hayter, jun.—A most ingenious piece of composition, in which the steeple of St. Martin's is introduced with good effect. The figures between the columns and on the steps are well arranged and well painted.

196. "Blenheim." G. E. Hering.—A well-painted view of the Palace from the water: a capital illustration of the justice of Sir Joshua Reynolds's criticism on the picturesque character of Vanbrugh's architecture. Reynolds said that Vanbrugh treated his building as part of a landscape, and Mr. Hering has shown how true the criticism is, by the skill which he has shown in this assimilation.

198 "A Golden Moment." F. Danby, A.R.A.

> The robin on the gilded spray
> Chants his vesper to the dying day;
> The wild-fowl, with her yellow brood,
> Paddles beneath the hanging wood;
> Where most the woodland choir now
> Already nestle on the shaded bough;
> While insect mill ons, in their only day,
> Still, lingering fill the glowing ray.

A red evening effect, painted with surprising skill, and dipped in the finest poetry—much finer poetry than Mr. Danby has given in illustration of his meaning. But the picture is not in want of verse to explain its beauties, though its fine poetic qualities are of that high character which the lovers of literal landscape will fail to appreciate, and may miss entirely. "A Golden Moment" is like a picture by an old master, accidentally introduced into a room where all is new.

199. "Cranmer summoned before the Privy Council: Thomas Wriothesley, Chancellor; Lord Paget, Secretary; Lord Russell; Duke of Norfolk; Seymour, Duke of Somerset; Thomas Lord Seymour, and Bishop Gardiner." E. B. Morris.

Henry sent for Cranmer, and said, "Go you to the council, and demand to be confronted with your accuser. Should there be a moment's hesitation, produce this ring." Cranmer followed the instruction of his Sovereign, but his righteous request was made in vain; their Lordships insisted upon his immediate commitment to the Tower. Upon this Cranmer produced the ring.—Life of Cranmer.

Our criticism must be very short. Mr. Morris has not wrought successfully: his Cranmer, though not ill conceived, is but a poor candidate for future martyrdom.

203. "Aladdin's Present to the Sultan." J. Gilbert.—Another of these versatile effects of Mr. Gilbert's facile pencil; but not, we think, in his happiest mood.

205. "Lance Reproving his Dog." Left unfinished by the late Sir A. W. Callcott, and completed by J. Callcott Horsley.—A favourite subject with artists; every exhibition having at least one Lance. What actors would call the scene (a Boccaccio-like garden) is admirably chosen; but Lance is not very characteristic, and his dog is somewhat indifferently painted. Landseer has taught us to like dogs only as he has painted them. Another Landseer suffers by such comparison. It was well and wittily said that Mr. Ansdell was an admirable artist when you compared him with nature, but he would not do when you compared him with Landseer.

206. "An Old Well on the Appian Way, Campagna of Rome." J. Uwins.—An illustration of the justice of our former remark, that Mr. Uwins is happier in rendering Italian, than he is English scenery. This is nicely painted.

210. "A Fruit Shop at Angers." E. A. Goodall.—Careful, as Mr. Goodall never fails to be, and better than the general average of his pictures. Angers, we observe, has been his field of study during the last autumn.

211. "Piazzetta di S. Marco." J. Holland.—This is by the painter of the eccentric "Dover," which we have recently condemned. When Mr. Holland can paint thus charmingly, why should he play such will-o'-the-wisp tricks with his palette and pencils? The deep rich colouring of this picture is especially fine.

212. "The Purchased Flock." J. Linnell.—A smaller picture than Mr. Linnell's other contribution to the rooms, but conceived and executed in the same masterly spirit and manner. A more desirable specimen of Mr. Linnell's art we have never seen. It holds the post of honour in the middle of the room, and found a purchaser at once.

213. "Chiavara on the Riviera di Levanti." G. E. Hering.—A companion picture to Mr. Holland's "Piazzetta;" more thinly painted (somewhat in Mr. Pyne's manner), but clever and effective. We must continue to watch Mr. Hering's progress. The "Blenheim" just noticed, and the picture now under review, are not every-day productions

214. "The Desert Steed." C. Tschaggeny.—A large picture, representing an Arabian desert, and a horse of the true breed, painted sufficiently well to satisfy a jockey.

221. "The Disputed Point." R. Brandard.—We have already noticed a clever interior of an Irish cottage by Mr. Brandard; but this is a different way, and is equally clever. It is a kind of "Wilkie's Village Politicians," but painted more in Bird's manner than in Wilkie's. If Mr. Brandard could colour as well as Mr. Goodall, or Mr. Goodall catch character and expression as well as Mr. Brandard, both would be much better artists than they are at present.

228. "Porto Fesano; Gulf of Spezzia." G. E. Hering.—Another of Mr Hering's careful studies, and one which fully justifies all our previous commendations.

248. "Interior: Royal Chapel, Hampton Court." J. D. Wingfield.—The view is from the Royal pew—a somewhat disadvantageous position, as it lessens the apparent height of the roof. No one enters more zealously than Mr. Wingfield into all the parts and points of interest in old buildings, and few catch Hampton Court character with more artistic excellence. He is apt to be hard, but this hardness suits wood or stone.

256. "Morning: the Stream in the Hills." T. Creswick, A.R.A.—One of those fine Creswick-like pictures which brings to mind the line in Thomson—and that glorious stanza in Burn's "Hallowe'en":—

> Now down the steep the dashing torrent flies

> Whyles owre a linn the burnie plays,
> As through the glen it wimpl't;
> Whyles roun a rocky scaur it strays,
> Whyles in a wiel it dimpl't:
> Whyles glittered to the nightly rays,
> Wi' bickering dancing dazzle;
> Whyles cookit underneath the braes,
> Below the spreading hazel.

We recommend the stanza to Mr. Creswick. He would make a fine composition from such genuine nature as Burns has given.

258. "Detaining a Customer." R. Mclnnes.—A small picture, representing a shoemaker with his fiddle, intent on learning a favourite tune. He is reminded by an old woman, that whilst he is thus engaged a customer (a young girl, nicely painted) is waiting to be served. The lesson "to mind your business before your pleasure" is well made out.

259. "By the rivers of Babylon there we sat down, yea we wept, when we remembered Zion." Psalm cxxxvii, v. 1. W. Gale.—A subject much beyond Mr. Gale's pencil.

178. "Jeanie Deans and the Laird of Dumbiedikes," Alex. Frazer.—

> "Jeanie, I will make ye Lady Dumbiedikes afore the sun sets, and ye may ride to Lunnon in your ain coach, if ye like. Take what siller will serve ye."—Heart of Mid-Lothian.

We are glad to see Mr. Frazer again an exhibitor, and in his old Wilkie-and-Ailan like way. There is much that is excellent in Jeanie, and old Dumbiedikes is full of character.

238 "Borgo Castello, Calabria Ultra." W. Linton.—One of Mr. Linton's most effective compositions, revealing all his appreciation of the poetry of landscape nature. It was well said by Fuseli, that "selection is the invention of a landscape painter." This quality of "selection" is generally apparent in all Mr. Linton's transcripts from nature.

290. "Our Saviour after the Temptation." Sir George Hayter, M.A.S.L.

> Again the Devil taketh him up into an exceeding high mountain, and showeth him all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; and saith unto him, All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me. Then saith Jesus unto him, Get thee hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. . . . Then the Devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto him.—St. Matthew, chap. iv.

There is much that is good in the composition of this picture, and, considering the grandeur of the subject, a great deal that is excellent. (We shall engrave this Picture in a future Number.)

301. "Don Quixote and Sancho Panza in Pedro's Hut." G. Cole.—This is a clever picture, and is marked "sold," but at a price far below its merits, viz. twenty-five guineas. The general arrangement is capital, the character throughout well preserved, and some of the painting firm and excellent. We do not remember seeing on canvas a better Rosinante. Mr. Cole is a new name in art, and apparently an accession.

311. "Myrrha." H. O'Neil.—A small three-quarter picture of a female, painted with all that delicacy of touch for which Mr. O'Neil has acquired a well-earned reputation. There is a tranquil thoughtfulness and beauty about the face, that is particularly winning. The shot-silk dress is, however, somewhat Swan-and-Edgarish. The price is fifty guineas, nor is it dear at that price.

We now enter the third, and last, room—called in the catalogue the SOUTH ROOM.

317. "The Departure of the Chevalier Bayard from Brescia." J. C. Hook.

As he quitted the chamber to take horse, the two fair damsels met him, each bearing a little offering which she had worked during his sickness. Greatly did the brave knight thank them for this courtesy, saying that such presents from such lovely hands were worth ten thousand crowns. Then gallantly fastening the bracelets on his arm, and the purse on his sleeve, he vowed to wear them both for the honour of the fair donors while his life endured.—Life of the Chevalier Bayard.

There is much to commend in the conception and execution of this picture. The Chevalier himself is well painted; and the squire, or page, who is fastening on his master's spurs, is well drawn and appropriately introduced, so as to vary the arrangement of the composition.

326. "A Dead Drake." H. Weekes, jun.—The first production of the son of Mr. Weekes, the sculptor, and assistant of Sir Francis Chantrey. It is small, and is hung too high to be seen to advantage. It shews an eye for nature.

333. "Interior of a Cottage, Kent." G. Hardy.—Most carefully and minutely painted; but not exhibiting any advance on Mr. Hardy's part.

352. "A Bit of Holland." E. W. Cooke.—A little bit, indeed, but quite a gem in its way—speaking pleasantly of Vandervelde and Ruysdael. The price, we observe, is twenty guineas. Mr. Cooke is fond of painting these small slips of sea views, and he knows wherein his strength consists.

361. "At Undercliff, Isle of Wight." Sidney R. Percy.—A beautiful bit of wild nature, placed on the canvas with a fine and masterly touch. This is no common production; and seldom, indeed, have we seen a truer rendering of nature than this description. The glimpse of the sea is introduced with skill, and gives variety to the composition.

367. "Master's Rest; or, the Painter's Holiday." R. W. Buss.—Mr. Buss is one of Mr. Kidd's school; and, though always clever, he never gets beyond cleverness.

368. "Nature and Art." G. Lance.—Two small circular pictures, in one frame, representing fruit in one, and in the other jewels set in gold. Shall we say, with the fine lady in Swift, "Nature must give way to art?"

369. "The Villa Borghese, from the Walls of Rome." E. W. Cooke.—The whole of the trees included in the scene, with Raphaelle's house on the left, were razed to the ground by the Romans in 1849, to prevent the occupation of the villa by the French troops.

Mr. Cooke has succeeded in throwing an air of melancholy over his picture, as if the trees were conscious of their coming destruction. This is an enviable memorial of what was once a lovely scene.

376. "Sleep and Death conveying the body of Sarpedon to Lycia." J. Wood.

> Then Sleep and Death, two twins of winged race,
> Of matchless swiftness, but of silent pace,
> Receiv'd Sarpedon at the god's command,
> And in a moment reach'd the Lycian land;
> The corse amid his weeping friends they laid,
> Where endless honours wait the sacred shade.—POPE'S Homer.

This well-grouped composition reminds us of the late Mr. Watson's admirable bas-relief of the same subject; but Mr. Wood's picture is not a cento, by any means, from Mr. Watson.

381. "Valentine's Day." R. Farrier.—A boy behind a door, laughing at a knot of pretty girls, who are reading and enjoying the Valentine he has sent one of them. There is much quiet merriment in this picture, and some good painting.

388. "The First Impression." H. C. Selous.—This is a picture representing Guttemburg showing to his wife his first experiment in printing from moveable types. The whole composition is too made-up, and the accessories are somewhat violently introduced. The lady is a great deal too grand.

394. "The Battle Fair." Aster R. C. Corbould.—A large truthful picture, well grouped, and full of character, but painted in a hard, teatray manner.

401. "The Evening Sun upon a Mountain called Tryfan, in North Wales." T. Danby.—Painted with a large portion of that poetic appreciation of nature which distinguishes the compositions of Mr. Danby's father; the style, however, is quite Mr. T. Danby's own, and it is good.

403. "Spanish Produce." G. Lance.—Another of Mr. Lance's delightful transcripts from nature.

410. "A Study of Weeds." James Hall.—Evidently copied direct from nature by one whose skill is not equal to his appreciation of what is beautiful.

412. "Mole Guest, near Port Madoc, North Wales." J. Danby.—A clever landscape, by another of Mr. Danby's sons. Lord Northwick has bought it since the Exhibition opened.

413. "Venus dissuading Adonis from the Chase." W. Salter.—Mr. Salter is a worthy follower of what is high and exalted in art. He does not deal with common subjects; Scripture and the Classics are his text-books. He is certainly better this year than he has been for some time: his drawing has improved.

425. "The Interview between James IV. and the celebrated outlaw Murray, on Permen Moore, on the banks of the Yarrow." J. M. Joy.

> Out Gods forbade, quoth the outlaw, then
> I hope your grace will better be!
> Else ere you come to Edinburgh port,
> I trow thou guarded sall ye be.
> The lands of Ettrick forest fair,
> I wan them from the enemie:
> Like as I wan them, sae will I keep them,
> Contrarie a' kings in Christendie.

Mr. Joy is evidently fond of Scotch traditions and ballads; and shews at times considerable skill in transforming them to canvas. He has here, however, been less successful than on former occasions. He is not enough with his subject.

427. "Remnants." G. Lance.—The remnants of a feast—a miscellaneous collection of fruit, capitally sorted for colour and effect.

429. "A Dead Drake." G. Lance.

> What shall he have who killed the drake?
> A jug of ale his thirst to slake,
> Such as the jolly fellows use
> In the foamy tankards of Trinity.—The Cambridge Garland.

Still life, most marvellous for execution, and somewhat different in subject from the usual run of Mr Lance's works. Mr. Lance must himself enjoy a change from fruit and gems to brown jugs and the plumage of our native birds.

430. "Watering Cattle: Sunset." T. Sidney Cooper, A.R.A.—Admirably true to nature.

431. "Still Life." M. P. Jackson.—This is by the son of the late John Jackson, R.A., one of the best of our portrait painters (witness his admirable heads of Flaxman and Canova). We have always great pleasure in heralding to notice the first productions of the sons of eminent men. It is a just tribute to excellence. Mr. Jackson commences modestly and well. He is grounding himself in the grammar of his art.

445. "Disturbing the Congregation." George Cruikshank.—Mr. Cruikshank's second contribution. A boy has let his top slip from his hands, much to the annoyance of a pompous beadle, who hardly knows how to act. There is evidently a struggle between parochial duty and the Book of Common Prayer. Some of the boys are full of character—but when was Cruikshank deficient in character?

451. "Farm House and Mill, at Isques, near Boulogne." G. Stanfield.—By the son of Clarkson Stanfield. We notice with pleasure an improvement since last year.

452. "The Falconer." J. D. Wingfield.—Out of Mr. Wingfield's usual class of subjects, but still in his way. The execution is careful.

457. "The Pentland Hills, near Edinburgh, from the neighbourhood of Dalkeith." James Hall.—A more ambitious effort than "The Weeds," by the same artist, already noticed. Mr. Hall is an amateur, and therefore should not be too severely dealt with by the critics.

465. "The Toilet of Venus." W. Salter, M.A.F.—

> The ready Graces wait, her baths prepare,
> And oint with fragrant oils her flowing hair;
> Her flowing hair around her shoulders spreads,
> And all adown ambrosial odour sheds.
> Last, in transparent robes her limbs they fold,
> Enrich'd with ornaments of purest gold.
> And thus attired.—Fawkener's Hymn to Venus.—CONGREVE.

Venus is somewhat wanting in beauty—a sad deficiency in a subject of this nature. The colouring is rich and full.

466. "Interior of a Dartmoor Cottage." G. Hardy.—Very careful, but still not denoting any advance, we fear.

475. "Morning: A Scene in Devonshire."—F. C. Lewis—is chiefly remarkable as the production of a gentleman whose skill with the etching needle has never been surpassed. The best of Mr. Cousins's fine mezzotints were etched by Mr. Lewis.

488. "Titania; or, the Fairy Queen." J. G. Lough.

> For she his hairy temples then had rounded
> With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers.

490. "Puck." J. G. Lough.

> What hempen home spans have we swaggering here?
> Midsummer Night's Dream.

For the "Titania" Mr. Lough asks 500 guineas; and for the "Puck," 250 guineas. Both are in marble. The "Puck" deserves to find a purchaser; and, but for recent reverses in money matters, would no doubt have been sold when it was exhibited at Mr. Graves's, in Pall-mall.

491. "Hindoo Girl testing the Fate of her Lover." A model. T Earle.

Lalla Rookh was all curiosity, when one of her attendants informed the Princess that it was the usual way in which the friends of those who had gone on a dangerous voyage offered up vows for their safe return. If the lamp sunk immediately, the omen was decisive; but if it went shining down the stream, and continued to burn till entirely out of sight, the return of the beloved object was considered as certain. Lalla Rookh.

Mr. Earle was long an ardent workman in the studio of Sir Francis Chantrey; but he did not catch his love of the poetry of his art in Chantrey's studio. His own sense of the beautiful has been his guide on all occasions, and he has seldom succeeded better than in the "Hindoo Girl," which deserves to be transferred to marble.

493. Bronze statuette of "Ariel directing the Storm." J. Thomas.—By the able sculptor of the statues throughout the whole of the New Houses of Parliament.

496. "L'Allegro." Marble bust. J. Earle.

> Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,
> Nods and becks, and wreathed smiles;
> Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
> And love to live in dimple sleek.—MILTON'S L'Allegro.

Somewhat wanting in Miltonic truthfulness; but who can work up to Milton's "L'Allegro?"

500. "Sabrina." A bust in marble. W. Calder Marshall.—The best piece of sculpture in the whole Exhibition, and somewhat nearer Milton than Mr. Earle's "L'Allegro."

DISCOVERY OF ANCIENT WEAPONS OF WARFARE.—While some labourers were employed a few weeks since in excavating for the foundation of a house at Slaughter Bridge, near Camelford, in Cornwall, they dug up some implements of ancient warfare, consisting of a battle-axe, a spear, and a spur, supposed to have lain buried there since the days of King Arthur. Tradition says that on that spot a sanguinary battle was fought between the troops of Arthur and those opposed to him, and that the nephew of Arthur was killed in the fight. His remains were interred near the spot, and were afterwards removed to Glastonbury. The persons who found the articles named gave them away, selling but little value on them. The spur is now in the possession of Mr. Creeper, of the White Hart Inn, Camelford.

LITERATURE.

EVANGELINE: A TALE OF ACADIE. By H. W. LONGFELLOW. London: David Bogue.

Evangeline is a beautiful story of village life in America. It has, in our estimation, but one fault; it is written in hexameters, whose rhythm—if rhythm it can be called—seems to us utterly irreconcilable with the genius of the English language. Mr. Longfellow has a fine ear for the music of words, and is a poet in the highest sense of the term. All who remember his beautiful lyrics, more especially his "Excelsior," and his "Hymn of Life," will gratefully acknowledge the pleasure derivable from his writings; but, in proportion to the greatness of their appreciation of his excellence as a lyrist, will be their disappointment on reading his hexameters. No poet, writing in the English language, could make a greater mistake than in wedding his thoughts to such a rhythm. Southey's failure, in "The Vision of Judgment," was sufficient to warn all other adventurers from such a waste of their time and genius as the cultivation of this ancient exotic, so utterly unsuited as he proved it to be to our soil and atmosphere. We therefore wonder all the more that a man like Professor Longfellow should not have been deterred by an example so flagrant. Not even the respect we feel for a man of genius who has done good service in the cause of literature, can prevent us from laughing at such a ludicrous attempt at music as the following, which we extract at random from the pages of "Evangeline:"—

Rent like a labouring oar, that toils in the surf of the ocean,
Bent, but not broken, by age was the form of the notary public:
Shocks of yellow hair, like the silken flocs of the maize, hung
Over his shoulders; his forehead was high; and glasses with horn bows
Sat astride on his nose, with a look of wisdom supernal.
Father of twenty children was he, and more than a hundred
Children's children rode on his knee, and heard his great watch tick.

Nor will the following excite any other feeling in the mind of any reader who appreciates the beauty of our ordinary English metres:—

Not far withdrawn from these, by the cypress and box-hive,
Michael, the fiddler was placed, with the gayest of hearts and of waistcoats.
Shadow and light from the leaves alternately played on his snow-white
Hair, as it waved in the wind; and the jolly face of the fiddler
Glowed like a living coal, when the ashes are blown from the embers.

These may be some ears upon which the foregoing, as well as the following extract, may sound melodiously, and in harmony with the genius of the language, but we must confess that ours are not of the number.

Then Evangeline lighted the brazen lamp on the table,
Filled, till it overflowed, the pewter tankard with home-brewed
Nut brown ale that was famed for its strength in the village of Grand Pré;
While from his pockets the notary drew his papers and ink-horn,
Wrote with a steady hand the date and the age of the parties,
Naming the dower of the bride in flocks of sheep and in cattle.

We are aware that a great controversy has arisen upon this subject, and that much has been urged not only in defence but in laudation of English hexameters. We can understand also that the classical precision of many readers—to whom the rhythm of the ancients has become familiar from long use—may dispose them in favour of the gallant attempt to naturalize it amongst the moderns. But that which was musical to the Greeks and Romans is not necessarily musical to us; we doubt even whether if their music, properly so called —their melodies and harmonies—the airs they played upon the harp and the lyre, had come down to us, like their literature, we should be able to understand them, and find in them the same pleasure that we take in the music which has been the growth of our own circumstances, ideas, habits, and education. The music of a Chinaman is not very pleasing to the ears of an Englishman; and the sounds which may give delight to the people of one nation, may utterly fail in communicating the same feeling to the people of another. Even in the following beautiful passage—beautiful from the phraseology, and in the succession of charming pictures which it paints to the mental eye—we are obliged to qualify the admiration we cannot help feeling, by the expression of our regret that the poet has not employed the good old English blank verse—that perfect music, when well written—or any form of Spenserian, heroic, or lyric measure, to convey his meaning:—

And with these words of cheer they arose and continued their journey.
Softly the evening came. The sun from the western horizon
Like a magician extended his golden wand o'er the landscape;
Twinkling vapours arose; and sky and water and forest
Seemed all on fire at the touch, and mingled together.
Hanging between two skies, a cloud with edges of silver,
Floated the boat with its dipping oars, on the motionless water.
Filled was Evangeline's heart with inexpressible sadness,
Touched by the magic spell, the sacred fountains of feeling
Glowed with the light of love, as the skies and waters around her.
Then from a neighbouring thicket the mocking-bird—wildest of singers—
Shook from its throat such floods of delicious music
That the whole air, and the woods, and the waves seemed silent to listen.
Plaintive at first were the tones, and sad; then soaring to madness,
Seemed they to follow or guide the revel of frenzied Bacchantes.
Then single notes were heard, in sorrowful, low lamentation;
Till, having gathered them all, he flung them abroad in derision,
As, when after a storm, a gust through the tree-tops
Shakes down the rattling rain in a crystal shower on the branches.
With such a prelude as this, and hearts that throbbed with emotion,
Slowly they entered the Teche, where it flows through the green Opelousas,
And through the amber air, above the crest of the woodland,
Saw the column of smoke that arose from a neighbouring dwelling;—
Sounds of a horn they heard, and the distant lowing of cattle.

We trust that Professor Longfellow is satisfied with his experiment, and with having done better than any man ever did before him, what no man can ever do well; and that, when he next comes before the public, to solicit their admiration for his poetry, he will take no more liberties with our beautiful language; but be contented with the rhythm of Milton and Shakspeare, if he loves blank verse—with that of Spenser and Byron, if he prefers dignity and rhyme in combination—or with the countless forms of the lyric stanza, of which our best poets, from the days of Shakspeare to those of Moore, Shelley, Campbell, and their living successors, offer him so many brilliant examples.

One word as to the present edition. The publisher has lavished all the resources of art upon it, and produced a true livre de luxe for the poet's admirers. It contains no less than forty-five wood-cuts of the very highest merit and beauty. The rural subjects by Mr. B. Foster are perfect gems, and surpass anything of the kind that has lately come under our notice. The engraving, the typography, and the binding are of the first excellence, and reflect the highest credit upon all concerned in the publication.

LIVES OF THE PRINCESSES OF ENGLAND, FROM THE NORMAN CONQUEST. By MARY ANNE EVERETT GREEN. 2 vols. Colburn.

The popularity of Miss Strickland's "Lives of the Queens of England," has, in all probability, led the publisher to expect for the present work a co-extensive share of success. There is, however, but little in the lives here chronicled to justify such expectation; though it is not unreasonable to suppose a large class of readers to have calculated upon an amount of interest in these memoirs akin to that of the lives of our female Sovereigns. As Mrs. Green states in her Preface, some of these Royal daughters "have graced foreign Courts, and played an important part abroad;" but this very circumstance renders their memoirs of comparatively slender attraction; more especially as they present but little of that domestic character which is a leading charm of female biography.

The volumes before us comprehend but a portion of Mrs. Green's design; for the lives extend but to that of the sixth daughter of Edward I. Of the five daughters of William the Conqueror, the eldest, Cæcilia, dedicated her life to the cloister, and died, Abbess of the Holy Trinity, at Caen. "Many maidens of the noblest houses in Normandy were under her maternal care; for, after the example had been set by William the Conqueror, the Abbey of the Holy Trinity became the favourite resort for those who forsook the allurements of high rank for the seclusion of a monastic life."

Adela, William's youngest daughter, occupies a more prominent place in history than any of her sisters; and her intrepid character and religious zeal have led to many details of her life being preserved with grateful care. After her marriage with Earl Stephen, her benefactions to the Church were very extensive; and, under her pious auspices, the Cathedral of Chartres, which had formerly been an unadorned structure of wood, was built of stone, and in a handsome style of architecture. Her crusading enthusiasm lasted until the infirmities of old age led her from the world to the cloister.

To Gundred, the supposed daughter of the Conqueror, Mrs. Green devotes some ten pages. The interment of her remains in the chapter-house of Lewes is noticed, as is also the discovery of her tomb in Isfield Church, and its removal to St. John's Church, Southover, in 1775. But we are surprised to find no mention whatever of the finding of the bones of Gundred among the other remains of the Priory at Lewes—an event rendered extensively known by its copious illustration in this Journal. (See the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for Nov. 8, 1845.)

To these brief notices succeeds a Memoir of Matilda, daughter of Henry I., extending over a hundred pages—an importance which Mrs. Green thus justifies:—

Matilda, the only daughter of Henry I., and Matilda the Atheling, is the first descendant of our Anglo-Norman Sovereigns, who is, strictly speaking, entitled to the name of an English Princess; and the position which she occupies in the Royalty of England is a peculiar and most important one. Born in England, blending in her veins the Norman blood with that of the race of Saxon Monarchs so long and so justly venerated, she was the foundress of a dynasty which swayed the English sceptre for upwards of three centuries, and under whose energetic rule this country was raised to its highest pitch of martial glory: and although the name of Plantagenet has long since been superseded, yet through the Plantagenet Queen of Henry VII., her direct lineal descendant still graces the throne of these realms, in the person of her present Majesty. In Matilda, too, the right of female succession to the English crown was first distinctly acknowledged—an important point, when it is remembered how many of the Royal Princes could transmit their dominions through their male descendants only. Though it may be argued that she never was the settled and undisputed Sovereign of England, still the point was gained, when, thrice during the lifetime of her father, the assembled barons swore fealty to her as his heiress: and it is to the enterprising ambition of her rival, and still more to her own unyielding haughtiness of character, rather than to any real or even pretended invalidity in her claim, that we must attribute her failure in establishing her title.

At the close of the biography it is noticed, as a singular coincidence—

That no two of the family of Matilda were united in sepulture. Her father, King Henry, was interred in the Abbey of Reading; her mother in that of Westminster; and the billows of the ocean rolled over the unburied bones of her only brother. Her Imperial husband found a proud resting-place among the monuments of his ancestors at Spires, or perchance in the lonely burial-ground of an obscure monastery. Geoffry Plantagenet, the father of her children, was interred in the cathedral of Mons; Geoffry the younger within the city of Nantes; and her youngest son, William, in the cathedral of Rouen. The Empress herself chose the Abbey of Bec as her final resting-place, while the bones of her beloved son, King Henry, repose under a stately monument in the abbey of Fontevrand.

Stephen's eldest daughter, Matilda, was betrothed when a cradled infant of two years old, and died a baby-bride. She was interred beside her brother Baldwin, in the Priory of the Holy Trinity, then called Christ's Church, Aldgate. The memory of her dead children was tenderly cherished by their mother, the Queen, who, in 1148, built and endowed the Church and Hospital of St. Katherine's, near the Tower, "in pure and perpetual alms," to secure the repose of the souls of her infants, Baldwin and Matilda. This hospital and its fine church were taken down in 1825, to make way for the present St. Katherine's Docks; the establishment being rebuilt in the Regent's Park.

Mary, the youngest of Stephen's family, from her infancy was destined by her parents for the cloister: she was sent, when a child, to the nunnery of Stratford, but subsequently removed to Lillechurch, where the Lady Mary was installed prioress. The Queen was a frequent visitor here. The Lady Mary subsequently exchanged the convent of Lille Church for the more illustrious one of Rumsey, in Hampshire, of which she became abbess—not through Royal influence, but by the free choice of her sisters. Mary married Matthew of Flanders, but she subsequently resumed the veil. Earl Matthew re-married; after which, however, he still spoke of "the Countess Mary his wife." She died, after thirteen years in her second seclusion, and left two daughters—Ida and Matilda; the posterity of the latter succeeding to the Earldom of Boulogne.

Of the three daughters of Henry II., Matilda (the second wife of Henry the Lion) died in her thirty-third year.

Eleanora (Henry's second daughter) was neither English born nor English bred, and passed only a few years of her childhood in England. She married Alphonso the Good, King of Castile, who is said to have been much pleased with the little Leonor—though his delight must have been rather that of a boy, amused with the novelty of his position, and happy in the society of an agreeable playmate, than that of a grave Monarch, gratified to find that his matrimonial speculation had turned out so successful. Queen Leonor lived to see her only surviving son a King; and her four married daughters each in due time arose to the regal circlet: "so that of the Princess Eleonora it may truly be said, that she was the daughter, sister, wife, mother, and grandmother of Kings, and the ancestress of the races of mighty Monarchs who, even now, occupy two of the most powerful thrones in Europe."

Henry's youngest daughter, Joanna, passed her childhood principally in Normandy, where the Royal family at that time resided more frequently than in England. She was partly educated at the monastery of Fontevraud; and manifested great reverence for Thomas-à-Becket, even though he died when the Princess was only six years old. At a very early age she married William, King of Sicily, who left her a widow at twenty-four. From her imprisonment by the usurper Tancred she was released by her brother, Richard Cœur de Lion. Fourteen years had elapsed since the brother and sister had parted: "the little babe" had eleven had grown up into a graceful and dignified woman; while the headstrong and reckless Earl of Poicton, not a whit less reckless than before, had become burdened with the weighty cares of Royalty, though in truth the crown never sat heavily upon the helmeted brow of Richard Cœur de Lion." Eleanora accompanied her brother to the Holy Land. On her return to Europe, she married Raimond of Toulouse. She was soon after attacked with heavy sickness: as the hour of death approached, her conscience became alarmed; she was received as a sister and nun of Fontevraud, and died almost immediately after, in her thirty-fourth year. The subsequent history of Raimond, and his protection of the newly-risen sect, the Albigenses, forms a very interesting episode in this portion of the work.

"We have traced," says Mrs. Green, "the splendid destinies of the daughters of the enterprising and ambitious Henry II., all of whom were wooed to occupy the most brilliant positions; but far otherwise was it with the unfortunate Princesses whose fates depended on the policy of King John, or the all but imbecile weakness of his son and successor, Henry III."

Joanna, the first of these Princesses, and the eldest daughter of John by his beautiful wife, Isabella of Angoulême, was betrothed, when a child, to Hugh de Lusignan, the eldest son of the Earl of March, the former suitor of Queen Isabella to her, on the death of John, the two married, notwithstanding the anomalous position he occupied as her intended son-in-law. The letter of Isabella to her young son, King Henry III., announcing her second marriage, and her reasons for substituting herself for her daughter as the bride of the gallant Lusignan, is still preserved in the Tower of London, and is a most curious specimen of diplomatic skill and woman's finesse.

Joanna was married to Alexander II., King of Scotland: she died early, of consumption, and was buried, according to her own request, at the nunnery of Tarente, in Dorsetshire, where a marble tomb and continually burning tapers were set up to her memory.

Isabella, John's second daughter, when scarcely five years old, had her suite of servants; for, in 1219, Henry III. granted one penny per day to Margaret, her nurse, which was to be paid every day by the hands of the Viscount of Hereford. "Paltry as this sum may appear at the present day, yet, if we multiply it by 15, which Sharon Turner, in a recent computation (Hardy's 'Introduction to the Close Rolls'), is the proportion which the money of our time bears to that of the period in question, we shall find that her wages amounted to 8s. 9d. per week, or nearly £23 a year." Mrs. Green adds:—

The attention paid by our Monarchs of the olden time to those who had tended their childhood, brings us back in imagination to the tender simplicity of patriarchal days. King John gave fourpence a day to the nurse of his son Richard, and many grants were made by him to the nurse of his brother, Richard Plantagenet, Earl of Cornwall; and King Henry followed the example, by giving Isabella and then twopence more per day to "our dear nurse Elena," as well as an allowance of fire-wood from the Royal forests. Entries also occur for Isabella's cook, valet, and other servants, several of whom were pensioned off in their later years by her brother.

Isabella was married to the Emperor Frederic II.; though Mrs. Green tells us, as a curious fact which has hitherto escaped observation, that ten years previously negotiations had been made for her marriage with the Emperor's son, Henry, King of Germany. This appears from a letter in the Tower collection, written by the Bishop of Carlisle to Henry III. In 1234 she became an inmate of the Tower of London, which in this reign first became a frequent Royal residence, instead of a mere fortress. The chapel of the White Tower was then used for the Royal household.

Our olden chronicles glow with details of the splendour of the marriage of Isabella with Frederic, who proved faithless and profligate. She died at Naples, much to the grief of King Henry, to judge by the amount of his benefactions in memory of her—affording food to upwards of 101,000 paupers, at a cost, according to the proportional value of money in our day, of £6315.

Of Eleanora, John's third daughter, the memoir is unusually copious: her early marriage to William de Mareshal, Earl of Pembroke, and her subsequent union with Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, are the leading events in her career, by no means an unimportant one. The domestic history of this memoir is likewise very attractive; the pictures of the Earl of Leicester's courtly splendour at Kenilworth are minutely painted: his retainers numbered 140 among his domestic servants only; and a curious picture of the household economy of the period exists in a roll of the Countess Eleanora, which has lately been found in an obscure French monastery, where it had lain for centuries, and has been purchased for the British Museum. "This document, one of the most ancient of the kind now in existence, is written on a roll of parchment about 20 feet in length, and one foot in width, and is still in excellent preservation."

After Kenilworth passed into the hands of the Royalists, Eleanora fell a prey to despondency, and retired to the nunnery of Montargis, where she is stated to have died.

Margaret, Beatrice, and Katherine, the three daughters of Henry III., are next portrayed; their personal history being aided by some interesting pictures of the times, yet too minute for quotation.

The remainder of the work is occupied with the lives of the six daughters of Edward I. Of these, Mary, the youngest, became a nun at Amesbury, in Wiltshire, when seven years old; the chronicle telling us that she was veiled nun by her great-sire, Edward, King of England, at the wish of her grandmother, the Queen Eleanora, and by the assent of the Lady Eleanora, her mother. Her consecration was witnessed by the King and Queen, and the whole of the Royal family, even including the infant Prince Edward, with many of the principal Earls, Barons, Archbishops, Bishops, and Abbots of the realm; thirteen young ladies of noble birth being selected as the companions of Mary. Of the conventual life of the period, this memoir presents several glimpses. She is presumed to have died in the year 1332. "She was at this time," writes Mrs. Green, "in her fifty-fourth year, and was the longest liver, as well as the last survivor, of the family of Edward I. and Eleanora of Castile. She outlived her brother, Edward II., six years, and her sister Margaret, the next to herself in longevity, fourteen years. Mary was interred in the monastery which for forty-eight years had been her principal abode. The hand of Time has been heavy upon that structure; and a picturesque ruin, with its mantle of ivy and wreath of wild flowers, is all that now remains to point out the spot which was at once the abode and the tomb of the nun Princess." Aubrey, by the way, tells us that the last Abbess of Ambresbury was a Kirton who "was 140 years old when she dyed;" she was great-aunt to Mr. Child, Rector of Yatton Keynell, from whom Aubrey had this information; and he adds, "Mr. Child, the eminent banker in Fleet-street, is Baron Child's cozen-german."

Throughout these volumes, there is abundant evidence of laborious research to ensure authenticity; as well as of the care "bestowed upon the verification of names, dates, genealogies, and other points of historic importance." In the second volume there is, perhaps, a superabundance of detail from household expenses, which, notwithstanding their popular interest, are but the properties of historical writing, and should be employed sparingly; and should likewise be accompanied with elucidation, if the object be to enlighten the reader upon the actual life of the period. Of such aid Mrs. Green has availed herself in some instances, especially as regards the comparative value of money; but this illustrative plan has not been carried out so fully as it might advantageously be. Of technical errors there occur a few; such, for example, as the mistaking of Vicecomes, the ancient county sheriff, for Viscount, a title of recent date.

In the succeeding volumes of Mrs. Green's work, it is reasonable to expect that the interest will be increased in proportion to the multiplicity of the illustrative stores which it is a favourite pursuit of the present age to render available to the historian and biographer.

VIEWS OF NATURE; OR, CONTEMPLATIONS ON THE SUBLIME PHENOMENA OF CREATION. With Scientific Illustrations. By ALEXANDER VON HUMBOLDT. Translated from the German by E. C. OTTE and H. G. BOHN. Bohn.

The records of physical science present few parallels to the fact of a philosopher in his eighteenth year calmly sitting down to revise a labour of half a century since; and, by the exercise of a vivid memory through this long interval of years, remodelling his work to meet the demands of the age. Yet such is the sublime picture which Baron Humboldt presents in the volume before us.

The "Views" originated in a series of detached fragments written amidst the noblest objects of Nature—on the ocean—in the forests of the Orinoco, in the savannahs of Venezuela, and in the solitudes of the Peruvian and Mexican mountains. This eclectic mode of treating subjects of Natural History, Humboldt admits to be fraught with great difficulties—in the wonderful luxuriance of Nature presenting an accumulation of separate images, and thus disturbing the harmony and effect of a picture. Yet this want of unity has not interfered with the philosopher's certain object in these essays—to direct the reader's attention to the perpetual influence which physical nature exercises on the moral condition and on the destiny of man. "It is to minds oppressed with care," says Humboldt, "that these pages are especially consecrated. He who has escaped from the stormy waves of life, will joyfully follow me into the depths of the forest—over the boundless steppes and prairies, and to the lofty summits of the Andes."

As the enjoyment of the immediate contemplation of Nature is heightened by an insight into the connexion of the occult forces, Humboldt has subjoined to his "Views" scientific illustrations and researches, nearly all of which have been either enlarged or replaced by new and more comprehensive ones in the edition before us, dated from Berlin, in the spring of last year.

The work opens with an eloquent chapter on "Steppes and Deserts," those treeless wastes and seas of sand, which present phenomena at every turn. It would require more space than we can devote for the purpose to instance the fervid eloquence of the text, or the scientific value of the notes and illustrations; though a few points of popular interest may be selected, for the reader's gratification.

Among the results of Humboldt's long life, not the least gratifying is the confirmation of his views by contemporary observers; as in the case of his opinions on the much-disputed Mer de Sargasse, which the late Major Rennell confirmed by many new observations. The Sargasso Sea of the older writers Humboldt states to consist of two groups of sea-weed, which, with the transverse band uniting them, occupy an area equal to six or seven times that of Germany.

In a note on "Herds of Wild Dogs" occurs the following:—

Von Tschudi makes the singular remark, that on the Cordilleras, at elevations of more than 12,000 feet, delicate breeds of dogs, and the European domestic cat, are exposed to a particular kind of mortal disease. "Innumerable attempts have been made to keep cats as domestic animals in the town of Cerro de Pasco (lying at an elevation of 14,000 feet above the sea's level), but such endeavours have invariably been frustrated, as both cats and dogs have died in convulsions at the end of a few days. The cats, after being attacked by convulsive fits, attempt to climb the walls, but soon fall to the ground exhausted and motionless. I frequently observed instances in Yauli of this chorea-like disease; and it seems to arise from insufficient atmospheric pressure."

A vulgar error respecting the lion in the desert is thus corrected:—

"That lions exist in the desert," says M. Carette, "is a myth popularised by the dreams of artists and poets, and has no foundation but in their imagination. This animal does not quit the mountains, where it finds shelter, food, and drink. When the traveller questions the natives concerning these wild beasts, which Europeans suppose to be their companions in the desert, they reply, with imperturbable sang froid, 'Have you, then, lions in your country which can drink air and eat leaves?' With us, lions require running water and living flesh; and, therefore, they only appear where there are wooded hills and water. We fear only the viper (le fa), and, in humid spots, the innumerable swarms of mosquitoes which infest them."

The following passage on the "Analogies of Language" is striking:—

We know, as yet, too little of the languages of America, entirely to renounce the hope that, amid their many varieties, some idiom may be discovered that has been spoken, with certain modifications, in the interior of South America and Central Asia, or that might at least indicate an ancient affinity. Such a discovery would, undoubtedly, be one of the most brilliant to which the history of the human race can hope to attain! But analogies of language are only deserving of confidence when mere resemblances of sound in the roots are not alone the object of research, but attention is also directed to the organic structure, the grammatical forms, and those elements of language which manifest themselves as the product of the intellectual power of man.

In the chapter on the "Cataracts of the Orinoco" it is related—

There is a legend amongst the Guarake Indians, that the brave Atures, when closely pursued by the cannibal Caribs, took refuge on the rocks of the cataracts—a mournful place of abode, in which this oppressed race perished, together with its language! In the most inaccessible portion of the Raudal, other graves of the same race have been found, instead of living tribes. It is probable that the last descendants of the Atures did not become extinct until a much more recent period. There still lives—and it is a singular fact—an old parrot in Maypures which cannot be understood, because, as the natives assert, it speaks the language of the Atures!

"The sources of the Orinoco have never been visited by any European." Thus wrote Humboldt in the year 1807, and he repeats with equal truth the same statement after an interval of forty-one years; the problem having been only partially solved by Sir Richard Schomburgk.

From an extensive accumulation of Illustrative Notes to the remaining papers we select a few facts:—

The Chinchilla.—The opinion prevalent in Europe, that the beautiful rodent, the Chinchilla, whose soft and glossy fur is so much esteemed, is found in the highest mountain regions of Chili, is an error. The Chinchilla (Lanigera) (Gray) lives only in a mild lower zone, and does not advance further south than the parallel of 35°.

The Humming-bird and the Condor.—The region which may be regarded as the dwelling of the Condor, begins at the elevation of Mount Etna. It embraces atmospheric strata which are from 10,000 feet to 19,000 feet above the level of the sea. Humming-birds were seen by Von Tschudi in Pana, at an elevation of 14,600 feet. There is a pleasure in comparing the largest and the smallest of the feathered inhabitants of the air. The largest among the Condors found in the Cordilleras, near Quito, measure nearly 16 feet across the expanded wings, and the smaller only 3 feet. This size, and the visual angle at which the birds are seen vertically above one's head, afford an idea of the enormous height to which the Condor soars in a clear sky. A visual angle of four minutes, for instance, would give a vertical elevation of 13,750 feet. The cavern (Mackay) of Antisana, opposite the mountain of Chussulongo, and where we measured the birds soaring over the chain of the Andes, lies at an elevation of nearly 16,000 feet above the sea-level. Now, if we add to this height that which the Condor reached most, therefore, be 23,273 feet—a height at which the barometer scarcely stands at 12 inches; but which, however, does not exceed that of the loftiest summits of the Himalayas. It is a remarkable physiological phenomenon that the same bird, which wheels for hours together through these highly rarefied regions, should be able suddenly, as occurred to the author, to descend to the sea-shore, and thus, in the course of a few hours, traverse, as it were, all climates. At heights of 23,000 feet and upwards, the membranous air-sacs of the Condor must undergo a remarkable degree of inflation after being filled in lower regions of the atmosphere. This bird probably raises itself voluntarily to a greater height from the surface of our earth than any other living creature. I use the expression "voluntarily," since small insects and siliceous-shelled infusoria are frequently borne to greater elevations by a rising current of air. It is probable that the Condor flies even higher than the above calculations would appear to show.

The transparency of the mountain air is so great under the Equator, that, in the province of Quito, the white cloak (poncho) of a horseman may be distinguished with the naked eye at a horizontal distance of 89,664 feet, and therefore under an angle of thirteen seconds. At this distance, Humboldt saw his friend Bonpland moving along a black rocky precipice on the volcano of Pichincha.

Of the merits of this translation, and the care taken to adapt it for popular reading, we can scarcely speak too highly. The principal Latin, French, and Spanish quotations are translated; and all the foreign measurements are converted into English. A copious summary of contents and index complete the means of ready reference.

The frontispiece is a view of Chimborazo, from a sketch by Humboldt, printed in colours. the vertical height of this mountain is, according to our author's measurement, 21,422 feet. If we could suppose the pass of St. Gothard, Mount Blanc, or the Righi piled on the summit of the Chimborazo, we should have the elevation which is at present ascribed to the Dhawalagiri, in the Himalaya.

ON THE CAUSES OF THE SUCCESS OF THE ENGLISH REVOLUTION, 1640—1688. By M. GUIZOT. London: Murray.

No man of the position, attainments, and antecedents of M. Guizot can write upon such a subject as the history and philosophy of revolution, without commanding for his work the respectful attention of thinkers and politicians. The very faults of character which unfitted him for playing a successful part in the great drama of contemporary history, the austerity, the obstinate impracticability, the severe judgment of men and things, and the stern unflinching devotion, amid the most conflicting concerns of the busy world, to the theories formed in the quiet and seclusion of the closet, qualify him for passing a cool and impartial judgment upon the past. The living age is not sufficiently pliable for statesmen of his class and temperament. They worship the pure reason, and ignore the passions of their fellow-creatures; but the facts of history, bloodless and impassible as time has made them, yield their more ready obedience. The theorist can deal with them with facility into the forms which he may desire. Thus, whilst as a statesman M. Guizot is great in nothing but in his obstinacy, his errors, and his fall, he is, in every respect, admirable as a historian. His philosophy does not lead him astray when he deals with the dead past. He revives it in the light of his clear and passionless intellect, traces events to their causes with unerring sagacity, and draws the true moral from bygone revolutions. His own sufferings have sharpened his apprehension—he sees the past through the microscope of his personal experience in the present—and, bringing a naturally acute and well-trained mind, and a most laborious, pains-taking, and conscientious industry to bear upon every subject that passes under his review, he presents the result of his investigations in a manner as clear and as convincing as the solution of a mathematical problem. To this praise M. Guizot is fairly entitled. His "Lectures upon European Civilization" are masterpieces of historical philosophy; his "Democracy in France" is no less admirable, and exhaustive of the important question of which it treats. His present work is worthy of his literary fame, and will be read with profit and instruction, not only by the great English public, to whom the facts touched upon are familiar in all their phases, but by the larger public of his own and other European countries, by whom they are still but partially known, or imperfectly understood, and who need, in this hour of change, perplexity, tribulation, and peril, the high lesson that they teach.

The work is not of great extent. It is merely, as its second title sets forth, "a discourse, designed as an introduction to the history of the reign of Charles I.;" but, though introductory, it is complete in itself. M. Guizot presents his subject in the following terms:—

The success by which the English Revolution was crowned has not only been permanent, but has borne a double fruit. Its authors founded Constitutional Monarchy in England, and in America, they descendants founded the Republic of the United States. These great events are now completely known and understood; time, which has given them its sanction, has also shed over them its light. Sixty years ago France entered on the path opened by England, and Europe lately rushed headlong in the same direction. It is my purpose to show what are the causes which have crowned Constitutional Monarchy in England, and Republican Government in the United States, with that solid and lasting success which France and the rest of Europe are still vainly pursuing. Through those mysterious trials and revolutionary struggles which, according as they are well or ill passed through, elevate or pervert a nation for ages.

It was in the name of Religion and liberty of conscience that the conflict which began in the sixteenth century—and, though occasionally suspended, has been constantly renewed—was undertaken. The tempest which still agitates the world, or hurries it along in an impetuous torrent, gathered in the inmost recesses of men's minds, and burst over the Church before it reached the State.

It has been said that Protestantism was a political rather than a religious revolution—an insurrection of worldly interests against the established order of the Church, rather than a movement of the conscience concerning the eternal interests of man. This judgment has been superficially formed and lightly pronounced; and the error on which it rests has led the powers, whether spiritual or temporal, who have adopted it, into a line of conduct fatal to their own security. Intent on repressing the revolutionary element of Protestantism, they have overlooked or misunderstood its religious element. The spirit of revolt is doubtless very powerful, but not powerful enough to accomplish, alone and unaided, things of such magnitude. It was not merely to shake off a yoke, it was also to secure the free profession and practice of a faith, that the Reformers of the sixteenth century rose up against authority, and persevered in the conflict. This is demonstrated by a discourse and by contestable fact. The two most Protestant countries of Europe, England and Holland, are still the countries in which the Christian faith has the greatest vital energy and power. It betrays a strange ignorance of human nature to believe that religious zeal would have remained at such a pitch of elevation, after the successful termination of the revolt, if religion had not been the mainspring of the whole movement.

The revolution which took place in Germany, in the sixteenth century, was religious and not political; that in France, in the eighteenth, was political and not religious. It was the peculiar felicity of England in the seventeenth century, that the spirit of religious faith and the spirit of political liberty reigned together, and that also entered upon the two revolutions at the same time. All the great passions of the Puritan soul were thus excited and brought into action, while some of the most powerful restraints by which they are controlled remained unbroken; and the hopes and aspirations of eternity remained to console and tranquillise those whose earthly hopes and ambitions had suffered shipwreck.

And what, the reader will ask, were in M. Guizot's opinion the causes of the success of the English Revolution? His discourse is one long reply to the question; but he sums it up himself in a few sentences, at the conclusion of his work:—

England (he says) endured much, and struggled long, to avoid a second revolution; nor did she resign herself to it till she saw no other way of saving her rights, her honour, and her faith. It is the glory of the Revolution of 1688, and the main cause of its success, that it was an act more defensive and of necessary defence. Whilst this revolution was defensive in principle, it aimed at precise and limited objects. In great political and social convulsions, a few of boundless and impious ambition sometimes seize upon society: men think themselves entitled to lay hands upon everything, and to remodel the world at their will. These vague and presumptuous schemes of human creatures treating the great and complex system in which their place is marked out as if it were a chaos, and striving to exalt themselves into creators, are as impotent as they are insane: the utmost that they can do is to throw all that they touch into the confusion of their own delirious dreams. England did not fall into this wild error. Instead of aspiring to alter the foundation of society and the destinies of mankind, she asserted and maintained her religion and her positive laws and rights, and did not carry her claims, or even her desires, beyond the limits which they prescribed. With a singular mixture of magnanimity and discretion, she accomplished a revolution which gave to the country a new head and new guarantees, but which stopped short with the attainment of those objects. This great change was not brought about by popular risings, but by political parties, organized long before the revolution, with a view to the settlement of a regular Government, and not in a revolutionary spirit. Neither the Tory party nor that of the Whigs (spite of the insurrectionary elements which mingled in it) had been formed for the purpose of overthrowing established institutions. They were parties occupied with constitutional politics, not with conspiracy and revolt. Although they were in the most important circumstances to change the government of their country, the design was foreign to their character and principles, and they returned with little effort to those habits of order and obedience which they had abandoned for a moment, not from taste or laxity, but from necessity. Nor was the merit or the burden of the revolution limited to either of the great parties which had been so long opposed in opinion. They brought it about in concert, and by mutual concessions. It was imposed on both by a common necessity, and they won, at no distance, a victory over a defeat. Though each had its approvers with widely-different opinions, both saw it to be inevitable, and shared its accomplishment

M. Guizot is right. The English people, when they made a revolution, knew what they wanted. They acted with their eyes open, and with a clear understanding, both of their actual position, and of the changes which a revolution would operate. It is with no wish to disparage the French and their revolutions, that we would point out, in fewer words than M. Guizot has employed—but in the same spirit, and with the same meaning—that the three great revolutions of the French have failed, because the French did not know what they wanted, and because they entered upon the boundless and stormy ocean of change, without any clear idea whether there was land in it or not. Experience, however, will be their teacher. They have learned something from their past misery; and they, as well as other continental nations, will discover in due time, that constructive, not destructive, must be the ground and object of communities that overthrow their rulers. The French, as yet, have shown no aptitude for the former; and in their blind fury have destroyed, not simply their existing institutions, but the very materials for raising up new ones. M. Guizot reads this lesson to his countrymen, not obtrusively or pretentiously, but quietly and forcibly, in almost every page of his work; and in so doing acts the part of a public benefactor. France has yet much to learn from the History of England; and M. Guizot, the historian and philosopher, may, in his literary retirement, make some amends to his country for his errors as a statesman—errors which, if they did not actually cause, most indubitably precipitated a revolution—by warning the existing generation of Frenchmen of the rocks and shoals in the dangerous navigation on which they have entered. We regret we have not space for many further extracts from this interesting work, more especially for the brilliant sketches of the characters of Charles I., Charles II., James II., and William III.; and for the masterly portraits of Oliver Cromwell, and the sturdy Puritans and Republicans of that remarkable era. There is one quotation, however, which we cannot refrain from making. It is the character of Lord Clarendon, the statesman and historian, drawn by the hand of a master. Substitute the name of Guizot for that of Clarendon, and the portrait will be no less striking, but more marvellously true:—

Their leader was Clarendon, a man of firm, upright, and penetrating mind; a sincere friend of legal and moral order; a courageous defender of the constitution of his country, and of the rights of the throne; full of respect for her rights, whether written or traditional, popular or Monarchical. But he carried his hatred of the revolution to such a pitch, that he regarded everything new with suspicion and alarm. Of a prune mistrust, he was haughty rather than high-minded; he was deficient in largeness of heart, and in warmth and generosity of heart: he was ostentatious in the display of his greatness, and pedantically rigid in the use of his power. Towards the King, who regarded him with great confidence, and with an affection mingled with some degree of attachment, he was by turns austere and humble; passing from remonstrance to complaisance; speaking the truth with the courage and firmness of an honest man, but alarmed at the effect of it; and seeking to conceal from himself that he not choosing to receive it from the Parliament. He tried to compel the Crown to respect the ancient laws of the country, and to keep the Commons within the humble limits which the older constitution had assigned to them, and he flattered himself that the Royal prerogative might be restrained within the bounds of legality, without rendering itself responsible to Parliament. He failed in this chimerical enterprise; and seeking to govern neither absolutely nor freely in a country just emerging from a popular revolution, and he fell, after seven years of ascendancy, hated by the Commons for his Monarchical arrogance, by the Dissenters for his High-Church intolerance, and by the Court for his contemptuous austerity. He was pursued by the blind anger of the people, who reproached him with every public evil as well as with every abuse of power, and was shamefully sacrificed by the King, who now regarded him only as an inconvenient censor, and a minister dangerous to his own popularity.

Every page affords some striking remark, often terse and epigrammatic, as often profound and eloquent, and almost always philosophic and true. We trust it will not be long before M. Guizot again appears in the arena with another offering of his genius, to elevate the character of our historical literature, and make the present age, if not posterity, his debtor for much sound wisdom; and that no possible turn of the revolutionary wheel will ever convert so admirable a writer, so clear a thinker, so right-minded a philosopher, into a politician and statesman. M. Guizot belongs to literature. In that field he acquired his first renown; within its boundaries he commits no blunders: long may he cultivate it!

SCENES OF THE CIVIL WAR IN HUNGARY IN 1848 AND 1849; with the Personal Adventures of an Austrian Officer in the Army of the Ban of Croatia. Shoberl.

This amusing as well as instructive volume is stated to be a translation of a series of letters, originally published in German, and hurriedly penned by an Austrian officer, while under active duty with his regiment. Any record of the events of the late war in Hungary, written while they are fresh upon the memory, must afford many exciting scenes and thrilling incidents. In this respect the letters before us will not be found wanting. Hasty notes of personal adventures, they abound with scenes of unfailing interest, which, however lamentable in their result, are inseparable from the strife of armed forces, and the fruitful source of additional horrors, when, as in this case, they are the result of civil war. Many, if not all these letters were written in pencil at such hurried moments as could be snatched from the bivouac or the battle-field; and their principal merit will be found in the vivid descriptions of scenes and incidents, in most of which the writer was himself engaged. The book, taken in this spirit, will be found deeply interesting. The Austrian and the Hungarian forces are truthfully as well as ably described; and although the duty of the writer to the Imperial cause, in which he was serving as an Austrian officer, naturally leads him to form strong opinions as to the malicious character of the war upon the part of the Magyars, he has wisely avoided any very decided expression of his views upon that subject; whilst, as a generous and single-minded soldier, he gives a fair and straightforward account of the spirited conduct of his opponents, and their indomitable energy and patriotism. Crossing swords with many of his former friends and companions, and almost constantly with Hungarian Hussars—who, previous to their desertion from the Imperial cause, had been in his own regiment—seems to have had more effect upon this gallant soldier than the severity of the campaign, or the dangers and difficulties with which he was surrounded. We quote two descriptive passages.

The following is the author's picture of himself after some months of the campaign:—

I could not forbear laughing when I first saw my figure again in the glass. A long beard covered chin, cheeks, and lips, forming not the most graceful curls; the hair of the head wretchedly cut by a hussar; the forehead bound with a black handkerchief, on account of a slight cut which I had received from a hussar a few days before; my white cloak covered with spots, gray, black, brown, and yellow, marbled with streaks of blood, in holes from sword cuts, balls, and firebrands of the bivouac; the tschako cut through and bent; instead of the neat tschausen (hussar boots), clumsy fishermen's boots over the trowsers, and the black and yellow sash stripped of all its fringe; my sword, from the many strokes that it has dealt and parried, is full of notches and covered with rusty blood-stains.

A bivouac is thus cleverly described:—

Shoving my saddle under my head, wrapping myself in a woollen coverlet, I lay down by the watch-fire to contemplate the scene about me. Above, the dark wintry firmament, with its sparkling stars, reddened in the distance by the glare of a conflagration, such as we saw almost every day—for Kossuth's bands burned in their retreat many dwellings, and even villages inhabited by Germans and Honves—in a wide circle around me, our horses completely covered with their warm clothes, either stretched at full length, or feeding out of their nose-bags, part of them of course saddled and bridled, ready at the first signal to bear their riders against the enemy. Near me, tinged by the bright burning fire, the dancing hussars, in their white cloaks—all hale fellows—with dark, expressive countenances, black eyes, and the lower part of the face covered with a thick black beard. And to all this, the tones of the gipsy music, which was not scarce—and the merry singing, the snapping, the clattering of my men. At a distance was heard occasionally the cry of our videttes; and here and there, from the recesses of the woods, the howling of wolves, which are still numerous between Hatfegy and Hunyad. About midnight my order put an end to the dancing—the men could not be allowed to waste their strength to no purpose: and all whose duty did not keep them waking were soon stretched by the watch-fire, sleeping the sound sleep of the weary, which the soldier always does on the field.

THE HEIRESS IN HER MINORITY; OR, THE PROGRESS OF CHARACTER. By the Author of "Bertha's Journal." 2 vols. Murray.

All who remember how quietly the pleasant little "Journal" of Bertha won its way to the favour of those who prefer books for the young, will expect a like store in these two volumes of some thousand pages; filled to overflowing with sketches of interesting objects and picturesque scenery, narratives of events and circumstances worth remembering, entertaining explanations of striking phenomena of nature and curious works of art, brief discussions upon Scriptural passages, anecdotes of remarkable persons, precepts in the form of pleasantry, and graver essays at origins and antiquities and philological puzzles; all which give the book the character of a little cyclopædia, just fitted to gratify the curiosity of intelligent inquirers. The moral of the book is to show how self-control may be gradually developed in a young and ardent mind, when brought under the influence of high and noble motives. The scene is laid in the west of Ireland; the form of the work is conversational, and the characters are purely imaginary. This kind of framework has of late years become somewhat out of favour: in skilful hands it is, however, the most attractive form of communicating information to the young. We can only spare room for one specimen of the manner of the book. Evelyn, who is the "heiress in her minority," and Mrs. Manvers, her friend and neighbour, are walking in the neighbourhood of Youghal, when the conversation turns upon the introduction of the potato into Ireland, which Mrs. Manvers regards as a fortunate circumstance for the country.

"But," replied Evelyn, "I have heard Mr. Stanley and others say that its being brought to Ireland was unfortunate, as it encourages laziness."

"That also, I believe, is easily met," said Mrs. Manvers, "but I cannot agree to it. I have seen so many instances of the poor man enjoying the comfort of his store of potatoes, when perhaps he could not have managed to cultivate enough at any other time to support his family, that I shall still rejoice in their possession of that most excellent vegetable. Many such landholders have endeavoured to add to the comforts of the people by assisting them to build better houses, and to cultivate useful grass, and whenever I hear an instance of such exertion I respect them for it: but for my part I shall always consider Sir Walter Raleigh, 'the Shepherd of the Ocean, as Spenser quaintly calls him, to have been one of our benefactors: and the little garden at Youghal, where the first potato grew in Ireland, seems to me a sacred spot that should be shown to my countrymen."

"You have been at Youghal, then, and have seen the myrtles of which I have heard?"

"Yes, both in the garden and against Sir Walter's ancient house, which is a greater curiosity than the myrtles, for they grow luxuriantly near the sea in various parts of Ireland, or even than the bay trees at the entrance into the quay, whose size of them form an archway under which a carriage may pass."

"But the house you say is a curiosity?"

"Yes—at least to those who have not seen many very old houses. I was astonished at the thickness of the walls, especially the partition wall between the staircase and kitchen, which is nine feet thick. The stairs, too, are remarkably narrow, for the house had in fact been in ancient times part of a friary, which Sir Walter made very few alterations in it. There is, I am told, some remarkable oak carving over the fireplace of nearly the same date, but unfortunately for me, when I was there, the daughter of the resident possessor was ill, and we could not be admitted beyond the parlour, which is a long low room with a bow window, nearly the same size now, we were told, as when Sir Walter resided there, probably the happiest, at least the most peaceful, part of his life, when far from all the torments and excitements of ambition and rivalry, he could there he had become the object of the injustice of party spirit and the malevolence of his enemies."

"I must read his history again," said Evelyn.

"Then I would recommend you to read Mr. Moore's life of him," said Mrs. Manvers. "It is excessively interesting; and the character of the times is well depicted, I think."

The sight of a swarm of bees during the ladies' walk, suggests a variety of anecdotes of these wonderful insects; when Mrs. Manvers relates how, in Cachmere, where honey forms an important part of rural economy, the farmers usually establish their bees in their own dwellings-houses, and in a very peculiar manner, so that even as many as ten hives have been known to be in one house.

Then succeeds a chapter of family history, a walk to a corn-field, and to a school-house in progress; and next, a visit to the Widow Green. A visit to Lady Crowsdale, and the Guayana museum of her son, a young traveller, fills a chapter very advantageously. This is followed by a chapter on Bible history, appropriate for Sunday reading. We must not, however, attempt further enumeration: the "chivalry" of the past, and the "emigration" of the present, is too wide a range for us to scan; and the above rapid glance at the contents of this home treasury will suffice to recommend it to the attention of readers of every growth.

SOCIALISM UNMASKED: a plain Lecture, from the French of CHARLES GOURARD. Parker.

In every civilised society, and more even in France than in England, there are found mingled with its happier and more prosperous portions vast masses of poverty and wretchedness. Something of the kind has ever been, and has in all ages brought forth lamentations and stimulated exertions. Such a condition seems the lot of humanity, and probably serves the purpose of arousing kindly sympathies and urging on continual improvement. There is always found, however, a great many ambitious men, political knaves, charlatan demagogues and intriguers, who endeavour to turn to their own profit the wretchedness of one portion of our species, as well as a great number of honest enthusiasts, who, without adequate knowledge, devise and try to enforce plans to improve it. While we carefully discriminate between the motives of these classes, approving those of the latter and condemning those of the former, we must be sensible that both have what is called Socialism for their object, and we must not allow ourselves to be led away from real improvement by their usurpation of the name. Socialism, properly understood, in the sense which many good and great men attach to the word, is perfect society. It is the full and honest performance of the duty of every one man to every other. It is a short name for all the mutual services that men must and do perform for each other to live and prosper together. It is one term for all the social virtues. Genuine Socialism needs no unmasking, for it is no sham and no hypocrisy. But certain schemers have pretended they know how to make society perfect—that Nature has by some unaccountable freak, though she has determined the consequences of every action, forgotten to prescribe the duties and determine the rights of individuals, and they undertake to prescribe them. It is some of these presumptuous, ambitious, political knaves whom M. Gourard unmasks; it is the men who call themselves Socialists exclusively—as if we were not all of necessity Socialists—that he exposes; and he does not take from us that idea or hope of social improvement, which all good and great men entertain.

He sews, for example, the folly and impiety of M. Proudhon, who says "God is evil; God wishes to withdraw himself (Dieu retire-toi)"—a terrible kind of blasphemy, considering that in God, who is everywhere, "we live and move and have our being;" only to be discriminated from utter madness, by knowing that in France, and some other countries, the name of the Deity has long been taken in vain, and that the God M. Proudhon bids to withdraw is the imaginary being whom certain men have made, after their own hearts, for their own selfish purposes. So his palpable contradiction, or, rather, his nonsensical assertion, "that property is robbery," which is like saying that a square is round, assumes only title property which is extorted from the French by taxation and law. The stern logic of M. Proudhon, and his bitter sarcasms, are all based on the utterly false assumptions or principles of other men, to which he and they alike give the sacred names of God and property.

M. Gouraud, in like manner, unmasks the Phalansterists, who, in complete opposition to the fact that the two sexes are born in about equal numbers, and in opposition to all our feelings, propose "polygamy as the most precious germ of family union." He unmasks, too, the Socialist clubs of Paris, headed by Barbès and Blanqui, who propose, as the means of helping society, to establish a Committee of Safety with unbounded power—that is, a bloody despotism. He unmasks also those foolish men who, like Louis Blanc, would organize labour, not seeing that labour is now organized in every part of society, dovetailing one operation into another, in China, in the United States, and in England, in a marvellous manner far surpassing human contrivance, and would give the idle and the blundering, in complete contradiction to the natural laws of society, an equal reward with the industrious and the skilful. So M. Gouraud exposes the foolishness or the knavery of many of the men, who, in these latter times, particularly in France, have taken advantage of the great distress of the people there to propound nostrums of their own, and have not hesitated in the madness of ambition to propose to carry them by force into effect, to the terror and almost ruin of society. Well does he say of the schemes of such men who have written Socialism on their banner, that the "very name is a lie." For a plain, short, and forcible exposure of their absurdities, M. Gouraud deserves public approbation; but we must not be diverted from the steady pursuit of improvement, by the follies of the ignorant enthusiasts, or the wickedness of the political knaves, who see in the miseries of many of our fellow-creatures only the means of advancing their own foolish or sordid ends.

THE JUVENILE CALENDAR; OR, ZODIAC OF FLOWERS. A Gift-Book. By MRS. T. K. HERVEY. Hall, Virtue, and Co.

This is an elegant book for children, in which a higher object is achieved than is sought to be effected by works of this class. First, we have twelve illustrations of the months from the poetic pencil of Mr. Richard Doyle; appended to each of which is a little fairy tale, with its legend and moral from the face of Nature during the month. Accompanying these twelve fancies are notes on the natural history of the month, with a list of flowers and herbs, yet so few as not to overburthen the memory of the young reader. There is a playful fancy throughout the illustrations which is very charming; whilst the legends are in the true poetic spirit by which Nature is distinguished in each month of the year. Yet, there is a tasteful simplicity which must successfully woo the youthful heart to its delights, whilst it wins the older one with recreation from graver pursuits. It is no easy task to combine in the same page attraction for young and old; yet, in the volume before us, we find it gracefully accomplished.

DOD'S PEERAGE, BARONETAGE, AND KNIGHTAGE FOR 1850. Whittaker and Co.

The return of the parliamentary season has brought with it a new edition of this well-known standard work, which contains several additions and improvements. Amongst these we may mention the additional notices rendered necessary by the large number of individuals who have been added to the several ranks of the aristocracy; the many translations that have taken place amongst the Bishops, and the Judges who have resigned and been replaced, &c., since the publication of the last edition. The article on Precedence, also, has been much augmented and improved, and additional particulars have been obtained respecting many individuals who have been hitherto briefly noticed: the latest facts have been recorded respecting every Peer, every Peeress (including the Dowager Peeresses who derive their titles from extinct families), every Bishop, English, Irish, Scottish, and Colonial; every Lord of the Court of Session; every Baronet of England, Ireland, and Scotland; every member of the Privy Council of Great Britain and of Ireland, every Knight of the Bath, every Knight of St. Michael and St. George, every Knight Bachelor of Great Britain and of Ireland, and every person who by courtesy bears the prefix of Lord, Lady, or Honourable.

Altogether, it is a very perfect compendium of the varied details of the subject on which it treats; and, without interfering with larger works of greater pretension of the same kind, it forms quite a handbook of useful knowledge on matters pertaining to the aristocracy and gentry of the country.

DOD'S PARLIAMENTARY COMPANION FOR 1850. Whittaker and Co. This excellent little manual, in its present new edition, enters the eighteenth year of its useful existence, and the extent of alterations caused by the lapse of a year has rendered such a complete revision of the whole work necessary, that the present edition must be considered as a new publication, though its continued accuracy will, it is hoped, still entitle it to the character of an old favourite.

Among the features of the new edition are these:—That part of the volume entitled Constituency has undergone a more minute revision than any other portion of the work, and now exhibits the number of registered electors and £10 householders entitled to vote according to the latest Parliamentary returns. Under the head of Parliamentary Terms will be found an account of those alterations in the conduct of Parliamentary proceedings which were effected in the course of last Session. Eighteen members wholly new to Parliament, or not included in the previous edition, have been elected, and a corresponding number have retired from Parliament, or have died; and the various other changes of the year have been carefully and ably noticed.

WHO'S WHO IN 1850? Baily Brothers.

THIS is a kind of little "Red-book," and analysis of our bulky works on the Peerage. It contains: Lists of the Royal Family and Household; Ministers and Officers of State; Members of the House of Parliament; the Nobility of the United Kingdom: their title, rank, age, family-name, and heir; lists of the Judges; the Baronetage and Knightage; Naval and Military Officers; Ecclesiastical Dignitaries; Civic Authorities; Commercial Lists, &c. This little book will be found an almirable companion to the library-table, for the leading information it presents within the least possible compass.

MUSICAL REVIEW.

SONGS OF THE HUNGARIAN VOCALISTS, WITH THE ORIGINAL WORDS. The English Version by G. LINLEY, Esq. Cramer, Beale, and Co.

AN elegant volume has been got up in a very superior style, containing five songs, two duets, and six glees, of sterling original and national music, brought within the range of ordinary voices for the drawing-room. Paganini, on being asked by the noblemen at the Catch Club his opinion of our English glees and singing, replied, that he greatly admired the music, but found fault with the tameness of the execution. The Hungarian Vocalists whose débuts at the Musical Union were noticed in the columns of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS last season—astashed by their marked and charming contrasts of light and shade; and their rich, powerful voices, in the more vigorous passages, gradually modified into a mere whisper—their crescendo and sforzando—gave a charm to their vocalisation that never palled.

The Song No. 1, "My Bosom's Grief," a delicious strain, worthy of Schubert, is beautifully pathetic; it is also published, as we remember hearing it, as a glee, with four-part harmony sustained by two tenors and two basses on the monosyllable "Ah!"—an excellent solfeggio exercise. No. 2, "Hush'd in death the Minstrel lies," is a known and admired melody, is adapted to words appropriate to the occasion when it was sung by the choirs at the funeral of its lamented composer, Mendelssohn. Mr. Linley has well executed his task, in the expression of which "millions, indeed, now sympathize with the English poet." No. 3, "The Moon so stilly calm," is descriptive and expressive—it is by Braun: the Hungarians produced a thrilling effect in the dissonance at its close. No. 5, by Weber, "Lovely Styrian land," was another popular piece, and will remain so, both as a contralto song and a quartet. The two duets No. 6 and 7 are the wild lays of the Carpathian shepherds—national Hungarian tunes—quaint, original, and expressive. Perhaps the most soul-stirring composition of the selection is the "Life and Song," by Storch, for two tenors and two basses. The singing clubs will soon render this spirited lay popular—it was the chanson de bataille of the Hungarians. We may add, that the pianoforte arrangement has been nicely done, and that there are admirable lithographed likenesses of the ten vocalists, drawn on stone by Mr. E. Grimstone.

COCKS' MUSICAL ALMANACK FOR 1850. Cocks and Co.

As the only Almanack in existence for musical purposes, the publication is of infinite value, and ought to be in the hands of every professor and amateur. The historic dates relative to the distinguished composers and singers, the list of musical societies, the anecdotes and biographies of musicians, are most useful for easy and quick reference. The work, however, is susceptible of great improvement; and the omission of some glaring puffery in a future year would be advisable.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

GREECE.

Lord STANLEY inquired whether the accounts that appeared in the newspapers relative to our hostile proceedings in Greece were correct.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE replied that the accounts in the newspapers were substantially correct. But no demand had been made by the British Government that was not strictly founded in justice. The Greek Government had been forcibly required to make compensation, and had so repeatedly delayed doing so, and had at last refused to give any redress. The Government had no objection to produce all the papers, from which their Lordships would see that the Government had taken no step towards Greece that they were not morally and legally justified in taking.

The Earl of ABERDEEN expressed his dissatisfaction at this occurrence, especially with the demand for the restoration of the two islands.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE explained that the question about the islands of Sapienza and Cervi were not mixed up with the demands for compensation for the personal injuries suffered by British subjects and Jonians.

After a few observations from Lord BROUGHAM and Lord STANLEY, the subject —which was treated more at large in the Commons—dropped.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE laid on the table a Bill for the reconstitution of the Ecclesiastical Commission, which was read a first time.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE POOR-LAW AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS.

Mr. DISRAELI gave notice that, on the first order day, he should move that the House resolve itself into a committee of the whole House to take into consideration the propriety of making such a revision of the law for the relief of the poor as may mitigate the distress of the agricultural classes.

BORNEAN PIRATES.

To questions from Mr. Hume, Lord J. Russell replied that he had no objection to lay on the table all the information the Government had relative to the operations for the suppression of piracy against the natives of Borneo during the last year; nor to the production of correspondence between the Governor of Malta and the Government respecting the Italian refugees; nor to the production of correspondence relative to the affairs of Cephalonia.

To a question from Mr. EWART, Mr. GREENE stated that, though it would be possible to have the new chamber for the House of Commons ready by Easter, it would not be possible to have the necessary refreshment and other rooms—the indispensable adjuncts to the chamber—fully prepared before the beginning of the next session of Parliament.

OUR RELATIONS WITH GREECE AND OTHER FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

In answer to Mr. Gibson, Lord PALMERSTON related the course of events that had taken place at Athens. Mr. Wyse, our Minister at the Greek Court, had demanded compensation for wrongs done to the British and Ionian subjects, whose claims were of long standing; the demand not having been satisfactorily answered, Mr. Wyse had gone on board Admiral Parker's ship; there the account stopped. He (Lord Palmerston) had no objection to lay on the table papers showing the whole transaction, should any hon. member ask for their production.

Mr. DISRAELI remarked that the noble Foreign Secretary's answer reminded him that the assurances given in the Speech from the Throne were premature. Those assurances, with respect to foreign relations, were, during the last two years, more meagre and unsatisfactory than usual. It was customary for the Sovereign to inform the Parliament that she had received from foreign powers assurances of friendly dispositions. But the language used this year only amounted to this—that we were not at war. He (Mr. Disraeli) wished to be informed if diplomatic relations had as yet been renewed with the Court of Madrid. He desired also to know if there was any prospect or having an Ambassador from Vienna sent to reside in London. With respect to the dispute between the Porte and the two Imperial Governments, the paragraphs of the Royal Speech were very obscurely worded: it appeared from their context that amicable arrangements had been completed first, and that then we intervened, when our interference was no longer required. He desired to know, likewise, if the Danish question had been yet settled. During two years the noble Foreign Secretary had held out the hope of this settlement, but it seemed as far off as ever.

Lord PALMERSTON replied that the grievances for which redress had been demanded from the Greek Government, were the wrongs done to Mr. Finlay and Mr. Pacifico, and one or two Ionian subjects. The islands of Sapienza and Cervi were by treaty recognised parts of the Ionian islands, and there could be no doubt about them. With respect to Spain, diplomatic relations were not renewed, nor had any arrangement been made up to the present moment for so doing. With respect to Austria, there was no Ambassador now at our Court; but, as an indication of our most friendly sentiments towards that empire, we continued our Ambassador at Vienna. Should the Austrian Government resolve to discontinue their Ambassador at the Court of St. James's, or of course we should discontinue at Vienna an officer of higher rank than he who should be accredited to us. With respect to Denmark, there was a great many interests and wills complicated in the question relative to it, and he could not present to say that much progress had been made towards a final settlement; but the several parties seemed now seriously inclined towards a settlement, and therefore there was ground to hope for a successful termination of the dispute. As to the late misunderstanding between the Courts and the two great Constitutional powers, good offices of her Majesty's Government had accompanied the explanations which had proved so mutually satisfactory.

In answer to a question from Mr. ANSTEY, Lord PALMERSTON replied that he had reason to believe the Russian Government entertained none but friendly feelings towards the Turkish Government.

Sir R. INGLIS desired to be informed if our officers in Greece had, in the late transactions, acted with the concurrence of the Governments of Russia and France.

Lord PALMERSTON replied that, in cases of seeking compensation for individual grievances, it was not usual to make application to other powers. Mr. Finlay and Mr. Pacifico were British subjects.

The matter here dropped.

RAILWAY AUDIT.

Mr. LABOUCHERE, in reply to a question, stated that he desired to see the question of Railway Audit taken up by railway companies themselves. In his opinion, a measure would come from them better than from the Government. He would, therefore, wait to see what the railway companies would propose.

THE REPORT ON THE ADDRESS.

On bringing up the report on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, a short discussion on the present condition of the agricultural interest ensued; at the close of which, the report of the Address was then received, which was ordered to be presented to her Majesty on Tuesday.

Adjourned at a quarter to one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

Lord BROUGHAM remonstrated strongly with the Government on the severe treatment of Lieutenant Graham and Mr. Elliott since the late court-martial.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE promised to inquire the particulars from the First Lord of the Admiralty.

CLERGY PROCEEDINGS BILL.

The Bishop of LONDON re-introduced his Clergy Proceedings Bill, the same in its provisions as that of last year, with the addition of a clause providing for appeals in cases of heresy and false doctrine. The right rev. prelate said, he proposed by the new clause in his bill to establish a court of appeal, to be composed of the Bishops, and then to the Archbishops, in cases of heresy and false doctrine, in lieu of that at present to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

The Archbishop of CANTERBURY approved of the plan of the court of appeal suggested by the right rev. prelate, and hoped the bill would pass into law.

Lord BROUGHAM likewise approved of the proposal.

The Lord CHANCELLOR proposed to give full attention to the subject.

The bill was read a first time.

Lord CAMPBELL laid on the table a Bill for amending the Marriage Law of Scotland.

After a few remarks from the Earl of ABERDEEN and Lord BROUGHAM, it was read a first time.

Lord MONTEAGLE moved for railway returns, and pressed on the attention of their Lordships the necessity of an independent and efficient audit of railway accounts. He suggested that in future no railway bill should be read a second time unless a full statement of its financial condition up to the most recent period should be previously laid on the table.

After a few words from Earl Granville, Earl Fitzwilliam, the Duke of Richmond, and Lord Brougham, the returns were ordered.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HORSMAN submitted to the House a resolution—"That a committee of this House, to which was entrusted an inquiry into the composition and management of the Ecclesiastical Commission, having recommended the appointment of three paid commissioners for the management of the property under the commission, it is expedient that effect be given to that recommendation." In support of his motion, the hon. member gave a brief history of the Ecclesiastical Commission, and censured in unmeasured terms the mismanagement of the affairs entrusted to them. He stated, amongst other accusations, that, although the commission was composed of the highest dignitaries of the Church, all the responsibility was cast upon the secretary, who had received, between the years 1836 and 1845, sums of money amounting to above a million sterling, all of which he had passed, without control or audit, to his own banker, and dealt with at his own pleasure. It was by an accident that attention was called to this extraordinary state of things. A motion having been made in Parliament for a return of the names of all persons who were shareholders in railway companies for amounts over £2000, the secretary of the Ecclesiastical Commission was returned as a subscriber to the extent of £850,000. This fact led to inquiry, and it was found that the commission was bankrupt, and that the secretary had run away with all the money he could secure. A committee was subsequently appointed, and, although its members were selected with the concurrence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, they came to the unanimous resolution that the management of the commission was indefensible; and they recommended the appointment of three paid commissioners to superintend the management of the property of the commission. In accordance with the recommendation of this committee, he asked the House to agree to his motion.

Sir G. GREY admitted that the composition of the Ecclesiastical Commission was defective, in so far as it consisted of a body too large, and in which the responsibility was too divided. There was, without doubt, a want of regular and systematic attention to business, and the management was left too much to the secretary: therefore, he concurred in the recommendation of the committee that the constitution of the commission required amendment. A bill had been introduced in the other House, which proposed the appointment of two paid commissioners, instead of three, as recommended by the committee. But the hon. gentleman asked the House to anticipate the discussion that would more properly be taken when the bill came regularly before them in committee. If the objection to the bill was that the paid commissioners were not three, he might propose an amendment in accordance with his opinion. But it was an unprecedented and unparliamentary course for the House to fetter its discretion with respect to a bill before the other House of Parliament; therefore he should resist the motion. The right hon. gentleman rebuked Mr. Horsman for his very strong language, and, in concluding his speech, referred to Mr. Horsman's letter to his constituents, in which he charged him (Sir G. Grey) with unworthy conduct in respect to this commission, and said that, as the honourable member did not attempt to repeat his charges in the House, he would not condescend to reply to them.

Mr. Aglionby, Sir H. Willoughby, Sir R. Inglis, and Mr. J. E. Denison made a few observations.

Mr. HORSMAN withdrew his motion, admitting that sufficient parliamentary ground had been given for not affirming it. He denied, however, that he shrunk from the charges made in his letter to his constituents against the Home Secretary, though he did not think proper to repeat them in the House.

Mr. H. DRUMMOND obtained leave to bring in a Bill to facilitate the transfer of Real Property, which was read a first time.

Mr. HUTCHINSON obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Law relating to Bankrupt Members of the House of Commons, and to vacate the seats of Bankrupt and Insolvent Members of the House of Commons, and to facilitate the Recovery of Debts from such Members.

Mr. FAGAN obtained leave to bring in a Bill to make Life Policies of insurance assignable at law, and to make other amendments in the law relating thereto.

THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

Sir R. INGLIS moved for reports, statements, and plans relative to the Arctic expedition, and stated that his object was to induce the House to express sympathy with those brave men who were pining (if God had spared their lives—their fifth winter in the Polar regions, and to urge the Government to make vigorous and immediate exertions for the rescue of our enterprising countrymen by the means of steam-vessels, by a division of numbers, and by the dispersion of small balloons. The cause of humanity, of national honour, and of science was involved in this last great effort.

Mr. ANSTEY seconded the motion.

Sir F. BARING said, that it was the intention of the Government to send out an expedition by the eastern route, and he would lay on the table a minute of the Admiralty. He assured the House that they were ready to consider with attention every project for the recovery of our brave countrymen. Money was no consideration, though it was a consideration how far Government would be justified in risking more lives. However, there was still sufficient hope to justify further attempts to ascertain the fate of Sir J. Franklin and his companions.

After a few words from Mr. WYLD, the motion was agreed to.

Mr. M. GIBSON moved for leave to bring in a Bill to establish County financial Boards for the assessing of county rates, and for the administration of county expenditure in England and Wales.

Mr. ANSTEY obtained leave to bring in a Bill to consolidate and amend the Irish Fisheries Acts, which was read a first time.

Mr. MONSELL moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the act of last session for the collection of County Cess in Ireland. Agreed to, and read a first time.

Mr. FREWEN obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the law relating to the holding of Benefices in Plurality, which was read a first time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to SIX o'clock.

THE QUEEN'S ANSWER TO THE ADDRESS.

Mr. W. LASCELLES appeared at the bar with her Majesty's answer to the Address. It contained the usual expression of thanks, and assurances on the subject of her Majesty's sincere desire to promote the interests of her people, and to preserve unimpaired the institutions of the country.

The County Cess (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAW IN IRELAND.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL moved for leave to bring in a bill for the regulation of process and practice in the superior Courts of Common Law in Ireland; also a bill to simplify and improve the proceedings in the Court of Chancery in Ireland: also a bill to amend the laws for the registration of assurances of lands in Ireland; also a bill to amend the laws concerning judgments in Ireland. The hon. and learned member shortly explained the scope and details of his bills. The object of the first was to assimilate the practice in Ireland, as far as possible, to that in England; of the second, to be part of the same system, and the unnecessary delay of Chancery proceedings; of the third, to provide a complete land index, based on the trigonometrical survey, and an index of titles, an index of wills, &c.; of the fourth, to prevent fraudulent persons being a charge on the whole lands, as now at present, in Ireland, and to restrict them to particular parts, in the same way as mortgages.

A general declaration of approval of the scope of these bills having been given, and a wish having been expressed by Mr. Page Wood, Mr. Henley, Mr. Mullings, Mr. Walpole, and other hon. members, for an extension to England of the Chancery reforms contemplated for Ireland, leave was given to bring in the Bills.

THE MISGOVERNMENT OF THE ISLAND OF CEYLON.

Mr. HAWES moved the reappointment of the Select Committee to inquire into the grievances complained of in Ceylon, in connexion with the administration and government of that colony, and to report their opinion whether any measure can be adopted for the redress of any grievance of which there may be shown just reason to complain; and also whether any measure can be adopted for the better administration and government of that dependency. The hon. Undersecretary made his motion without any remark.

Mr. H. BAILLIE related the circumstances under which the committee of last year separated. They had come to a resolution that the chairman should communicate with the Secretary of State respecting the bringing over the witnesses necessary to substantiate the charges made against the Governor of Ceylon. It was understood that that course was approved by the Colonial-office. But when application was made to Lord Grey, that noble Lord refused to bring over the witnesses, on the paltry ground of the expense; and thus, by the management of the Colonial-office, the inquiry would be protracted beyond the present session. Had the required witnesses been produced, and had the inquiry been brought to a conclusion, he (Mr. Baillie) hesitated not in declaring that acts of scandal would have been proved against the Governor of Ceylon to which all that had been reported of Field-Marshal Haynau in Hungary would appear mild and merciful. He should the inquiry be pursued at all, he hoped the House would insist that it should be a fair and searching one, despite the unblushing attempts made by the Colonial-office to baffle and impede it. Referring to the case of British Guiana, the honourable member desired to know if the three recommendations of the committee on this colony had been carried out—if the salary of the Governor had been reduced, if a searching inquiry had been made into the representations made by the late Governor, and if the constitution of British Guiana was altered in friendly concert with the colonial authorities? If what he (Mr. Baillie) heard was true, the changes made in the colony were effected by the Governor alone, and in contempt of the colonial authorities.

Mr. HAWES denied that the British Guiana committee had recommended the reduction of the Governor's salary; and asserted that reductions had been made in the expenses of the colony to the extent of between £70,000 and £80,000 a year. The hon. Under-Secretary also asserted, that the most changes in the constitution of the colony had been made with the concurrence and approval of the colonial authorities. With respect to Ceylon, Mr. Hawes declared, that a more foul and rotten case, or a meaner conspiracy, was never attempted to be concocted. He charged Mr. Baillie with injustice and want of candour in making his statement, and emphatically denied that Earl Grey had refused to bring over the witnesses required by the committee. Had the witnesses named by Mr. Baillie to Lord Stanley in November, been sent for, they could not have left Ceylon before the middle of February, and could not be here for some months. It was absurdity evident on the face of it for the committee to receive, other witnesses were coming, and as fast as the committee could require them, others would be brought over. He (Mr. Hawes) pledged himself that the inquiry should go on to its legitimate conclusion, though he thought Mr. Baillie would be very glad to get out of it and let it drop.

After a few words from Mr. HUME,

Mr. DISRAELI said the question for the House then to decide was a simple one, and should be confined to the understanding between the Government and the committee of last year relative to the production of witnesses. He thought the case was complete against the Government, and that they had evaded their agreement with the committee. Mr. Disraeli therefore moved, as an amendment to the motion, to the effect—"That in acceding to the reappointment of the committee," &c., "this House deems it expedient to express its disapprobation of the conduct in which her Majesty's Government have evaded its understanding with the committee last year for the further production of witnesses."

Lord J. RUSSELL contended that the committee had gone beyond the regular powers of committees in delegating to its chairman the power to select witnesses during six months, and also beyond the understanding come to by him (Lord J. Russell) in that house. Even on the admission of the chairman of the committee himself, only two months had been lost, for it was not until the end of November that Mr. Baillie had written to Lord Grey for the witnesses he then required. The noble Lord concluded his remarks by deprecating all pre-judgment of the case, and calling on the House to weigh well the great interests involved in their decision.

Sir JAMES GRAHAM declared that he knew no man less capable of breaking an understanding, or of impeding an inquiry instituted by the House of Commons, than the noble Lord at the head of the Government. That was his general impression. But his special recollection of the understanding come to by the noble Lord was limited, and was to the effect, that the committee should meet on the earliest possible day; that they should agree upon the documents and evidence they would require, and what witnesses should be summoned; and that these should be notified to the Secretary of State. But this understanding was of secondary importance; the grave question placed before the House by Mr. Disraeli's amendment was, whether a vote of censure on the Government should be taken: without notice, and as an incidental way.

After a few words of explanation from F. Maule, Mr. Bright said that Mr. D sraeli had shown his tact as a party leader in the amendment he had proposed. But he (Mr. Bright) could not vote for it. He would, however, vote for the addition to the original motion of the words "and that the four witnesses following (inserting their names) be forthwith summoned."

Mr. Disraeli had no wish to press a vote of censure on the Government without notice, and would therefore withdraw. He was willing to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Manchester, and would therefore support it, quite satisfied with the expression of censure on the conduct of the Government conveyed in its terms.

Major Blackall, Mr. V. Smith, and Mr. Henley made a few observations.

Lord J. Russell refused to allow Mr. Disraeli's amendment to be withdrawn, as it was a motion of censure on him as head of the Government.

The House divided :

For Mr. Disraeli's amendment	.. ..	68
Against it		140
Majority against the amendment		—72

Mr. Bright then proposed his amendment.

Lord J. Russell said that if the first amendment was a censure on the Government, this was a censure on the committee.

The House again divided :

For Mr. Bright's amendment		100
Against it		109
Majority against the amendment		—9

Six o'clock having arrived before the division was over, the committee was not nominated.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

Their Lordships met at five o'clock.

Petitions, complaining of agricultural distress, were presented by the Earl of Lawdon and the Earl of Feversham.

The Earl of Feversham also presented a petition from York, praying for the closing of every post office on Sunday.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.

Lord Brougham gave notice, that he should the next day call the attention of their Lordships to the circumstance that, in the year 1840, when the bill was passed appointing the Ecclesiastical Commission, on the last day before the bill passed, the last clause was introduced, by which a certain person was appointed secretary and treasurer of the commission for life.

Their Lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at a few minutes before four o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. Hatchell, the new member for Windsor, in the room of Lord John Hay, took the oaths and his seat.

NEW WRIT.

On the motion of Mr. Tufnell, a new writ was ordered for Kirkcudbright, in the room of Mr. Maitland, late Solicitor-General for Scotland, appointed one of the Lords of the Court of Session in Scotland, in the room of Lord Jeffrey.

Several petitions were presented by hon. members on private and public subjects.

REFORM OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. Hume gave notice that he would, on an early day, move for leave to bring in a bill for the extension and equalisation of the suffrage, and for vote by ballot, and shortening the duration of Parliament.

THE IRISH COURTS.

The Solicitor-General brought in the four bills, for the introduction of which he obtained leave yesterday.

THE MALT-TAX.

Mr. Cayley gave notice that he would, on the earliest possible day, bring forward his motion with respect to the repeal of the Malt-Tax.

THE WOODS AND FORESTS.

Mr. Hayter gave notice that, as soon as the Chancellor of the Exchequer was able to attend the House, he would introduce the Bill for the improved management of the Woods and Forests.

THE IRISH COUNTY COURTS.

In answer to a question from Mr. Fagan, Sir Wm. Somerville said, that although he could not give any assurance that any measure would be introduced for assimilating County Courts in Ireland to those in England, a measure on the subject was under the consideration of the Government.

THE MINT.

In answer to a question from Mr. Hume, Lord J. Russell said that a measure was in preparation, and would be shortly introduced, with respect to the management of the Mint.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.

Mr. Roebuck called the attention of the House to a letter which had been addressed by the hon. gentleman the member for Cockermouth (Mr. Horsman) to his constituents, accusing the noble Lord at the head of the Government with having committed a fraud on the House with reference to the bill which he had introduced last Session for the regulation of the Ecclesiastical Commission.

Lord John Russell indignantly denied that he had been guilty of any fraud or unfair dealing. When it was found necessary to amend the bill with respect to the Ecclesiastical Commission, it was considered necessary to submit the amendments to the Attorney-General and

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Friday.

Their Lordships met at five o'clock.

On the motion of the Lord Chancellor, the Registrars Office Bankruptcy Bill was read a third time and passed.

Viscount Combermere presented two petitions from the county of Chester, complaining of agricultural distress, and praying for Protection.

The Earl of Winchilsea presented a similar petition, agreed to at a county meeting held at Lincoln.

Lord Stanley gave notice that, on Monday, the 13th instant, he should call the attention of their Lordships to the unfortunate circumstance connected with the affair at Dolly's Brae on the 12th July last, and the circumstances relating to the dismissal of the Earl of Cardan and two other magistrates. He gave this early notice, in order that the Lord-Lieutenant might have such timely notice as to enable him to be present.

The Earl of Roden trusted the Lord Lieutenant would be in his place on the occasion.

Lord Brougham said he found the clause to which he had called their Lordships' attention on Thursday, relative to the appointment of the Secretary to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, had been surreptitiously introduced but publicly: and he should, therefore, withdraw the notice which he had given for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the subject.

Lord Brougham laid on the table a Bill to amend the Law of Distress in Scotland.

On the motion of the nobles and learned Lord, the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Bill was read a second time.

The Bishop of Exeter presented a petition from the Archdeacon and clergy of East Cornwall, against the performance of Post-office duties on Sundays.

Their Lordships then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Friday.

The Speaker took the chair shortly before four o'clock.

Mr. Hall presented petitions from Lancashire, praying for the cessation of labour in the Post-office on the Sabbath.

Several similar petitions were presented from various places throughout the kingdom.

Mr. W. Brown presented a petition from a place in Lancashire, praying for the establishment of local boards to govern the county exemption.

Colonel Chatterton presented a petition from Cork, praying for a grant from Parliament for national education in Ireland.

Sir W. Molesworth presented a petition from New Zealand, complaining of various grievances; also a petition from New South Wales, complaining of various breaches of faith with them on the part of the Colonial Office, and praying that it might not again be made a penal settlement.

Lord J. Russell moved that the House should at its rising adjourn to Monday next. Agreed to.

Mr. C. Lushington said, since he had given notice of his intention to put a question to the noble Lord (Lord J. Russell) relative to the duty of Lord Ashburton, he had been informed that there was a petition pending against the return of Baron Rothschild, and, as under these circumstances his question would be premature, unproductive, irregular, and disrespectfull to the House, he should withdraw it.

In reply to a question from Mr. J. Williams, Lord Duncan said he would on an early day renew his motion for the repeal of the Window-tax

In reply to a question from Mr. H. Berkeley, Sir G. Grey said, it was the intention to introduce a measure, if possible, in the present session, upon the subject of intramural interments.

Mr. Horsman gave notice of a motion for Monday next, for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the charges which he had made against Lord John Russell and Sir G. Grey.

OUR COLONIAL POLICY.—THE AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

Lord John Russell said, he believed few hon. members were not impressed with the necessity of some general statement being made with regard to the colonial policy pursued by this country. So many subordinate statements had been put forward, and so many acts ascribed to them, that he thought it the imperative duty of the Government to state what was to be their future policy with regard to the colonies of the British Crown. He confessed that he felt himself almost appalled by the magnitude of the task; but he was consoled by the reflection that there were in that House many hon. members who had devoted much time and considerable study to the colonial policy of the country, and who would be able to throw more additional light upon the subject. He thought it of importance that they should know the extent and importance of their colonies generally. The House might also know what it was sought to govern, and what it was they were endeavouring to maintain in connexion with the mother country. Setting aside the American colonies, which had shaken off all connexion with the mother country, he would find that in the original settlements in the West Indian Islands. He reminded the House of the settlement of Jamaica by Cromwell, which accomplished the reduction of the Island of Jamaica. In the reign of George II. other Islands were added to the former possessions of that country, and also Canada. In the beginning of the next century, Gibraltar was taken possession of; and after the glorious war of 1756, additional islands were obtained, besides the important cession of Canada. Among the colonial possessions of Great Britain, in the beginning of the periods in which they had been obtained, he found that between 1600 and 1700 they had obtained Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward's Island, Bermuda, Jamaica, Barbadoes, Nevis, the Virgin Islands and Antigua, and the settlement of Gambia on the African coast. From 1700 to 1792 they had obtained Gibraltar, Canada, Sierra Leone, the first settlement of New South Wales, St. Vincent, Tobago, a small portion of the West Indian islands. Between 1792 and 1816 they obtained St. Lucia, British Guiana, Demerara, Berbice, and Essequibo, Malta, the Cape of Good Hope, the Mauritius, Van Diemen's Land, &c. Most of these colonies were peopled by emigrants, either sent out by the Government or at home and encouraged by emigration. Their importance as consumers of the home manufactures of the mother country was soon admitted; and, so early as 1796, Mr. Dundas declared, that if they permitted the colonies to seek a market elsewhere, it would be a disastrous thing. It would be a great loss and detriment to that country. The noble Lord then referred to the original government of the various colonies, commencing with Jamaica, in which he observed that a military government first prevailed; that was followed by a more liberal and free system of Government; but up to 1793, the policy that generally prevailed was that of governing these colonies by proclamations, and in a manner not altogether upon the model of the British constitution. Commercial facilities were afterwards granted by Mr. Huskisson to the West Indian colonies, to enable them to establish a more intimate intercourse with the United States; and the repeal of the Navigation Laws in the last year had, in his opinion, put an end for ever to the system of commercial monopoly which had so long prevailed. He did not propose at the present time to discuss the wisdom or the expediency of that policy; but its adoption had given rise to a question which, although modified by various writers, might be broadly stated as this—whether it would be advisable to retain these colonies in connexion with the British Crown. Before he came to that question, however, he would refer to the large increase that had taken place in the population of the various colonies. The colonies of British North America had increased in the following ratio—from 452,000, in 1816, to 1,068,000 in 1835; and thence to 1,656,000 in 1847. In Upper and Lower Canada the increase from 1820 to 1831 was 29 per cent.; from 1831 to 1842, it was 35 per cent.; from 1843 to 1848, it was 28 per cent. In New South Wales—which, some years after it was founded, had only a population of 3000 (half of whom were convicts)—in 1828, a population of more than 36,000, of whom only 6000 were convicts. The exports of the Australian colonies generally had also increased in a very considerable ratio, and were, at the present time, rapidly increasing. He now referred to a class of colonies which were peculiarly circumstanced (he meant the West India Islands), which had undergone a great social change in the abolition of slavery, and which had necessarily entailed a considerable loss of inconvenience and loss upon them. He was bound that on the average of three years under the old system of slavery, up to 1815, the quantity of sugar manufactured for home consumption was 2,947,524 cwt.; that the average of three years before emancipation was 3,898,837; that the average, before the changes in the sugar duties was 2,645,912 cwt.; and the average of three years since that period was 2,807,6 3 cwt. They had, therefore, borne the severe period of trial through which they had passed better than could have been anticipated, under all the circumstances. He now came to the question that had been recently mooted, namely, whether they were come to that period when their best policy would be to give up these colonies at once, considering that it was the bounden duty of the country to maintain the colonies that had been placed under their charge: they could not abandon them, nor get rid of their responsibility. (Loud cheers) He might refer to the beneficial effects which the extension of their colonies in India had produced in New Zealand, where a population existed which was formerly addicted to the most horrible and uncivilised practices. There was also Port Natal, on which they found a race extremely susceptible of improvement and civilisation. It was urged that, like the United States, these colonies, if left to themselves, would become free and independent, and great; but he would ask, those who called on the noble Lord at the head of these colonies were so small and so weak, that they would be utterly unable, if left to themselves, to maintain their integrity and independence, and that they would fall an easy prey to the savage nations, by whom they were surrounded. It was, therefore, in his opinion, impracticable, as it would be most impolitic, to resort to that course. Another suggestion was that these colonies should be left to themselves, and that the mother country should exercise no interference with their local government. That, he said, was an example in the course of last session of the difficulty of drawing a line between the laws which should emanate from the House and those which should originate with the colonial authorities; and he feared, therefore, that it would be extremely difficult to draw any practical line that would satisfy both parties. The noble Lord then referred to the difficulties that existed in the case of the West India colonies, with regard to the Protection to be afforded to the manufactured Sugars, and the regulations for the future government of the colony, after they had been made free, all of which, he was happy to say, no longer existed. The great essential point, in his opinion, was that the House should know and understand upon what principles this great and valuable Colonial Empire should be maintained? (Hear, hear.) They ought to see that these principles were sound in legislation; that they were a credit to the country; and a source of happiness to the colonies. (Cheers.) He was glad in the first place that the system of commercial monopoly was for ever at an end. But, with regard to their future government, it appeared to him that they could not, as a general rule, do better than proceed upon the maxim of their ancestors, namely, that wherever the English people went, they should carry with them English freedom and English constitutional systems and institutions. (Hear, hear.) The noble Lord then referred to the declaration that had lately emanated from a number of members of that and the other House of Parliament (the Colonial Reform Association), with regard to the steps to be taken in which the colonies should be in future governed. It appeared to him that their correspondence with these colonies was a question of very dubious policy. (Loud cries of "Hear, hear.") Commencing with the North American colonies and Canada, he would observe, that up to 1838 grave dissensions had taken place in that colony, and these dissensions had ultimately broken out in a rebellion, which the energy and loyalty of the people had ultimately put down. The House was aware of the recent angry discussions that had taken place in that colony, and they had appeared to the gentlemen composing this association so serious in their nature, that it was suggested they should abandon the Canadas, and permit of their union with the United States of America. To that proposition, should it be made, her Majesty's Government could give nothing but a most decided negative. (Loud cheers.) He trusted, therefore, that such a proposition would not emanate from that association, seeing that it was the determination of this country, should any appeal to arms be made, not to permit of its being carried into effect, so far as was in their power. Since the recent rebellion in the province of Canada, he believed the appeals to the Secretary for the Colonies had been much less frequent, and that, upon the whole, the new constitution had been found to work extremely well. He now came to the Cape of Good Hope, from which colony applications had been frequently made; but up to the time when his noble friend, Lord Stanley, left the Colonial Office, the obstacles were such that they could not be satisfactorily arranged. Recent circumstances, and more mature deliberation, had reduced her Majesty's Government to come to the conclusion that representative institutions should be introduced into the Cape of Good Hope. (Cheers.) Instead of imitating the constitution of Canada and Canada, they proposed that a council should be established elective in its character, but that the election should be by persons having a much higher qualification than those who were to choose the representatives. They proposed, also, that the representatives should be elected for a period of five years, and the elective council for a period of ten years, but half the members of the council to retire every five years, somewhat after the model of the Belgian constitution. (Loud cheers.) With regard to the Australian colonies, the Government proposed to form a council select of two-thirds from the representatives of the people, and one-third to be nominated by the Government. At the same time they thought it would be advisable that the colonists should have the power of originating the form of the constitution to suit the wants and wishes of the people. He proposed that Port Philip should be separated from New South Wales, and have its own legislative council; that the popular elective principle should be introduced into the constitution of Van Diemen's Land, which had at present a legislative council, and that it should be upon the same model as the others. In South Australia, also, a similar body should be organised. The Government would be advisable that it should be sold at a uniform price of twenty shillings throughout all the colonies of Australia; and to prevent one colony bidding against the other for emigrants from the mother country, it was also proposed to fix the price of land in one unless it took place in all. He trusted that the proposition they were now submitting to the House with regard to the Cape of Good Hope and the Australian colonies would be such as to afford full scope to the will of the people, enable them to work their way to their own prosperity, without being trammelled or interfered with by any laws or regulations emanating from the mother country. (Cheers.) With regard to British Guiana and the Mauritius, it was of importance that they should be separated from New South Wales, and have its own legislative council; that the popular elective principle should be introduced into the constitution of Van Diemen's Land, which had at present a legislative council, and that it should be upon the same model as the others. In South Australia, also, a similar body should be organised. The Government proposed

HAMILTON'S celebrated DICTIONARY of 2,000 MUSICAL TERMS, &c., newly edited by JOHN BISHOP, of Colchester. Price 1s.
"In this, the Thirty-third Edition seems to us a marvel, where so many musical terms, phrases, and abbreviations could have been found. We consider this the most useful book we have seen of the kind extant. It ought to be in the hands of everybody, whether student, amateur, or professor."—The Examiner and Times, Jan. 25.
A CATECHISM of the RUDIMENTS of MUSIC. By JAMES CLARKE. 1s.
"A book like this, which has reached the 26th edition, proves how highly useful it has been to those who have the tuition of the young To schools it is invaluable, and it quite supersedes the use of others which have had their run and are obsolete."—Vide Leamington Magnet, Jan. 17.
THE GIPSY'S LIFE is a JOYOUS LIFE. Song. By E. FLOOD. Price 2s. 6d.
This is a lyrical, roll ding song, characteristic of the wandering race whose habits it is intended to represent. The illustrated frontispiece makes really a very pretty picture, and is only equaled by the quality of the contents behind it."—Vide "Bell's Messenger," Jan. 12.
HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE. New and Enlarged Edition, with Whole Fingered by CZERNY.
"The fifteenth edition of this instruction book is now before us; and we confess that we have never met with so much information at so small a price, or that has pleased us more. It leads the student imperceptibly on to be able to perform, not only with correctness, elegance, and precision, but with elaborate taste. We are glad to find that it is more universally used than any other similar work of the kind."—Vide Leamington Magnet.

PHRENOLOGY in RELATION to the NOVEL, the CRITICAL, and the DRAMA.—"The point in question is ably argued, and many instances are given of the fallacies of modern criticism, and of the beauties of the drama. In fine the whole of the seminal organs as described by Phrenology. This little volume appears a new and interesting field of speculation."—Bath Herald. "A dry thicken."—Berwick Warder. "The tragic drama is fine: Shakspeare, the half-fights of Spain, or the gladiatorial combats of old &c, so fall before the wonderful powers of the learned Spurzheim."—Rockwell's Magazine. "I have read it with much pleasure indeed. I am greatly interested in the appearance of a profound thinker and all great writer ranging himself on the side of Phrenology."—Mr. George Combe, in a Letter to the Author.

THE FLORIFORM PARASOL
Registered, Act 6 & 7 Vict., c. 65.
Some time ago, a Lady in the "Illustrated London" Journal sentained a letter from a Lady on the Shapes of Parasols, the letter of which tastefully suggested that a great improvement might be made in their appearance, by adopting in their formation the configuration of Flowers, instead of the antique Mushroom shape.
This suggestion, as far as is mechanically practicable, is carried out by the Invention of the FLORIFORM PARASOL, which exhibits when open, the elegant outline of an expanded flower.
The FLORIFORM PARASOL may be purchased of all first-class Mercers and Parasol Dealers throughout the Kingdom; and wholesale, of JOHN OAKLAND and SON, Manufacturers, 50, Eastcheap, London-bridge.

THE LAST WEEK'S SALE of Messrs. BEECH and BERRALL'S VALUABLE WINTER STOCK, at an enormous reduction from the original cost, in order to make room for the extensive purchases for the Spring Trade. These Ladies have now finished themselves of the bargains offered by the above establishment, will do well to call immediately, as nothing like it in stock.—Thousands of yards of elegant Striped, Checked, Rich Glace, and Fancy Silks, at the uniform price of 1d, 2d, 3d, 4d, 5d, and 6d per yard, former price, 2s 6d to 3s 9d Black Silks and Satins, 1s 6d and 2s 6d the full dress. Rich Brocade Silks, Broche ditto, and Buck Gros Satins, at the same reduction. 475 pieces of real French Merinoes, all wool, 9d, 10d, and 11d per yard. Lawn, now selling at 2½d, 3d, 3½d, and 3s 3½d per yard. Delaines, Cashmeres, and other Fashionable Dress Goods offered at one fourth last month's prices. Shawls, Mantles, and Furs at equally low prices.—For the convenience of Ladies residing in the Country, patterns for reference will be forwarded, free, by post. CHILDREN'S HAIR.—The Balsamic Proprietors of ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL nourish the Hair in the early stage, strengthen the roots, promote a healthy growth, and continue the possession of healthy vigour, silky softness, and luxuriant redundancy, to the latest period of human life. Genial and purifying, it dispels all scurf and impurity, and renders the use of the fine comb unnecessary.
 Many spurious imitations are offered for sale, the purchasers of which have not been aware of the imposition until the natural hue of their Hair has assumed tints that they have been taking a compound of deleterious ingredients, instead of the original ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL. It is therefore, highly necessary to see that these words are on the wrapper—"Price, 3s 6d, Rowland's Macassar Oil," and "Price, 7s, Rowland's Kalydor," 21s.—Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton-garden, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

Registered, Act 6 & 7 Vict., c. 65.
Some time ago, a Lady in the "Illustrated London" Journal sentained a letter from a Lady on the Shapes of Parasols, the letter of which tastefully suggested that a great improvement might be made in their appearance, by adopting in their formation the configuration of Flowers, instead of the antique Mushroom shape.
This suggestion, as far as is mechanically practicable, is carried out by the Invention of the FLORIFORM PARASOL, which exhibits when open, the elegant outline of an expanded flower.
The FLORIFORM PARASOL may be purchased of all first-class Mercers and Parasol Dealers throughout the Kingdom; and wholesale, of JOHN OAKLAND and SON, Manufacturers, 50, Eastcheap, London-bridge.

THE LAST WEEK'S SALE of Messrs. BEECH and BERRALL'S VALUABLE WINTER STOCK, at an enormous reduction from the original cost, in order to make room for the extensive purchases for the Spring Trade. These Ladies have now finished themselves of the bargains offered by the above establishment, will do well to call immediately, as nothing like it in stock.—Thousands of yards of elegant Striped, Checked, Rich Glace, and Fancy Silks, at the uniform price of 1d, 2d, 3d, 4d, 5d, and 6d per yard, former price, 2s 6d to 3s 9d Black Silks and Satins, 1s 6d and 2s 6d the full dress. Rich Brocade Silks, Broche ditto, and Buck Gros Satins, at the same reduction. 475 pieces of real French Merinoes, all wool, 9d, 10d, and 11d per yard. Lawn, now selling at 2½d, 3d, 3½d, and 3s 3½d per yard. Delaines, Cashmeres, and other Fashionable Dress Goods offered at one fourth last month's prices. THE TAXES ON LITERATURE, EDUCATION, AND RELIGION.

We rejoice to see the symptoms and proofs of a vigorous agitation for the removal of the taxes on knowledge. This subject has been suffered to sleep since the year 1836, when a mischievous compromise was made by the influential but short-sighted parties who had charge of it. In the interval the new system has had time to develope itself, and the result has proved that no mere reduction of the excise duty upon paper, or of the stamp duty upon newspapers, can effect any good. Nothing but their total abolition will suffice. This was the concession originally required, and which the Government of 1836, as it since turns out, were by no means indisposed to grant, if the agitators for a free press, a free-trade in paper, and for untaxed knowledge and opinion, had not mismanaged the business with which they were entrusted, and expressed themselves willing to accept of an instalment when they might have exacted the whole. Lord Melbourne's Government took them at their word; the excise duty upon paper was reduced to 1½d. per lb., and the stamp upon newspapers to 1d. Literature received a temporary revival. Publishers, buoyed up with hopes, and incited by the moral glory as well as by the pecuniary reward of such a career, entered upon large and important undertakings. Men like Mr. C. Knight, and the Messrs. Chambers of Edinburgh, the great teachers of the people, the benefactors of their countrymen, and the most valuable of all possible friends of a free Government, and of the cause of peace, order, and social well-being, thought they could educate the people in moral, social, political, and general knowledge by means of cheap and excellent publications. But they did not know the difficulties with which they would have to contend. The exciseman proved their evil genius. The Government, whose best friends they were, was their relentless foe; and the State, interested in an intelligent, well-educated, moral, and religious people, levied such a tax upon the essential vehicle for the conveyance of knowledge, PAPER, as to prohibit intelligence and the means of education from being carried into the very lowest strata of society, to vivify and exalt the whole. The hopes of the great publishers proved fallacious. Literature remained to a great extent the luxury of the upper and middle classes: it was not allowed to descend to the poor. The reduced tax was as fatal to the success of such magnificent undertakings, as the original one. A tax can but destroy any particular trade, pursuit, or profession; and if a small tax produces such a result, there is, in reality, no difference between a small tax and a great one. The burden left upon the back of literature was, if less heavy, not a whit less inimical to its extension and progression. The angel of knowledge was formerly fastened by a chain; Lord Melbourne's Government substituted a rope. The result was the same; she could not fly in either case. It is the object of those who, after an experiment of fourteen years, have again determined to stir in this matter, to undo this last rope, and set literature entirely free. We wish them success in their effort, and trust that they will listen to no compromise, and never relax in their efforts until the Government, willing or unwilling, emancipates general knowledge from the exciseman, and political knowledge both from the exciseman and from the fiscal brand or stamp which renders the newspaper a huge monopoly, in which none but the largest capitalists do or can hope to succeed.

The subject is a very wide one, and divides itself into three branches. The first is the excise duty upon paper, which affects all books, except bibles and prayer-books; and all newspapers and periodicals whatsoever; and all paper that is used either for printing, writing, drawing, the decoration of rooms, or the packing of retail or wholesale merchandise. The reader will understand at a glance how vast a number of industrious persons, in a multiplicity of very dissimilar trades and professions, are affected by this tax. Amongst others may be cited the rag merchant, the paper manufacturer, the machinist, the type founder, the compositor, the pressman, the bookbinder, the stitcher, the ink manufacturer, the gilder, the reporter, the editor, the author, the engraver, the printseller, the wholesale and retail dealers in paper, the wholesale and retail dealers in printed books; and, lastly, all our great exporting merchants who use paper for packages, and all the petty retail dealers in every city, town, and village of the empire, who use paper to enwrap their commodities. We might include in the list every person who buys a book or periodical, and every one who writes a letter of business or affection. The second branch of the subject is the stamp duty upon newspapers, a matter of less importance than the first, but by no means unimportant in itself, when considered with reference to the character, usefulness, influence, and ability of the political press. The third branch of the subject is the advertisement duty, a tax levied as if for no other purpose than to form, in conjunction with the two others, so intolerable a burden upon the enterprise and energy of all who wish to establish newspapers, as to keep out of the field, or crush all except such few as may be supported by enormous capital and resources.

Our space will not allow us to treat of more than one of these subjects at a time. We shall begin with the excise duty upon paper, as not only the most important of the three, but as the one great source and fountain of the evil, of which all the purveyors of good and wholesome, as well as cheap, education and literature have to complain. Were this evil removed, the remaining two might be borne, as all literature, except political literature, would, in that case, be free. If we could not have politics for the million, we should, at all events, have morals for the million—educational books and tracts for the million—science for the million—religious essays and sermons for the million—the master-pieces of wit, humour, and pathos for the million—every kind of literature for the million, that tends to refine the mind, to polish the manners, to inculcate industry and order—and every quality, in fact, that forms the distinction between the civilized man and the savage. Under the present system, it is the necessity of the people to have cheap literature of some kind. They will have it; and, as they cannot buy the good, they are contented with the bad. As every one knows who has paid the slightest attention to the state of the cheap literary market, they have it in the shape of moral poison. They buy obscene and disgusting periodicals, or the no less disgusting, and, if possible, more mischievous filth of the flash novel. These productions are all printed upon the worst possible paper, and sold at a price which brings them within the reach of the poorest. With a free manufacture of paper, all these abominations would disappear. Men like the Messrs. Chambers and Mr. Charles Knight, and many others, would step into the arena, and provide the public, for the same price that they now pay for the reeking wickedness which they so greedily devour, periodicals of the highest character, supported by the highest talent, and administering in every way to the social well-being and advancement of the people.

It is true that 1½d. per lb. upon the paper used in a book does not, at first glance, seem a very overwhelming impost, but a little consideration shows the tax to be an enormous one upon the only literature that the great bulk of the people can afford to buy. Were there no excise duty upon paper, periodicals of the highest degree of excellence in every department of literature could be sold at the price at present charged for blank paper.

Mr. Charles Knight, in his valuable pamphlet, "The Struggles of a Book against excessive Taxation," which we recommend to the impartial attention of those who really wish to understand this important subject in all its bearings, has entered into some calculations which place in a clear light the oppressive nature of this tax.

The "Penny Cyclopædia" and its Supplement were completed in 1846. The two works contain 18,784 pages, and the quantity of paper required to produce a single copy in two reams, each weighing 35 lbs. per ream of its completion, the entire quantity of paper consumed in the work was 50,000 reams, the total weight of which amounted to 1,750,000 lbs. Of this weight, 20,000 reams, or 700,000 lbs., paid the Excise duty of 3d. per lb., amounting to £8750; and the remaining 30 000 reams paid the reduced duty of 1½d. per lb., amounting to £6562. The total duty paid up to the completion of the "Cyclopædia," in 1846, was £15,312. Since that period, 2000 reams of paper have been used in reprinting, to correct the inequalities of the stock, making an addition of 70,000 lbs., excised at £437. But, further—the wrappers of the monthly parts have used 1500 reams of paper, taxed at £500; and the milled boards employed in binding the volumes have paid £300 more, or about £300 The total payment to the Excise by the "Penny Cyclopædia" has been £15,500.

It is well known, he adds, that the amount of a duty upon a raw material by no means represents the amount of the charge which it entails upon the manufacturer. Mr. MacCulloch and Mr. Porter rightly state that the price for a ream of one particular sort of printing paper was, in 1831, 24s.; in 1836, 14s.; in 1841, 9s. 6d. From 1833 to 1837, the price of a ream of "Penny Cyclopædia" paper was 33s.; from 1838 to 1846, it was 24s. The difference in price was 9s. per ream; the amount of reduced duty was 4s. 4½d. The paper-makers and the stationers doubled the tax. But even at the reduced rate it has been satisfactorily shown by my fellow-labourers, the Messrs. Chambers, that the duty enters one-third into price. Unquestionably, if the duty were now removed, I could buy a ream of similar paper for 17s. The tax, preventing competition, and giving undue advantages to capitalists, had the effect of making me pay for my paper, from 1833 to 1837, 16s. a ream more than the price of untaxed paper would be, or £16,000 upon 20,000 reams; and from 1838 to 1846, 7s. per ream more than I should otherwise have paid; which, upon 30,000 reams, amounts to £10,500. The tax, therefore, operated as a burthen upon my publication to the extent of £26,500, during its long and difficult progress to completion. The paper since used for reprints, and the paper for wrappers, has been raised in price £2500 by the same process.

The struggles of one book against excessive taxation are, up to this point, to be measured by a burthen of £29,000.

Nor is this the whole amount of the burden. Interest and compound interest upon unsold stock, every pound weight of which must have paid duty to the Government, must be taken into the calculation. This item, in the case of Mr. Knight's publications, is estimated by him at £3000 more, making a total of £32,000 levied, not to the enrichment of the State, but to the impoverishment if not ruin of enterprise, and the loss of the public.

There are various modes in which this apparently small, but, in reality, very onerous tax, operates to the enhancement of the price of books and periodicals. For instance, could the paper-maker shut his door against the exciseman, he might introduce many improvements into his manufacture which he is now prevented from employing. In the paper-mill, too, it is of obvious importance, when the unwelcome visitant appears to levy the tax, that the paper should not be heavy with moisture. It is consequently made as dry as possible. But, as is well known, paper must be damped before it is fit to be printed upon. Here there is a double process, first of drying and then of damping, each of which is attended with expense, which expense, as a matter of course, is added to the price of the material before it finds its way into consumption. Then, again, the manufacturer of paper is made a monopoly by the excise restrictions upon it, which keep out of the trade all except large capitalists, as happens also in the soap manufacture and in distilleries, that are similarly afflicted with that expensive public servant, the Office of Excise. There never was a monopolist, and there never will be one, who did not make the public pay him a percentage considerably higher than that levied by the State, and this also has to be added to the various charges upon paper. We are said to be a free people; but surely we have something yet to do before we can be fully entitled to that designation. Free as we are, we are not free to teach the multitude. We are, practically, not free to teach our children to read; and not free to put good and cheap literature into the hands of our adult population. Our people are, in fact, brutalised by our Government, because our Government is unwise enough to tax articles that never ought to be taxed, and blind enough to be unaware that any tax which prevents or diminishes employment, instead of money gained, is money lost, and that every farthing it may receive for taxing knowledge it has to expend again in poor-rates and prison rates, and in all the multifarious outlay consequent upon increasing pauperism and criminality.

We must reserve for future papers the consideration of the Newspaper Stamp Duty, and the Duty upon Advertisements. We would, in the meantime, impress upon the attention of all interested the paramount importance of throwing open the paper manufacture, and freeing it from duty. That reform lies at the root of the rest; and we trust that all whose business it is to write or sell books, and all whose pleasure it is to read them, will join their efforts to those of the men who have stirred in this peaceful agitation. In the troubles that are preparing for this or the coming generation, woe to the State whose population shall be ignorant.

STAG HUNT EXTRAORDINARY.

EPPING and ASCOT have had their glories pictured in our Journal; but neither of these Hunts ever presented more extraordinary sport than was witnessed in Camden Town and the New-road, on Tuesday last—that of "a real Stag-Hunt" in this thickly-peopled quarter of the metropolis. About two o'clock in the afternoon, the inhabitants of Camden Town were astonished at the unusual sight of a fine stag, or red deer, running at full speed in the direction of Somers Town, with five hounds in full cry at his heels, followed by one solitary rider and the huntsman, on horses that had evidently done a hard day's work. The meet of Mr. Bean's hounds had been held at Hendon, whence, in a circuitous route, the stag broke away for Finchley Common, skirting Coldfalls Wood, and passed Highgate, on to the metropolis. He entered Somers Town by Brewer-street, and through Skinner-street, Phœnix-street, and Wilstead-street, finally crossing the New-road, with the five hounds close at his haunches. He here made a bolt at the iron gate, leading through Mabledon-place into Burton-crescent; but, being headed by two of the hounds, and terrified at the number of vehicles passing the New-road, he dashed in at the gate in front of the house of Messrs. Prior's stove grate manufactory, whence, seeing the shop door open, he darted into the house, and was there speedily secured. The strange scene attracted some thousands of persons, and it required the assistance of about a dozen policemen to preserve Mr. Prior's railings from destruction Such was the curiosity excited on the occasion, that numbers of women and children paid a penny each for admission to the yard to see so strange a visitor. The run, from first to last, was over not less than thirty-five miles of ground; and, although a strong field had mustered in the morning, dogs and horses were all fairly beaten, except the small remnant who came to at the take. The stag was carted off from his resting-place about six o'clock, amid the cheers of many hundreds of spectators.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The riotous display in Paris last week has been followed by a corresponding lull, and all is as tranquil, dull, and uninteresting as in any peace-loving country in existence. For lack of unpleasant facts, however, the Parisians have taken to vexatious forebodings, grounded on alleged intention on the part of the Government to make an important redistribution of the military commands into which France is divided. At present France consists of seventeen military divisions, each under the command of a general officer, who makes his reports to the Minister of War direct. It is now proposed that these seventeen divisions shall be abolished, and that France shall be formed into either four or five divisions, each of which is to be placed under the command of a Lieutenant-General, who is to have an almost unlimited command, and who can, whenever he sees occasion, place the whole of his division under martial law. The divisions are to be called according to their positions—north, south, east, west, and centre. These great divisions are to be sub-divided, and placed under the command of Major-Generals, who will make their reports to the Lieutenant-Generals in command. On the slightest appearance of disorder, or even the "slightest indication of agitation," in any one of these five divisions, the Lieutenant-General in command at that moment will declare it in a state of siege.

Some appointments have been made which are stated to be in accordance with this plan; viz. General de Castellane has been appointed Commander-in-Chief of the 19th military division (Bordeaux), and the 18th and 14th divisions (Nantes and Rennes) are also placed under his command. General Rostolan is appointed to the command of the 8th, 9th, and 10th military divisions (Toulouse, Perpignan, and Montpellier); and the 6th military division (Besançon) is added to the 5th military division (Lyons), and left under the command of General Gemeau. In other respects the journals are occupied with the approaching elections. The clubs meet daily to name the candidates they shall oppose, but nothing definitive as to the persons selected has yet been determined upon.

The advices from the provinces are somewhat more favourable. The agitation has in a degree subsided, and it is thought will gradually disappear.

M. Proudhon still remains in solitary imprisonment.

The editor of La Liberté was convicted on Monday of having published a libel upon the Government. He was sentenced to imprisonment for one year, and to a fine of 4000f.

Ministers have determined to send extraordinary commissioners to different parts of the country, investing them with large discretionary powers, with the view of repressing disturbances.

Accounts from the departments mention that the inundations caused by the melting of the snow, and which occasioned several disasters, are decreasing.

AUSTRIA.

Accounts from Vienna, to the 8th inst., state that the Emperor, who had been severely indisposed for some days, was then out of danger, and was confined to his bed, though convalescent. The Minister of Finance had submitted to his Majesty a report on the state of the loan of 4½ per cent., from which it appeared that the sum collected in Hungary alone was 67,053,8008; and abroad 3,814,6008; making a total of 71,218,6008. Another state paper presented to his Majesty sets forth that the total forces of the Russian army which entered the states of Austria in the Hungarian campaign was 256,400 men, and 90,000 horses and cavalry and mounted artillery.

From all parts of the country sad accounts were received of inundations. At Presburg the waters attained a greater height than was known in the memory of man. The whole city and environs were one vast sheet of water, and the streets were traversed by boats.

TURKEY

According to the most recent accounts from Constantinople, the Austrian Minister had not yet resumed diplomatic relations with the Porte: and it is with some probability stated that this delay was occasioned by the intrigues of Russia, who wished to keep the public mind still uncertain and agitated. Instead of diminishing the armed forces in Wallachia and Moldavia, Russia was adding considerably to her army in these provinces; and this continuance and increase of the military force of the Czar in the principalities, was accounted for by the alleged existence of a plan in contemplation on the part of the Russian Government for forcing the Wallachians and Moldavians into insurrection, and proclaiming their independence, in order, under pretext of intervention, to become master of that territory in the Russian empire. In such a case, the Czar will, no doubt, be able to justify the presence of his troops, as also this extension of his dominions.

GREECE.

Accounts from Athens to the 31st January, received viâ Malta, announce the occupation, by British marines, of the islands of Cabrera? (probably Cervi) and Sapienza, and the landing of ordnance thereon for fortifying the same. The British encampment on the Piræus is stated to be daily increasing, and that in those islands a number of Greek coasting craft, either in ballast or with cargoes, bound to Greek ports, the better to protect against piracy or a surprise upon the British fleet by explosive or fire-ships, for which description of warfare the Greeks have ever been famous.

The French fleet had unexpectedly shaped its course for the Dardanelles, and was there on the 26th January.

SWITZERLAND.

The Federal Council of Switzerland has issued a new circular to the Governments of the Cantons, on the execution of the circular of the 19th of November last, relative to certain refugees whose expulsion was demanded by the foreign powers. This document is signed by M. Druey, the President of the Confederation, after stating the purport of the circular, proceeds to name the persons to whom it more particularly refers:—"These refugees (it says) are Messrs. Mazzini, the Provisional Government of the Palatinate; Richter, Heinzen, Rottcck, Thiebault, and Torrent, members of the committee of Baden; Gantert and Kuchling, ex-commissioners, Szaulds, or Schneider, and Racquillet, military chiefs; and to these add Messrs. Werner, formerly dictator, and Cowanda, mentioned in the decree of the 16th of July. In consequence, we invite the faithful and dear confederates—1. To ascertain as soon as possible if the foreigners above-named, or any of them, are in your cantons. 2. In case they should happen to be there, to invite them to make their preparations for immediately leaving Switzerland, to cause to be transmitted without delay to our department of Justice and Police a personal description of those refugees, and to make known to it to what country they wish to proceed, and by what place they propose to enter France on their way to their destination. 3. To make us a report, between this and the 20th of February at the latest, of the result of the investigations of your authorities, whether the refugees referred to, or any of them, be in your canton or not, as also on other measures you may have ordered in execution of the present circular, and of that of the 19th of November, 1849. As regards the other refugee leaders named in the circular of the 19th of November, whose residence is known to you, you are invited to take measures calculated to hasten the departure from Switzerland of such of them as are still in your canton. You will also be kind enough to make us, before the 20th of the present month, a report on the result of the measures which you may have prescribed in consequence of this invitation."

This question of the refugees appears to be fraught with troublesome consequences to Switzerland. It appears that Prussia and Austria have informed the Federal Government that, in order to reduce their armies, they are forced to occupy Switzerland, and expel the whole of the refugees, who make it the theatre of agitation. These powers declare they have come to an understanding with Russia as to the occupation of the German cantons; that if France wish to occupy the French cantons she can do so; if not, these Powers will do it. It is said that Piedmont is also agreed as to the occupation of the Italian cantons. The refugees are better received in the canton of Vaud than anywhere else.

UNITED STATES.

Advices from New York to the 25th ult. have been received, but they contain no news of interest.

A resolution had been introduced into Congress to consider the propriety of presenting some suitable memorial to Captain Cook for his gallant conduct in rescuing the passengers on board the Caleb Grenshaw.

The bill in relation to the fugitive slaves was also under consideration. The case of Colonel Webb had been postponed till some action was had on the Austrian resolutions of General Cass. It was to be taken up on the 28th ultimo.

The Hungarian refugees had dined with General Taylor on the 24th.

No further intelligence from California had been received.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.—Mr. Smith, of Deanston, in Gloucestershire, has made an important discovery in the treatment of the fleeces of sheep, whereby the fleces of the living animal is rendered repellant of water by a simple and cheap process a fact long since defended from the pernicious effect of wet, whilst the natural emanations from the body remain unchecked, and the growth and quality of the wool are improved. The effect of this water-proofing has been practised for several seasons of the most exposed sheep-walks in Scotland, and with singular success. This process, it is expected, will effectually supersede the laying with tar, and butter, and other salves, at one-third of the cost, whilst the wool is also agreed to be improved. Though the laying or salving of sheep hitherto has been applied chiefly to flocks on mountains and exposed situations only, it is believed that the new mode of treatment will be found beneficial to sheep on the best and most sheltered southern pastures, and that it will go far to prevent or mitigate that destructive disease—the rot, which is neither more nor less than dysentery, caused by the continuance of wet weather, whereby the fleece of the sheep become soaked with rain, and produce the same effect as is produced on man by wet clothing. It is also presumed that this mode of treatment will lead to the successful introduction of the Spanish sheep and the Alpaca, which are known to have suffered from the prevalence of wet weather in this country.

The remains of the persons who were unfortunately drowned off the pier at Sunderland, in endeavouring to save the crew of a small vessel in danger, were interred at Sunderland churchyard on Sunday afternoon last. The funeral of Mr. Coulson Douglas was followed by a number of shipowners and master mariners, by whom he was much respected. The funerals of Robert Chisholm and Robert Reay were followed by a procession of seamen. The pall on the coffin was partially covered with a union jack. An immense number of persons crowded the churchyard.

The amount of Exchequer-bills authorised to be raised, charged on the supplies of 1850, is £4,786,700. From this sum there is to be deducted Exchequer-bills paid off in money in 1849, £28,000, leaving the amount to be provided in the present year £4,758,700.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Their Lordships met at five o'clock.

THE AFFAIRS OF GREECE.

Lord STANLEY inquired when the papers relative to the dispute n Greece would be produced; and if it were true that the French Government had offered its mediation to relieve us from our rash and hasty proceedings at Athens; and if the proffered mediation had been accepted: likewise, if the mediation extended to the demands made for territorial restoration as well as for pecuniary compensation for injuries done to individuals.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE replied that the papers should be produced without delay. Her Majesty's Government had accepted the offered mediation of France—its good offices, not its arbitration. The claim for the islands was not included in the categorical demand made at Athens.

Lord STANLEY desired to be informed if, in the event of the territorial question being included, the Government would approve of any measure for taking possession of the islands.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE had no reason to believe that any such step would be taken.

Lord BROUGHAM asked, if a vessel of war had not been taken possession of.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE replied not. The vessel had been only detained.

The Earl of ABERDEEN was glad that the mediation of France had been accepted by the Government. but he regretted that it had not been accepted by our agent at Athens when first offered there. He thought that we had acted precipitately in this matter. We had been all along up to the present trying to counteract the influence of France in Greece, but by our late conduct we impressed Greece with the idea that France was her protector.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE moved the second reading of the Ecclesiastical Commission Bill. After pointing out the necessity of remodelling the commission, he stated that the bill provided for the appointment of three commissioners to attend to the management of the estates, to be called the estates commissioners; two to be paid salaries of £1000 a year each, the third to be unpaid. The bill also provided that the offices of treasurer and secretary should not be held by any person.

The Archbishop of CANTERBURY generally approved of the bill, and defended the commission from the charges made against it. It was the fault of the Legislature that it had imposed upon the commission more duty; and up to a recent period he had been the faithful servant of the commission.

The Earl of HARROWBY and Lord STANLEY urged the advisability of keeping separate the estates and common funds, and disapproved of that part of the bill which provided for their consolidation. Lord Stanley expressed a hope that the Government would reconsider this part of the bill, and agree to amend it in committee.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE would promise to reconsider the point, but he could give no hope that the two funds would be kept separate.

The Bishop of LONDON approved generally of the bill, which was read a second time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House met at four o'clock.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.—THE ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HORSMAN was about to rise for the purpose of moving the resolution of which he had given notice on a previous day, viz.—"That the attention of this House having been directed in a letter addressed by the member for Cockermouth to his constituents to charges and allegations are made impugning the conduct of the First Minister of the Crown and the Secretary of State for the Home Department with reference to legislation on ecclesiastical affairs, during the last session of Parliament, and the honourable member having produced a copy of that letter, and expressed his willingness to substantiate its accuracy, a committee of five members be nominated by Mr. Speaker to inquire into the truth of those allegations, and report its opinion to the House," when, amidst marked and evident attention,

Lord ASHLEY rose and offered his mediation between Lord J. RUSSELL, Sir G. GREY, and Mr. HORSMAN, whose expected personal discussion had brought down a very full House and a large Gallery—a crowded house, in fact. The noble Lord having paid high compliments to the honour and unimpeachable integrity of the three disputants, pointed out the unfitness of a committee to investigate such a case, and the absence of all evidence beyond the memory of each gentleman engaged in the dispute. He thought it was evident the whole question arose from a misapprehension, and in order to dispose of it he moved that the order of the day be read.

Mr. HORSMAN declared that he did not charge the First Minister or the Home Secretary with the deliberate intention to deceive, nor had he, when he wrote the letter to his constituents, any such imputation in his mind. He withdrew fully and cheerfully every imputation on the honour of the noble Lord and the right hon. gentleman, and he expressed his regret that anything unpleasant had occurred between them.

Lord J. RUSSELL felt great satisfaction at the declaration, not only that the honourable member did not make the charge of an intention to deceive, but that he never had the intention to make such an accusation.

Sir G. GREY likewise expressed himself perfectly satisfied. Thus the matter dropped.

CEYLON.

On the resumption of the debate on the question for the re-appointment of the Ceylon committee,

Lord J. RUSSELL read a letter from Captain Watson, denying that the papers read by Mr. Bailie on the Ceylon debate, professing to be proclamations, were genuine. These pretended proclamations were, he said, surreptitious forgeries.

Mr. BAILLIE explained that the proclamations which purported to be signed by Captain Watson had been sent to him, and he had read them, believing them to be genuine.

Mr. J. STUART considered that it would be a farce to go on with the inquiry, if the committee were prevented from calling the necessary witnesses before them.

Lord J. RUSSELL remarked that, the witnesses against Lord Torrington having been heard, it was only just to hear those in his favour.

Mr. ADDERLEY thought it was apparent that Ministers sought wilfully to misrepresent all the acts of the committee

Mr. HUME insisted on the necessity of sending out a commission to Ceylon, as the only way of arriving at the truth.

Mr. DISRAELI was willing to resume his labours on the committee, though he felt certain the result would be unsatisfactory both to the House and to the country. He felt a sincere conviction that an attempt was being made to prevent an impartial investigation.

Mr. ROEBUCK considered the mode of proceeding adopted by the members of the committee a most cowardly one. Those who had sp ken charged the Government with the deliberate intention to prevent them from making a fair investigation and from doing justice; but, notwithstanding this, they proposed to go on with the inquiry. They should refuse to be members of the committee if they really were convinced that the Government were endeavouring to render the inquiry nugatory. The hon. and learned gentleman defended Lord Torrington, and declared that he saw with regret a spirit afoot, the effect of which was to prevent the return of our representatives abroad—a spirit than which none could be more dangerous.

Mr. HUME thought Mr. Roebuck must have risen from his bed that morning rather than from his dinner. Strange opinions; at all events, he was no longer the man he formerly was. A more tyrannical exercise of general superintendence than that just delivered by the once Liberal member for Sheffield.

After an explanation from Mr. ROEBUCK,

The committee was nominated.

PIRACY.

Sir FRANCIS BARING moved the second reading of the Pirates Head Money Repeal Bill.

Sir GEORGE GREY disapproved of repealing altogether the present law; he thought it would be better to modify it, so as to meet any abuses which had taken place under it.

Sir F. BARING said he proposed to give a discretion to the Admiralty to give head money, instead of making it compulsory, as at present. As the law stood, it was open to abuse, and it gave rise to imputations against those engaged in suppressing the slave trade.

Mr. HUME and Mr. CONDEN disapproved of the acts of Rajah Brooke.

After a few observations from Sir H. VERNEY and Colonel THOMPSON, the bill was read a second time.

The report of the resolution on our Australian colonies was received, and leave was given to bring in a bill founded thereon.

THE MERCHANT MARINE SERVICE.

In committee of the whole House—

Mr. LABOUCHERE moved a resolution on which to found a Bill for improving the condition of masters, mates, and seamen in the Merchant Service. The right hon. gentleman said the bill was in most of its provisions identical with that introduced last year. He proposed to constitute a department of mercantile marine, as a department of the Board of Trade, to exercise a general superintendence of the merchant service. He proposed a system of examination of masters and mates, by which qualified certificates would be given according to their degrees of professional knowledge and to the tonnage of the vessels in which they sought employment. He also proposed several rules for bettering the discipline and treatment of the crews. The right hon. gentleman minutely explained the details of the bill.

Mr. CARDWELL promised to lend his help in framing a good measure on this most important subject, and requested an ample allotment of time to consider the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HUME, Mr. Ricardo, Mr. Wawn, and Mr. W. Brown made a few observations, and the resolution was agreed to.

MERCHANT SEAMEN'S FUND.

Mr. LABOUCHERE moved a preliminary resolution on which to found a Bill for the regulation of the Merchant Seamen's Fund. The right hon. gentleman gave a history of the foundation of this fund, in 1746, when it was established as a provision for disabled merchant seamen, and for the widows and orphans of those who had been drowned or killed in the merchant service—a purpose that it was enabled to fulfil by means of large subscriptions, and the imposition of 1s. on captains and of 6d. on seamen. He traced the fortunes of the fund down to 1833, when the act was passed under which it now exists. By this act an imposition of 2s. was laid on captains, and 1s. on seamen, and all widows and orphans of merchant seamen were allowed to claim pensions. But, in consequence of the total cessation of those large subscriptions that first mainly supported it, the fund was on the brink of bankruptcy—and, had as was its condition at present, its prospect was worse. The right hon. gentleman said he proposed by his bill to consolidate the management of the fund, and to place its administration in the hands of the Trinity House, to which would be joined two officers of the Board of Trade. He also proposed that the pensions should be equal, and that the seaman should not receive less than 6d. a day. He proposed also to raise the contribution of the sailors from 1s. a month to 1s. 6d., and to revert to the original rule of the fund, which confined the pensions to the widows and orphans "of seamen who had been drowned or killed in the merchant service." There would still be a deficiency of £30,000 a year: and this, he proposed, should be contributed by the State.

Mr. HUME condemned the scheme. He insisted that one shilling a ton on all vessels would pay all the lighthouse dues, and furnish a fund ample for providing for seamen, their widows and orphans.

Sir G. CLERK, Mr. FAGAN, Sir W. Clay, Mr. Cardwell, and Mr. Headlam criticised the scheme shortly, and the resolution was agreed to.

TONNAGE OF MERCHANT SHIPPING.

On the motion of Mr. LABOUCHERE, a resolution on which to base a bill for the regulation of the admeasurement of the tonnage and burden of merchant shipping was also agreed to.

THE FRANCHISE IN IRELAND.

Sir W. SOMERVILLE moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the laws which regulate the qualification and registration of Parliamentary Voters in Ireland. The bill, he said, was substantially the same as that previously introduced by him, and by it he proposed to substitute a uniform franchise on an £8 rating in counties, towns, and boroughs, in lieu of the present various descriptions of qualifications.

Mr. A. STAFFORD regretted, that, considering the miserable social condition of the Irish people, the Government did not first propose measures to Parliament for the amelioration of that condition, rather than a merely political measure which, however necessary, was of far less pressing urgency.

Mr. H. HERBERT remarked that any franchise based on the present unequal Poor-law valuation in Ireland must fail.

Leave was given to bring in the bill; also, a bill to shorten the duration of elections in Ireland, and for establishing additional places for taking the poll thereat.

On the motion of Sir G. GREY, a committee to inquire into the rules and discipline established with regard to the treatment of prisoners in gaols and houses of correction in England and Wales was agreed to, after a speech from Mr. CHARLES PEARSON.

LORD NAAS moved the extension of the inquiry to Ireland; and after a discussion the House divided

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

On the motion of Lord MONTEAGLE, the County Cess (Ireland) Bill was read a second time, and ordered for committal on Thursday

CONVICTS AT THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

In answer to some observations from Lord STANLEY, relating to the recent convict controversy at the Cape,

Earl GREY observed that the order in Council, which had now been revoked, was never intended as the foundation of a system. The Government had no intention of transmitting convicts to any colony which had not expressed its willingness to receive them. But there were special circumstances of difficulty attending the disposal of the Irish defenus in Bermuda, who were very different from the ordinary class of convicts—having been sentenced to transportation for offences under the pressure of the instigation arising from the late famine, and for whom it was thought no unfairness towards the inhabitants of the Cape to provide an asylum in the colony.

Lord BROUGHAM, without expressing any opinion as to the question of right or wrong between the Government and the Cape colonists, denounced the cruelty practised upon the convicts. The worst part of their punishment had been prolonged for many weeks by their confinement on board the Neptune, whilst the controversy was kept unsettled.

Lord DENMAN had on his table a Bill for shortening and rendering more plain and intelligible the language used in Acts of Parliament.

The Bill was read a first time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

Mr. HUME presented several petitions relating to Church government, including one for the better distribution of ecclesiastical revenues, so as to afford more adequate incomes to poor curates.

Mr. MILNER GIBSON postponed to the 26th inst. his motion for the repeal of the newspaper stamp and advertisement duties, and the excise on paper.

Mr. W. J. FOX gave notice of a motion for a committee of inquiry into the state of education in England and Wales.

THE COLONIES.

Sir W. MOLESWORTH, approving of the principles recently announced by the Government for the Colonial policy, regretted that, in practice, those principles had been so imperfectly carried out. The hon. member then detailed his notice of his intention to move several amendments when the bill now before the House came on for debate, tending to enlarge the popular element in the proposed colonial institutions, and limit the authority of the Colonial-office.

EXCLUSION OF ROMAN CATHOLICS FROM JURIES.

Mr. SADLER moved for a select committee to inquire into the facts connected with the striking of a Special Jury in a civil case of "Callanan against Cameron," in which Mr. Kemmis, the Crown Solicitor in Ireland, had struck off the names of all the Catholics from the jury-list. He went through the names of the excluded gentlemen, bearing specific testimony to the private merits of each, and dwelt at very great length upon the injustice and impolicy of this treatment of Catholics.

Mr. SCULLY seconded the motion

Mr. HATCHELL (the Solicitor-General for Ireland) protested against a discussion arising upon an action which was yet before the tribunals. He resisted the motion as highly objectionable.

Mr. SADLER explained that his motion was designed to open the general question.

Mr. SCULLY supported the motion, as called for to repair the insults offered to the Catholics of Ireland.

Mr. NAPIER commented on the injurious results of perpetually mixing up religious differences with questions where they had no proper place.

Mr. FAGAN regretted that the bad practice of jury-packing still prevailed in Ireland

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL objected, that the discussion, if it proceeded further, would seriously interfere with the administration of justice in the Irish courts

Mr. HUME said, there was no fair parallel between the English and the Irish law courts. The administration in the country was pure, and the jurors impartial. In Ireland the very reverse was the case. No peace was to be hoped in that part of the empire until such abuses were fully remedied.

Mr. SADLER said he would not go to a division; so thus a House, which was, in fact, at the time within the limits of a "count out," but thought that his proposition had been met upon technical points, while its principles were left untouched.

The motion was withdrawn.

Mr. HUME moved for returns of the present condition and past experience of the Indian trigonometrical and maritime surveys, and of the lighthouses and charts, &c. in and of the Indian and China coasts.—Ordered.

LAW REFORM.

The Process and Practice (Ireland) Bill was read a second time, after some observations from Mr Napier relative to the compensations for abolished offices.

The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill being proposed for a second reading,

Mr. TURNER lodged that the scheme of remedy proposed in the bill would but increase the evils of delay and expense, and i.e Chancery proceedings which it was designed to cure. He had a bill in preparation for the reform of the English Chancery, which was far superior in its mechanism. To prove this position, the hon. member dissected at some length the various clauses of the Government measure, which he pronounced a disgrace to legislation.

Sir J. ROMILLY defended the clauses of his bill.

Mr. NAPIER was proceeding to address the House, when the debate came to an end by a "count out," at a quarter to ten o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House met at two o'clock instead of noon, on account of its being Ash Wednesday.

Mr. FREWEN moved the second reading of the Highways (District Surveyors) Bill, but after a short discussion it was postponed to the 6th of March.

The Irish Fisheries Bill was also postponed to the same day.

COUNTY REPRESENTATIVE BOARDS OF TAXATION.

Mr. M. GIBSON moved the second reading of the County Rates and Expenditure Bill, the object of which, he said, was to carry out the principle of representation with taxation. He did not ask the House to pledge themselves to the details, and he expressed his willingness to allow the bill to be referred to a select committee.

Mr. SPOONER objected to the second reading then, on the ground that hon. members had not had time to examine it. The bill was only delivered two or three days ago from the press, and the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. STANFORD denied that the principle of representation accompanying taxation was raised by this bill; if it were, he would approve of the second reading.

Sir G. GREY was not prepared to express anything like a final opinion on the bill, and thought the postponement of the discussion was a very fair request, considering that the bill had only been in the hands of hon. members a couple of days. It was one of great magnitude, and should not be decided on without due deliberation.

Mr. HUME considered a delay on this question equivalent to defeat.

Sir R. PEEL recommended postponement.

Mr. M. GIBSON acquiesced, and asked the First Minister to give up a Government night.

Mr. HORSMAN required to know if the Government were favourable to the principle of representation accompanying taxation.

After a few observations from Mr. HENLEY and Mr NEWDEGATE,

Lord J. RUSSELL said he could not give a Government night, as he had hardly a sufficient number at his disposal for the business before the House; but he considered a delay would be advantageous in enabling the country to judge of the merits of the bill. He was so strongly in favour of the introduction of the principle of representation with taxation in county rates and expenditure, that he would give his support to the second reading of the bill, but without pledging himself in the least to the details.

The debate was adjourned to the 6th of March.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS BILL.

Mr. C. LEWIS moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the laws relative to the management of the Highways in England and Wales. The hon. gentleman described the evils arising from want of economy and due distribution in the expenditure, and from the small districts that had the charge of the highways, and explained the details of the bill. The principle of his measure was compulsory combined management for districts of parishes or townships, with paid surveyors; the districts to be formed on the territorial divisions established under the Poor-law, and to be placed under the management of boards of guardians.

Sir R. PEEL questioned the policy of confiding the management of the highways to the boards of guardians, and of taking the districts established for the purposes of poor relief. His thought the country might be divided into new districts, having regard to railways, and he believed that the ratepayer would have more confidence in a body of independent way-wardens elected by themselves. The right hon. baronet, however, cordially approved of the principle of a compulsory combined management of highways.

After a few observations from Mr. Frewen, Mr. Rice, Sir W. Jolliffe, Mr. Deedes, Mr. S.aney, Sir H. Willoughby, and Mr. E. B. Denison, leave was given to bring in the bill, which was read a first time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The Marquis of LONDONDERRY deprecated Lord Stanley's motion with respect to the Dalry Fire affair, as calculated to increase the excitement now existing in that portion of Ireland.

Lord STANLEY disclaimed any wish to add to existing agitation.

Lord LUCAN moved for returns relative to the administration of Poor Law Unions in Ireland by paid guardians, and severely censured the working of the Poor Law system in that country by paid officials.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE acceded to the motion, and their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

Mr. EWART moved for leave to bring in a Bill to enable Town Councils to establish public libraries and museums.

Mr. BROTHERTON seconded the motion, which was agreed to.

MINISTERS' MONEY IN IRELAND.

Mr. FAGAN then moved for a Committee of the Whole House, to take into consideration the law relating to the tax called "Ministers' money," levied for a provision for Protestant ministers in certain corporate towns in Ireland.

Sir G. GREY opposed the motion, and moved the previous question, which, after a short conversation, was carried, on a division, by 76 to 35.

PENAL SETTLEMENTS.

Mr. ADDERLEY moved for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal the act conferring the power of selecting Colonies for Penal Settlements on the Crown, and to vest such power in Parliament.

Sir GEORGE GREY opposed this motion, on the ground that it would only tend to tie up the hands of Government, who were already sufficiently embarrassed with the question of transportation, the difficulties of which would be augmented tenfold by such a measure.

Sir W. Molesworth, Mr. Aglionby, and Mr Hume supported the motion; and the Attorney-General, Mr. Law, and Lord John Russell, opposed it.

Mr. ADDERLEY having replied,

The House divided, when the motion was rejected by 110 to 32; being a majority of 78 in favour of Government

Mr. PUSEY obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the better regulation of the relation between Landlord and Tenant. Adjourned.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

GREAT WESTERN.—February 14: Half-yearly Meeting: London: Charles Russell, Esq., in the chair.—A report was presented, which stated that the result of the half-year's traffic, after deducting the rents and balance of interest paid, was to leave £196,329 9s. 11d. at the disposal of the proprietors, out of which the directors recommended the payment of a dividend at the rate of four per cent. per annum, and the carrying over of the balance of £39,709 8s. 11d. to the credit of the next half-year's account. The directors had entered into an arrangement for taking the sole control of the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth line, by which the expense of a separate establishment for that line would be saved. By this arrangement, also, the holders of the Wilts Company would be secured an annuity of four per cent. on their shares, subject to an increase whenever the Great Western Company paid more than eight per cent. The negotiations with the South Wales Company for a modified lease of the line, on its being reduced to a line from Gloucester to Swansea, and for saving expenditure in the railways between Oxford and Birmingham and Wolverhampton, were still proceeding with the respective companies; and the directors entertained a hope that they would be settled to the satisfaction of the proprietors. With regard to the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton line, an order had been received from the railway commissioners to complete it; but the matter required great consideration, and the proprietors might rely on every consideration being paid to their interests. The accounts showed that on the capital account the amount received on shares was £2,930,483 19s. 9d., and on debentures, bonds, &c., £4,326,668 17s. 7d., making together £13,287,157 17s., of which there had been expended £13,238,411 2s. 9d.; leaving a balance in hand of £48,746 14s. 3d. The report of the engineer stated that the Wilts line would be ready for opening in June in the course of the summer, and the Oxford and Rugby line as soon as the permanent way could be completed. The works and permanent way of the Bicester line were all in the best possible condition. The report was adopted. The report of the committee of consultation, presented about a fortnight since, referred to the directors with an instruction to carry out such of its recommendations as they could, and to state at the next meeting their reasons for not carrying those which they might think inadvisable: and the dividend was declared payable on the 1st of March. The meeting was then made special, when the paid-up shares were ordered to be converted into capital stock; and the agreement entered into with the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth Company confirmed. Thanks were voted to the chairman, the directors, and the committee of consultation.

BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.—February 14: Half-yearly Meeting: London: Sir Harry Verney, Bart., M.P., in the chair.—The report stated that the receipts had amounted to £941,850, and the expenses for the purposes of the Buckinghamshire Railway, £633,997; leaving a balance at the bankers' of £38,853. The works on the Banbury line were progressing rapidly to completion, and, but for some unexpected delay in obtaining the land for the station at Banbury, the line might be opened for traffic in March next. The works on the Oxford line had been very vigorously proceeded with, and that line might be opened as far as Islip early in the ensuing autumn. A bill for the amalgamation of the line had been brought in and read a second time in the House of Commons, and the directors hoped it would pass without opposition. Resolutions were then passed adopting the report, re-electing the retiring directors and auditors, and declaring a vote of thanks to the Rev. Mr. Freemantle, for his gratuitous services as minister on that line. The meeting was then made special for the purpose of reading and approving the bill. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the meeting.

LONDON AND BLACKWALL.—The report of the directors was issued on Thursday night, and states the gross revenue for the half-year at £94,303, the expenditure, £18,849, leaving a surplus of £5453, which, with £3160 for the rental from the previous account, of £3162, admits of the payment of a dividend of 1s. 6d. a share, free of Income-tax. The directors state that they have been unable to come to any arrangement with the Eastern Counties Company for the use of the Tilbury extension line, and they have been compelled to apply to Parliament for power to open the City terminus on their own account.

DIRECT INDIAN RAILWAYS.—TO THE EDITOR.—On Saturday the Master in Chancery Sir W. Horne proceeded with the list of shareholders in this undertaking, and placed upon the list as liable several of the provisional committee, on the ground of their having lent their names to the public promotion of the scheme.

DENDRE VALLEY.—An order in Chancery has just been issued for the winding up of this company's affairs

RAILWAY ACTS FOR 1849.—From a return just made to an order of the House of Commons, it appears that during the past session thirty-four railway acts were obtained, of which four were for amalgamations, leases, &c.; three, purchase, &c. of canals, docks, piers, harbours, &c.; five, extension of time and sundry amendments of acts; four, deviations, extensions, and other works requiring new capital; six, branches requiring new capital: one for the dissolution of a company (the East Lothian Central); and five for additional capital for works previously authorised. The total decrease of mileage occasioned by the above acts is 6 miles 70¼ chains; the total increase of capital, £2,960,900; and of loans, £584,832; together, £3,545,832. Two acts were also passed incorporating companies for railways in India: viz. the Great Indian Peninsular, with a capital of £500,000, and power to borrow £166,666; and the East Indian, with a capital of £2,000,000.

RAILWAY RECEIPTS.—From a return just published by order of the House of Commons, it appears that for the year ending the 30th of June, 1848, the total receipts on the railways, the length of railway at the close of the year being 2343 miles, were £6,209,714, or in round numbers, £2650 per mile: for the year ending June 30, 1849, with 2765 miles open, £7,109,697 or £2736 per mile: for the year ending June 30, 1847, with 3603 miles open, £8,310,886, or £2362 per mile; for the year ending June 30, 1848, with 4478 miles open, £9,933,552, or £2218 per mile; and for the year ending June 30, 1849, with 5447 miles open, £11 260,501, or £2056 per mile. We may observe that, as we have taken the number of miles open on the last day of each period for our calculations, the amount actually earned per mile will not be perfectly accurate—which only could be obtained by a series of averages, for which the return does not afford sufficient material; but it is sufficiently close to enable our readers to judge of the fluctuations in the amount of traffic as the extension lines have been opened up.

RAILWAY BILLS ON STANDING ORDERS.—On Monday the standing orders were declared to be complied with in the following cases:—Dundalk and Enniskillen Railway, for extension of time as to the line between Castleblayney and Ballibay, fixing the capital at £406 800 in 1356 shares of £300 each, extinguishing 1440 shares, with power to borrow one-third part of the amount of the capital. The Glasgow, Kilmarnock, and Ardrossan, for extension of time, abandonment of works, and reduction of capital. South Staffordshire, for power to lease. The Select Committee of Standing Orders, to whom all cases of non-compliance from the Courts of Examiners were referred, report that the standing orders may be dispensed with in the following cases: West Cornwall Railway; Cambridge and Stamford Junction Railway; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, and Birmingham and Oxford and Great Western Railways; South Wales (No. 2) Railway; Shrewsbury and Hereford Railway; Exeter and Crediton Railway, and Northern Union Railway.

VICTORIA DOCKS (OPPOSITE WOOLWICH).—On Monday the standing orders were declared to be complied with by the promoters of the measure, for the construction of a dock on the north side of the Thames.

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.—HONESTY REWARDED.—It appears the number of articles returned by the 67 cabs employed at the Euston-square station, for the past year, is 381, consisting chiefly of carpet-bags, wrappers, coats, umbrellas, and money. Of the articles, 115 were claimed by the owners; the remainder has been deposited at the Excise Office, according to law. The finance committee of the London and North-Western Company have given, "as a mark of the directors' approval of their conduct," a gratuity to 12 of the men who returned money paid to them in mistake.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

LONDON UNION ON CHURCH MATTERS.

The committee of this union have issued the accompanying papers, urging upon the members of the Church the necessity of prompt and united action on the matter referred to. They suggested that the resolutions should be adopted, and then they should be enclosed with the address to the Archbishop of the province, and to the Bishop of the diocese, as numerously signed as possible. The petition to the Queen may be adopted in whole or in part, as deemed most expedient:—

"The committee earnestly urge on members of Convocation to consider whether the time has not arrived when, according to the Royal promise prefixed to the Thirty-nine Articles, Convocation ought to deliberate respecting the question now before the Privy Council, which vitally affects the doctrine of the Church.

"The petition should be written (not printed) on paper or parchment, and six signatures at least should be signed on the paper or parchment on which the petition is written; other signatures may be written on other paper and appended."

Resolved—

1. That the Universal Church alone possesses, by the commission and command of its Divine Founder, the power of defining in matter of doctrine; and, subject to this same, the Church of England alone possesses, within its sphere, the power of interpreting and declaring the intention of such definitions as the Universal Church has framed.

2. That a power to interpret formularies of the Church by a final judicial sentence—the synods of the Church not being, in practice, admitted to declare the doctrine of the Church, irrespective of such sentences—becomes in effect a power to declare in matters of doctrine.

3. That by the suit of Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter, now pending by appeal in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, as well as by the case of Escott v. Mastin, in the year 1842, it appears that the Crown, through a court constituted by act of Parliament alone, exercises a power to confirm, reverse, or vary, by a final judicial sentence, the decisions and interpretations of the Courts of the Church in matters of doctrine.

4. That in the present state of the law nothing hinders but that an interpretation which shall have been judged to be unsound by the Courts of the Church may be finally declared to be sound by the said Judicial Committee; or that a person who shall have been judged to be unfit for cure of souls by the spiritual Courts may be declared to be fit for cure of souls by the civil power.

5. That the exercise of power in such matters, under such state of the law, endangers the public maintenance of the faith of Christ.

6. That the assertion of such a state of things is a grievance of conscience; and that this grievance is aggravated by the fact that the members of the Judicial Committee are not necessarily members of the Church of England.

7. That, although the fullest confidence may be placed in the integrity and legal ability of the Judges in the case now pending, nevertheless no judgment pronounced by them, either one way or the other, can be accepted by the Church.

8. That, for the redress of the said grievance, the following steps are necessary:—

(1) That the Church in Convocation or Synod have licence to deliberate for the special purpose of framing a proper appellate tribunal, for determining all questions of doctrine, and other matters purely spiritual

(2) That an act of Parliament be passed, for the purpose of making the judgments of such tribunal binding on the temporal courts of Christ's realms.

(3) That the acts of Parliament relating to the Privy Council be so amended as to exempt questions of doctrine and other matters purely spiritual from the cognisance of the Privy Council.

The paper concludes with a form for a petition to her Majesty.

OXFORD.

MATHEMATICAL SCHOLARSHIPS.—The Examiners appointed by the trustees of the Mathematical Scholarships give notice that an examination will be holden in the schools, on Monday, the 11th of March, and the following days, for the purpose of electing one Senior and one Junior Scholar. Gentlemen who desire to offer themselves as candidates are requested to call with certificates of their standing, the consent of the head or viceregent of their college or hall, and (for the Senior Scholarship) of their having passed the examination for their degree, if they have not taken the degree of B.A.—on Professor Powell, New College-lane, on Wednesday, the 6th, at two o'clock. The Junior Scholarship is open to all members of the University who have not exceeded nine terms from their matriculation inclusively. The Senior Scholarship is open to all Bachelors of Arts, or those who have, at least, passed their public examinations, and have not exceeded the twenty-sixth term from their matriculation inclusively.

CAMBRIDGE.

THE BURNEY PRIZE.—The late Mr. Richard Burney, M.A., Christ's College, having signified his intention of founding an annual prize, not exceeding £100, for the best English essay "on some moral or metaphysical subject, on the existence, nature, and attributes of God, or on the truth and evidence of the Christian religion;" and his intention having been carried into effect by his sister and executrix, Miss Jane Caroline Burney, the Vice-Chancellor has given notice that the subject for the present year is "The unity of design, which pervades the successive dispensations of religion recorded in the Scriptures, is an argument for the truth of revelation." The candidates for the prize are to be Bachelors of Arts in their first year of standing; and the essays are to be sent in to the Vice-Chancellor on or before the 12th of November, 1850, with the names of the respective authors sealed up.

VACANCIES AND SALARY PRIZES.—The sum of £1050, Three per Cent. Consols, was, on the 31st ultimo, transferred to the Master, Fellows, and Scholars of Trinity College, to found two annual prizes of fifteen guineas each, to be called the Dealtry Prizes, in commemoration of the high esteem in which the late Welsh Bingham, D.D., Archdeacon of Surrey, and formerly Fellow of Trinity College, was held by his friends and former pupils. Amongst the contributors to this fund are the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, the Bishops of London, Winchester, Bangor, Ely, Lichfield, and Gloucester and Bristol; the Lord Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Baron Parke; the Dean of Winchester, the Warden of New College, Oxford; the Master and Senior Dean of Trinity College, Cambridge, &c.

PREFERMENTS.—The following preferments and appointments have taken place:—The Rev. J. S. Beresford, Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, to be a Minor Canon of Peterborough Cathedral; the Rev. T. R. Dickinson, to Bengeworth, in the Rural Deanery of Leyland, Deanery of Lapland, Diocese of Durham; the Rev. D. Parry Thomas, to the Rectory of Llanmaes; the Rev. Alexander Irwin, to the Rectory of Armagh; the Rev. Edward Jones, to the Rectory of Gwaenysgor, Flintshire; the Rev. Edward Osborne, to the Vicarage of Ashchurch, Essex; the Rev. William Martin, to the Vicarage of Grantchester; the Hon. and Rev. Charles Frederick Octavius Spencer, to the Vicarage of Cumnor, Berks; the Rev. John Barbarin Johnson, to the Vicarage of Ashby, Holwell, Leicestershire.

VACANCIES.—Trefonen P. C., Denbighshire; dio. of St [illegible]; pat., Lord [illegible]; value, about £40l, with residence; pat., Earl of Abergavenny; Rev. W. Barlee, dec. Navestock V., Essex; dio. Rochester; val. £422, with residence; pats., Trinity Coll., Oxford; Rev. J. Ford, dec. Sandhurst P. C., Berks; dio. Oxford; val. £72, with residence; pat., Bishop of Oxford; Rev. J. H. Brasier, dec. Barton St. David C., Somerset; dio. Bath and Wells; stipend £60; pat., V. of Barton St. David.

SISTERS OF MERCY.—The advocates for the introduction of this invaluable order from the bosom of the Anglican Church have lately received an accession of strength for which, probably, they were scarcely prepared. At the recent anniversary of the German Hospital in London, the healths of the Lord Bishop of Manchester, and of the other English clergy who supported the institution, having been drunk, the Right Rev. Prelate, in returning thanks for himself and the clergy, spoke with great force, and with a sincere conviction, on the benefits which were likely to accrue to English charitable institutions by the introduction into them of Protestant Sisters of Mercy. He had often admired the Roman Catholic Sisters of Mercy. He was free to confess widely though he differed from the followers of that persuasion he honoured and respected a Roman Catholic if he was sincere in his religion. That women should devote themselves to the Christian duty of visiting and comforting the sick, was originally and genuinely Christian. It was not enough to tend the diseased and still cited, to assuage the aching temps of those bodies, and to smooth the pillow under their drooping heads. Those who watched beside the bed of suffering and death had a higher, a more important, a more sacred duty to perform. They ought to enlighten, to comfort, and to speak words of love and peace. This the Roman Catholics had understood; and ought we, who owned the same obligations, but to whom our religion held out a higher and a purer hope, turn away from the sufferings of the soul, and confine our care and attention to the body? Such a course of action would be unworthy of the principles of Protestantism. He was aware that so narrowing a subject was likely to grate on the feelings of the com[illegible] dressing it on as he did, he felt it a duty to ex[illegible] conviction, a[illegible] ness to the beneficial influence of the Protestant Sisters of Mercy, a[illegible] the example of the German Hospital at Dalston.

FLOATING RAILWAY ACROSS THE FORTH, BETWEEN GRANTON AND BURNTISLAND.

On Tuesday week this very novel and interesting portion of the Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee Railway was opened for public traffic, and we were present on the occasion. In a trial passage upwards of twenty loaded railway waggons, and a passenger carriage, in which were several of the directors and their friends, were put on board at Burntisland, and conveyed across to Granton, and the experiment was completely successful. The vessel, or ship, was only half loaded, there being no more carriages at hand to put on board. With a strong wind from the north-west, and a heavy swell in consequence of the tide running against the wind, the vessel behaved remarkably well, were the water always smooth; but, in stormy weather, it would have required protection from expensive piers and lattice. The method which has answered so well, and is found to be so economical, was suggested and executed under the direction of Mr. Bouch, the manager of the line.

The Railway may be thus briefly described:—Alongside the piers at Burntisland and Granton are placed two lines of rails, the same gauge as the main line. Upon this incline is placed a heavy moveable platform, 61 feet in length, by 31 feet in breadth, framed of timber, and resting upon four malleable iron girders, 36 feet long, constructed of boiler-plate, spanning the projecting rails, and also over without change of carriage; thus, in a manner, establishing a continuation of the railway.

To give an idea of his undertaking and the difficulties connected with it, it should be explained that the tide rises about twenty feet, so that a vessel on a level with the quay at high water would be a long way below it at low water. Some means must, therefore, be adopted for putting the waggons on board. Hydraulic or steam cranes, we believe, were suggested for this purpose, but were found to be objectionable, as being a slow process, expensive, and apt to damage the carriages. A floating bridge was also suggested; that is, a set of girders and beams, with the one end hinged on shore, and the other end floating on the water. This is in use at Ardrossan, and has been found to answer well; but, in stormy weather, it would have required protection from expensive piers and lattice. The method which has been adopted is, we think, the most simple and economical that could be devised. It consists of a platform, or inclined plane, which is lowered from the vessel to the pier, and which is raised from the pier to the vessel, by means of a winch on each side, or a stage on the arrival and departure of the vessel, by means of a winch on each side, or a stage on each side of the vessel, worked by the engines on board. The platform, which is 61 feet long, and 31 feet broad, is made to rise and fall to suit the several heights of the tide, by means of a small stationary steam-engine, which is also employed in moving the trucks off and on board the vessel. The platform is made to rise and fall with the tide, and is then secured as a pier. The engine and boiler are placed on the platform, and are moved with it. The whole of the machinery is worked by a fireman and engineer.

The Railway and the engines were constructed by Mr. Robert Napier, of Glasgow. Notwithstanding the novelty of the construction, it is very different from sea-going vessels generally, the whole is finished in the most complete manner, and reflects the highest credit on the abilities of that eminent engineer.

A few of the gentlemen connected with the line, along with the contractors, celebrated the opening of the railway by a dinner in the Waterloo Rooms, Edinburgh, on the evening of the 5th inst. Mr. Learmonth, M.P., chairman of the company, presided, and was supported on the right by Mr. Bouch, the engineer at the Granton Hotel. The duties of chairman were discharged in the most able manner by Mr. John Anderson, the efficient contractor for the working of the ferries.

The Railway is now in full operation, a number of trains passing daily along the east side of Granton Pier, with the landing-slip and apparatus drawing off a train from the shore. This is beautifully managed, by working one of the engines ahead, and the other astern.

We understand that it was no sooner advertised that goods would be taken across the Forth by a steamer, than 600 tons of carnips were offered them by a commencement.

COLOURS OF THE 31ST REGIMENT PLACED ABOVE THE MONUMENT TO THE OFFICERS, IN CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.

On Monday last, the day following the fourth anniversary of the battle of Sobraon, the old colours of the gallant 31st Regiment were, by permission of the Dean and Chapter, placed in the nave of Canterbury Cathedral, immediately above the marble testimonial, executed by Mr. Richardson, the sculptor, to those of the Regiment who fell on the Sutlej.

From the records of the Regiment, about to be published by Mr. Cannon, of the Adjutant-General's-office, we find these colours were presented in 1827, at Meerut, in the East Indies, by Lady Amherst, Lady of the Governor-General of India. The Colours were borne through the Afghanistan campaign, in 1843; and the Sutlej, in 1845-46. In this last campaign, twenty-six officers and upwards of 600 men were killed and wounded; and at Sobraon, both officers bearing these colours—viz. Lieut. Tritton and Ensign Jones—were mortally wounded, as recorded on silver plates inserted on the staves.

On the return of the Regiment to England, new Colours were presented by his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, at Dublin, in 1848. Subsequently, Lieutenant-Colonel Spence, till lately commanding, in the name of the officers, offered the old Colours to the Dean and Chapter of Canterbury Cathedral, to be placed over their testimonial; and it having been unanimously resolved to receive them, the sculptor, by order of the officers, and accompanied by Lieutenant Tunbrell (who, it may be remembered, was dangerously wounded at Sobraon), in the presence of the Venerable Archdeacon Croft, the Canon in residence, assisted by Mr. Austin, the surveyor to the Cathedral, carefully deposited the Colours, now historical records of a stirring past, solemnly but quietly, and without either pomp or parade, over the monument, so as in no way to interfere with the architecture, but to add equally to the appearance of the testimonial and nave of the Cathedral.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

RUINS OF THE FRANCISCAN CONVENT, AT DUNWICH.

Dunwich is so enveloped in the halo of tradition, that he who ventures to elucidate its history by pursuing the path of topographical inquiry, must exercise unusual caution, lest he be misled. Unlike the ruined cities whose fragments attest their former grandeur, Dunwich is wasted, desolate, and void. Its palaces and temples are no more, and its environs present an aspect lonely, stern, and wild. From the discovery of Roman coins here, the idea of a Roman station was consequently adopted. With respect to its ecclesiastical history, we learn that Felix, the Burgundian Bishop, whom Sicebert, King of the East Angles, brought here to re-convert his subjects to Christianity, fixed his episcopal see at Dunwich, in the year 636. Three Bishops succeeded him, whose jurisdiction extended over the whole kingdom of the East Angles. At length the See was divided; and a Bishop for the northern part of the kingdom being placed at Elmham, the Bishop of Dunwich (Domoc or Dommoc, as it was then called) had the Suffolk portion only. After this division of the See, only eleven Bishops sat at Dunwich—the succession being prevented by the troubles that broke out, and which put an end to the Bishopric before it had continued 200 years. In Domesday Book, Dunwich was valued as paying £30 a year to the King, and 60,000 herrings. In King Stephen's time, it appears that the ships at Orford paid some kind of toll to Dunwich, which was then valued at 30s. per annum. In the reign of Henry II., Dunwich was a place of considerable notoriety, and is said to have been stored with riches of all sorts. In the first year of King John it had a charter of liberties, and a grant of the wrecks of the sea. This Monarch, among other things mentioned in this charter, granted to the burgesses the liberty of marrying their sons and daughters as they would. Here were certainly six if not eight parish churches: St. John's, which was a rectory, seems to have been swallowed up by the sea about the year 1540; St. Martin's, which was likewise a rectory; as were also St. Nicholas and St. Peter's. St. Leonard's and All Saints' were impropriated; and the former was probably lost, as in a will made in 1450 the testator bequeaths his house in the parish anciently called St. Leonard's. The register of Eye mentions also the churches of St. Michael and St. Bartholomew in Dunwich, which were engulphed by the sea before the year 1331. Besides these churches, Weever notices three chantries, dedicated to St. Anthony, St. Francis, and St. Catherine: these were standing in the time of Henry VIII. There was also the Temple Church, which probably belonged to the Templars, and afterwards to the Hospitalers, who had a good estate in this part. The ruins of a noble ancient church, belonging to St. James's Hospital, were lately visible; and there was another church built for the use of the hospital, called Maison Dieu.

Besides these churches, there were at Dunwich two houses of Franciscan and Dominican friars; each of which foundations had their respective churches. The walls of this house still remain, within an enclosure of seven acres, with the arches of two out of the three gates by which they were entered, and are shown in the accompanying view. There is nothing remarkable in their construction; but, being covered with ivy, they form a picturesque object.

Dunwich seems to have been at the height of its prosperity in the reign of Henry III., when it paid one hundred marks to the King's tax; though, during the same reign, the sea made so great a breach here, that the King wrote to the Barons of Suffolk to assist the inhabitants in stopping it. It is observable that the coast is here destitute of rocks; and the principal part of the soil, which being built on a hill, consisting of loam and sand of a loose nature, it is not surprising that the surges of the sea, beating against the foot of the precipice, easily undermined it. The church of St. Felix and the cell of monks were lost very early. In the first year of Edward III. the old port was rendered entirely useless; and before the twenty-third year of that King's reign, great part of the town, with upwards of 400 houses which paid rent to the fee-farm, with certain shops and windmills, were devoured by the sea. After this, the church of St. Leonard was overthrown; and in the fourteenth century the churches of St. Martin and St Nicholas were also destroyed by the waves. In 1540, the church of St. John Baptist was taken down; and in the same century the chapels of St. Anthony, St. Francis, and St Catherine were overthrown, with the south gate and guild gate, and not one quarter of the town left standing. In the reign of Charles I., the foundation of the Temple buildings yielded to the force of the sea, which in 1677 reached the Market-place. In 1680, all the buildings north of Maison Dieulane were demolished; and in 1702 the sea extended its dominion to St. Peter's Church, on which it was divested of the lead, timber, bells, &c., the walls only remaining, which tumbled over the cliff as the water undermined them; the Town-hall suffered the same fate. In 1715 the gaol was undermined; and in 1729 the farthest bounds of St. Peter's churchyard fell into the sea. Besides, the Cock and Hen Hills, which the preceding summer were upwards of forty feet high, had their heads levelled with their bases, and the foundation of St. Frances' Chapel was discovered.

All Saints', as shown in the accompanying view, is the only church of any portion is now standing. It was built of flint and freestone. The square tower is nearly entire; but of the body of the church only a portion of the exterior walls remains, and the cattle have grazed within its area. Part of this edifice was demolished, and its dimensions considerably reduced, about the year 1735. The new chapel of St. James stands at the N.W. of the town, within the grounds formerly belonging to the Hospital of St. James; and owes its foundation and completion to the munificence of the Barne family, in 1830.

Dunwich is now a mere village; it stands upon a cliff of considerable height, commanding an extensive view of the German Ocean, about five miles south of Southwold. H. W.

THE COUNTY HUNT BALL, AT READING.

THIS brilliant assembly took place on Thursday the 7th instant, in the handsome hall of the Literary, Scientific, and Mechanics' Institution, at Reading. The spacious room was characteristically decorated for the occasion with several pairs of noble antlers, groups of flowering plants and shrubs, and lighted by means of elegant chandeliers. At about eleven o'clock, when the company had assembled, the Hall presented a very gay appearance. The number of guests present were about two hundred; of the families of Alfrey, Brancker, Bazalgette, Bishop, Blount, Beach, Babington, Brunner, Brown, Best, Blandy, Conroy, Coome, Cripps, Cook, Crawshay, Cameron, Crosby, Dobinson, Du Cane, Eyston, East, Evans, Fowler, Fellowes, Fuller, Griffith, Greig, Gwyn, Gardner, Graham, Garth, Harper, Hayward, Hore, Homfrey, Hawkins, Hunter, Harrison, Hartley, Hand, Heathcote, Hanmer, Johnson, Jodrell, Jolliffe, Kendall, Lane, Leigh, Monck, Murray, Mainwaring, Mostyn, Mount, Molyneaux, Otway, Palmer, Pechell, Powys, Pigott, Pole, Riddle, Romaine, Russell, Rambottom, Stephens, Stocker, Smith, Shrewsbjie, Silcock, St. John, Sherson, Sclater, Sells, Sartin, Strong, Thoyts, Taylor, Upwood, Wells, Walmesley, Wyld, Weinholt, Wheler, Walsh. The music was excellent; the effective band, under the direction of Mr. Ireland, performed with great spirit. The refreshments were served by Messrs. Harris, of Reading, in their best style, and the whole entertainment passed off with great éclat.

The hall in which the Hunt Ball is annually held is a superb room, about 90 feet by 40 feet, with an elliptical ceiling, and lighted by eighteen large windows in the roof, giving an unbroken surface of wall round the entire room; except that the east end, over the platform, is ornamented by a handsome circular window of coloured glass. At the opposite end has recently been added a gallery or balcony, capable of accommodating 120 persons. The walls are papered in crimson and oak panels. The sound (which, before the erection of the gallery, was somewhat complained of) is now exceedingly good. The hall is one of the finest rooms in the provinces, and is a specimen of the public spirit of the townspeople, it having been erected by a capital of £3000, raised in £5 shares. Attached is a suite of rooms occupied by the Literary, Scientific, and Mechanics' Institution, who hold their meetings and lectures in the hall. A new musical society has recently given its first concert here, with a band of seventy local performers.

CONFLAGRATION AT MANCHESTER.—DESTRUCTION OF ALL SAINTS' CHURCH.

A fire broke out on Wednesday evening, the 6th instant, in All Saints' Church, Manchester, by which a great portion of the edifice was destroyed. The church is situated in Grosvenor-square, and surrounded by an extensive cemetery, enclosed by palisades: it was bounded on the north-west by Devonshire-street, south-east by Cavendish-street, the other sides fronting Oxford-road and Ormond-street. The fire was discovered about half-past five, by the daughter of one of the Apparitors. She immediately informed Mr. Hopkins, a son-in-law of the Rev. Dr. Burton, the incumbent, who, at the time, happened to be in the vestry; and, finding the girl's statement to be too true, he immediately gave the alarm at the station of the D division of police, Town-hall, Chorlton-upon-Medlock, immediately opposite the church. Mr. Superintendent Taylor lost no time in immediately despatching a messenger to the police-yard for the assistance of the fire-brigade, when Mr. Rose repaired to the scene of the disaster, accompanied by a strong body of men and seven fire engines. The engines were stationed in the yard attached to the church; four of them, the Vesta, Neptune, Mersey, and Weaverwich, were placed at the north-west or tower end of the building; the branch from the latter being taken up into the tower, which was, at one time, in imminent danger. The Thames, Niagara, and Ganges engines were situated at the south-east end of the church. A plentiful supply of water having been obtained, the men were dispersed over the various parts of the building. Jets were placed at the four corners of the interior; and it is to this judicious arrangement that the preservation of the galleries and a part of the organ are to be attributed. During the fire the wind blew with great violence from the north-west, which kept the flames from the tower. So great was the rapidity of the conflagration, that in a quarter of an hour from the discovery, the roof, which was composed almost entirely of timber, was one sheet of flame from end to end, and in less than two hours was completely consumed.

All Saints' Church was a handsome building, in the Grecian style of architecture; in plan it was an irregular octagon, having a handsome tower, with clock and bell, at the north-west end. It was built at the expense and by the exertions of Dr. (then Rev. Mr.) Burton, at a cost of £15,000, the only aid being derived from the purchase-money for pews. It was commenced in 1819, and was consecrated April 19, 1820, by Dr. Law, then Lord Bishop of Chester; and would accommodate 2000 persons, including 600 free sittings.

The main cause of the disaster seems to rest with those employed in erecting the church. Round the building are a quantity of what are technically termed "scaffolding holes." These, instead of being filled up with brick, had been covered by a piece of timber, or wooden wall-plate, running round the walls. The sexton of the church had in the course of the day been burning a quantity of holly, &c. (used for Christmas decoration), and it is probable that some of the embers from this had, by lodging in the flue, come in contact with the wall-plate, and so caused the conflagration. The damage is variously estimated at from £4000 to £7000, but it will probably not exceed £4500. Through the unremitting exertions of the firemen, the tower, with a great portion of the gallery, and some parts of the organ and pulpit, are saved, and a beautiful stained glass window has not sustained the slightest injury. Last autumn the church was new beautified, at an expense of £400; on which occasion two new stained glass windows, representing the Crucifixion and Ascension, were put up to the memory of Mrs. Burton, both of which are unfortunately destroyed. A meeting was held at the Town Hall on Monday, inviting the generous sympathy of the Manchester public to assist in restoring the sacred edifice.

A singular circumstance connected with this disaster is worthy of being recorded. On the morning after the fire, two marriages were fixed to take place in the church: the one by license, the other by banns. The party to be married by license at once proceeded to the Cathedral, where the ceremony was duly performed; but the other couple, unwilling to pay for a license, and, as it seemed, not willing to wait for the publication of banns in another church, insisted on the ceremony being proceeded with: and thus, surrounded by a band of helmeted and begrimed firemen, belted policemen, and a motley group of idlers, the steps leading to the altar strewn with fragments of the rails, blackened and charred timbers, tatters, &c., were this happy couple united in the bonds of holy matrimony—the Rev. Henry W. Garrett officiating.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1850.

THE temperate, able, elaborate, and highly interesting speech of Lord John Russell in explaining the policy intended to be pursued by the Government in reference to our colonial possessions, is a statement of the highest importance, and that will be perused with avidity in every quarter of the globe where Englishmen have stationed themselves. Lord John Russell is not of the number of those who consider colonies as incumbrances; on the contrary, he deems it both our duty and our interest to keep possession of them as long as we can, and that we should "persevere in promoting political freedom in them, so that if any of them arrive at such extent and power as to be capable of maintaining an independent position, it may be with amity and alliance with this country, by our having dealt fairly with them—trained them to fitness for self-government, and secured to ourselves the comfortable reflection that in their accession to the list of free nations we have contributed to the happiness of the world." Opinions will differ in all our colonies upon some of the means which we have formerly adopted, and upon those which under the auspices of Lord John Russell we are about to adopt, to secure these great objects; but, as regards a fundamental principles laid down by his Lordship, no one should imagine that neither at home nor in the colonies can there be any disagreement. "English colonists," he says, "carry out with them, wheresoever they go, their native rights and privileges." This, after all, is the great point. The right of self-government is the one thing required; and in proportion to the free scope given, or to the impediments thrown in the way of the exercise of that right, will be the satisfaction or dissatisfaction of our Colonial progeny. The Minister cannot see how the discussion between "freedom of Colonial legislation, subject to local laws, and Crown sanction in Imperial laws," can be defined by Act of Parliament, but thinks that the general rule should be, that while the Imperial Government represents the colony in all foreign concerns, in its domestic affairs it should rarely interfere, and never further than is clearly and decidedly necessary. The difficulty is, who shall decide upon the necessity—the colonists, or the Colonial-office (that, in the case of the Australians, may be separated from the scene of doubt by the distance of half the globe), or the British Parliament, equally distant, but less governed by personal considerations. This country is not fond of imitating the French in matters pertaining to government; but we might, nevertheless, take a hint from them in Colonial affairs. The French Colonies are integral parts of the French Republic, and send representatives to the Legislative Assembly in Paris, by the same right as the department of the Seine. It might, perhaps, conduce to the permanency of a good understanding between us and our Colonies, if Canada, Australia, the Cape, &c. were placed, in this respect, upon a similar footing, and represented in the British Legislature, like Middlesex or the city of London. This view of the subject has never yet been fully considered in England.

THE documents relative to our differences with Greece have been laid before the Legislative Assembly of the French Republic, but have not yet found their way officially before the British Parliament. The affair loses nothing of its abruptness, its impolicy, or its arrogance, in the new light thus thrown upon it, except in referring to the affair of M. Pacifico, the Jew, of Gibraltar, which occurred, not twenty-four years ago, as stated in some of the previously published accounts, but in the year 1847. So far the story is less ugly than it at first appeared to be. It seems, however, that our Government has incurred all this odium out of sheer wantonness; and that, having bullied Greece, and blockaded her ports for a few days, we have consented to accept the mediation of France, in so far, at least, as the claims of Mr Finlay for his garden, and of M. Pacifico for his house and furniture, are concerned. The more serious difference, relative to the islands of Cervi and Sapienza, does not appear to be included in the good offices of France. At least, we gather as much from the debate in the House of Lords on Monday night, when the Marquis of Lansdowne stated that "the question of those islands stood upon totally different grounds from the others, and that different orders had been sent out in relation to them, which might or might not have been acted upon." These orders were to take forcible possession of the two islands in dispute; and since Lord Lansdowne addressed the House upon the subject, intelligence has been received that these orders have been acted upon. Whether French mediation will actually extend to this part of the business, remains to be seen. It is doubtless creditable that we should consent to receive the good offices of France in this miserable dispute, and in so far the Government has shown a disposition to extricate itself without loss of time from a disagreeable position; but the reflection will force itself upon the minds of unimpassioned people, who think something of the dignity as well as of the abstract rights of Great Britain, that it would have been much better to have accepted this mediation before, instead of after, the commencement of hostilities. Whatever, in other respects, the issue may be, Great Britain has lost, and France has gained, the gratitude and good-will of Greece by the scrubble. We have shown ill-feeling, and France has shown good-feeling. We have been rash, impetuous, and unmerciful; France has been the contrary. It is not only Greece, but Europe, that will judge between the two.

THE Ceylon Committee has been re-appointed, after a smart debate, in which the various charges against the Colonial Office and Lord Torrington were severally affirmed and denied by the accusers and the friends of the Government. As that committee will immediately commence its labours, and give the results of them to the public as soon as they are completed, both the friends and the foes of our present system of Colonial Administration will act wisely, if they abstain from any further comment upon them.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

The Court returned to Buckingham Palace, from Windsor Castle, on Tuesday; the inclemency of the weather on the previous day having prevented her Majesty from making the journey on Monday, as originally arranged.

The incidents of the week in Court life have been comparatively few and uninteresting; the one exception being the second dramatic performance at Windsor Castle, on Friday last, at which a very large and distinguished party of the Nobility were present by Royal command. This feature in Regal hospitality is elsewhere noticed more fully.

On Saturday last the Prince Consort enjoyed the diversion of hunting. His Royal Highness was accompanied by Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. A. Gordon.

On Sunday, the Queen and the Prince Consort, with the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, attended Divine service in the private chapel of the Castle. In the evening of the same day, the Duchess of Kent and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar joined the Royal dinner-party.

On Monday, the unfavourable state of the weather had the effect of confining the Court to the Castle.

On Tuesday afternoon, her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, the Princess Alice, the Princess Helena, and the Princess Louisa, and attended by the Countess of Desart, Lady in Waiting; the Hon. Eleanor Stanley, and the Hon. Elizabeth Lennox, Maids of Honour in Waiting; the Marquis of Ormonde, Major-General Bouverie, Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey, Colonel the Hon. Alexander N. Hood, Colonel Buckley, Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. Alexander Gordon, and Mr. Birch, left Windsor Castle at ten minutes before three o'clock, for the station of the Great Western Railway, in Windsor, travelled by a special train to the terminus at Paddington, and from thence proceeded, with an escort of Light Dragoons, to Buckingham Palace. Where the illustrious party arrived a quarter before four o'clock. The Queen and Prince were received at Buckingham Palace by the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, the Marquis of Breadalbane, Lord Edward Fitzalan Howard, and Lord George Lennox.

On Wednesday the Duke of Wellington had an audience of the Queen at Buckingham Palace. In the evening the Lord Chancellor and Lady Cottenham, Lord George Lennox, and the Right Hon. Sir Francis and Lady Arabella Dering had the honour of dining with her Majesty and Prince Consort.

On Thursday, the Queen, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Alice, and the Princess Helena, visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, at Gloucester House. Her Majesty was attended by the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe, Lady in Waiting, and Colonel Buckley, Equerry in Waiting. In the evening her Majesty and the Prince Consort honoured the Haymarket Theatre with their presence. The Royal suite consisted of the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe, the Hon. Elizabeth Lennox, the Marquis of Ormonde, Colonel Buckley, and Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. Alexander Gordon.

The Countess of Mount Edgecumbe has relieved the Countess of Desart in her duties as Lady in Waiting to the Queen.

The Hon. Eleanor Stanley and the Hon. Elizabeth Lennox have relieved the Hon. Misses Kerr and Macdonald in their duties as Maids of Honour in Waiting to the Queen.

The Court is expected to remain at Buckingham Palace until after the accouchement of her Majesty, which is expected to take place during the month of April.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer is indisposed, and will be unable for some days to attend to public business in the House of Commons.

Sir Robert and Lady Peel, and Miss Peel, have arrived in Whitehall Gardens from Drayton Manor, for the season.

A marriage is shortly to take place between Colonel the Hon. St. Vincent Saumarez, only brother of Lord de Saumarez, and Miss Antoinette Northey, daughter of William Hopkyns Northey, Esq., of Wilton Crescent, and Orting House, Berks.

A matrimonial alliance is said to be on the tapis between the newly-elected Bishop of Norwich and the Hon. Amelia Murray, Maid of Honour to her Majesty, and sister to the Bishop of Rochester.

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—On Monday last were married, at St. Mary's, Bryanstone-square, by the Lord Bishop of Rochester, the Earl of Beauchamp, to the Honourable Catherine, third daughter of the Baroness Braye and Henry Conyer, Esq., of Stanford Hall, Leicestershire, and of Castle Conway, in Ireland, and widow of Henry Murray, Esq., youngest son of Lord George Murray.

THE EXHIBITION OF 1851.—His Royal Highness Prince Albert presided on Wednesday afternoon at a meeting of the chairman and members of committees of the Royal Commission for the Exhibition of 1851. The meeting was held at Buckingham Palace, at three o'clock, and was attended by Earl Granville, Lord Stanley, Sir Richmond Wentworth Shiffner, Charles Lyell, Sir Henry de la Beche, Mr. William Cubitt, Mr. Thomas F. Gibson, Professor Owen, Mr. Brunel, Mr. Pusey, M.P., and Dr. Royle. Mr. Scott Russell attended as secretary to the commission. Lieut.-Colonel Reid, Mr. Henry Cole, and Mr. Charles W. Dilke, jun., were in attendance as members of the executive committee. Colonel the Honourable Charles Grey, his Royal Highness's Private Secretary, also attended. The meeting broke up at twenty minutes before eight o'clock.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

THE NATIONAL LAND SCHEME.—O'CONNOR (M.P.) v. BRADSHAW.

On Thursday the trial of an action for libel was begun in this case before the Chief Baron and a special jury. The defendant (the proprietor of the Nottingham Journal) pleaded a justification.

Mr. Serjeant Wilkins opened the plaintiff's case by reading the alleged libel which was in the following terms:—

"The subscribers to the National Land Company, and the admirers of Feargus O'Connor, Esq., M.P. for Nottingham, who has wheedled the people of England, out of £160,000, with which he has bought estates and conveyed them to his own use and benefit, and who will now deprive us of witness the overthrow of this great political imposture, should order the Nottingham Journal, in which his excessive honesty in connexion with the Land Plan has been, and will continue to be, fearlessly exposed. The Nottingham Journal is the largest newspaper allowed by law; and is the best vehicle in this county or neighbourhood for advertisements, business information, and general news. Delivered everywhere early every Friday morning. Price only 1½d; or, by the quarter, 1s. 6d. Office, No. 4, Bridlesmith-gate, Nottingham."

The learned serjeant proceeded by observing, that, if ever there was a libel rendered undignified by the mode in which it was expressed, and the object for which it was disseminated, that was the one which he had read. It was a specimen of patriotism wrapped up in dirty paper. (A laugh.) All he should add, in connexion with it, was, let the defendant attempt to prove that libel if he dared.

Evidence was then given in the usual way, that the defendant, Mr. Bradshaw, is the registered proprietor of the Nottingham Journal, and that copies of the placard in question were obtained at defendant's office in Nottingham.

Mr. Roebuck addressed the Jury for the defendant, supporting the plea of justification.

The hearing of the case occupied the whole of Thursday and Friday (yesterday) but was not concluded when the Court rose on the latter day.

It is expected that the establishment at the Military Prison, Southsea Castle, will be removed, on the 1st of March, to be newly-erected one at Forton, near Gosport, which is calculated to hold 150 prisoners.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

ABUSES ON BOARD EMIGRANT SHIPS.

The Earl of MONTEAGLE asked if the Government had received any information of the cruelties alleged to have been committed on the female emigrants on board the barque Indian, during her voyage to Adelaide.

Lord GREY said that no official communication had been received by the Government on the subject; but it appeared from the usual organs of public intelligence, that it had been alleged that most disgraceful scenes had taken place, and that the authorities had instituted an investigation, and the noble Earl might rest assured that that investigation would be pursued with rigour, and that if parties had been guilty of any outrages they would be punished with the utmost rigour of the law. He admitted that cases of abuse had occasionally occurred on board emigrant-ships carrying out females, but in general the conduct of the officers of those ships had been exemplary. In every case in which abuse had occurred, when it had come to the knowledge of the Government, the Emigration Commissioners had been instructed to enter into the matter of complaints against the owners of those ships, and to prosecute the delinquents. He could assure their Lordships that no efforts were spared to guard against the recurrence of abuses on board female emigrant ships.

EDUCATION—MANAGING CLAUSES.

Lord STANLEY asked if the adoption of the managing clauses proposed by the Privy Council as the condition of receiving aid from the State was applicable to existing schools, or only to schools hereafter to be created? If only to schools hereafter to be erected, the extent of the injustice complained of by the Church would be greatly diminished.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said that there was no rule adopted which debarred the Committee of the Privy Council from considering fairly any application which might be made to the few existing schools for an annual allowance.

On the motion of the Earl of GLENGALL, some returns were ordered respecting the operation of the Encumbered Estates Commission in Ireland.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

CONTRACTS OF SUPPLIES FOR THE COLONIES.

Mr. SCOTT wished to inquire of the Under-Secretary of the Treasury whether any contracts had been entered into by the Government for establishing steam communication with the Cape.

Mr. HAYTER said that no such contracts had been entered into.

LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.

In reply to a question from Mr. CLEMENTS, it was stated that a Bill was in preparation for the amendment of the law regulating the property between landlord and tenant.

DANISH WAR—RENEWAL OF BLOCKADE

Mr. SANDARS asked if the noble Lord the Secretary for Foreign Affairs was not in his place, he should put the question to the noble Lord on Monday night; or, if he were not then present, to any Minister who might happen to be there.

Mr. DISRAELI said the question of which Mr. Sandars had given notice was as follows: "To ask the noble Lord the Secretary for Foreign Affairs if it be true that the Danish Government has intimated to some Power the intention of the 10th of July last; and, if so, whether the noble Lord considers as a natural consequence the renewal of the blockade of the Prussian ports of the Baltic and the Elbe." Now he (Mr. Disraeli) would ask the noble Lord the first Minister whether it was the Danish Government that had refused to renew the armistice?

Lord J. RUSSELL said, that the Danish Government had not refused.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.

Mr. HORSMAN said that, instead of the motion of which he had given notice, he should move for the production of the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Commission relative to the matter of the secretaries.

THE DISTRESSED POOR-LAW UNIONS (IRELAND).

Lord J. RUSSELL, in committee of the whole House, brought forward his plan for the relief of these Poor-law Unions in Ireland to which, under the recent relief acts, advances of money had been made by way of loans, some bearing interest and others not, and which were unable on account of their impoverished condition to repay those sums at present. He considered that it would lighten the burden of the poor-law, and enable it more effectually to fulfil the duties for repayment were extended, and he therefore proposed to consolidate all the debts of all the unions, taking interest were interest was due, and exempting from it where it was not paid; and to be charged to extend the repayment generally to a period of 40 years—and to advance a loan of £300,000 for the general purposes of assistance to the unions. The noble Lord moved resolutions embodying those principles, for the purpose of bringing a bill upon them, which, after some discussion, was agreed to, and the House resumed.

The Australian Colonies Government Bill was postponed to Monday.

The Court of Chancery (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.

Adjourned at twelve o'clock.

VALENTINE'S DAY.—Thursday was a very busy day at the Post-office, upwards of 22,000 letters above the ordinary daily average, making a total of upwards of 102,800, having been delivered. The increase was principally in the department of the Inland-office, which was considerably relieved from the labour imposed, by command of the Postmaster-General, the whole of the hands employed received a substantial repast of beef, bread, and beer.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

By our accounts of yesterday (Friday) from Paris, we learn that the public dissatisfaction continued to increase at what is regarded as the fixed determination of the Government to have the country placed under the control of the military; and the disarming of the guards, which had been ordered, was not sufficiently explained. It is expected that interpellations will be put in the Assembly to the Ministers, when they will have an opportunity of justifying the measure by assigning the reason for the resolution they have adopted.

The Conservative Electoral Committee have chosen Gen. de la Hitte, Gen. Fyal, Gen. d Harbonville, M Beuljan, M. Ferdinand Fey, Abbé Coquereau, and Count de Chasseloup-Laubat as the persons selected as candidates for Paris.

M Proudhon has been removed from St. Pelagie to the Conciergerie, but he is still under solitary confinement.

PORTUGAL.

The Pacha steamer, Captain Weeks, arrived yesterday with the Peninsular mail and accounts from Lisbon of the 9th inst., Oporto, the 10th inst., and Vigo, the 11th inst. The principal subject of interest is the tumultuous scene which took place in the Chamber of Peers on the 8th inst. It appears that at a previous sitting Count Lavradio had questioned Count Thomar upon the act of the Queen's name in an affidavit which had been made by him in the action filed against the London Morning Post, when it was agreed that the answer should be given on the day answer should be given on the day answer, every part of the Chamber was crammed with members and spectators, to learn how the Premier would escape from the charge. Upon Count Lavradio repeating his interrogatory, Viscount Laborim denied the right of Count Lavradio to put the question without the consent of the Chamber. The President maintained that Viscount Laborim's view was correct, and was strict accordance with the orders of the House. The Opposition stoutly denied that this was the rule; and the two parties were not slow in exhibiting the most angry feelings. The people in the galleries took part with Count Lavradio and his friends, and displayed unequivocal signs of dissatisfaction at the manner in which the supporters of Count Thomar endeavoured to shun inquiry. This dissatisfaction gave rise to confusion and uproar, which soon increased to a storm, when Count Thomar rose, and indignantly exclaimed, "Whatever Opposition requires is to be well pounded down; and it shall be by me." This arbitrary threat excited the utmost displeasure, and cries of "Shame!" "Off, off!" accompanied with yelling, howling, hissing, and stamping, continued for some time after the Session was suspended. At length partial order was restored, when the Chamber decided by twenty-seven voices against twenty-two that the interpellation should not be allowed. Count Lavradio afterwards moved the Session was suspended, but was interrupted by the Premier had been overruled, the Chamber should at least express its indignation at the mention of the Queen's name in the affidavit before adjourned to; and submitted a motion to that effect, which, however, was speedily rejected.

It is said that Count Thomar was ignorant of the Queen's name being inserted in the affidavit. Whether he was or not, his explanation appears to have been perfectly satisfactory to her Majesty, for he is much in favour at Court as ever; while the Duke of Saldanha, his formidable opponent, has been dismissed by the Queen from his office of High Steward.

Count Thomar has laid before the Chamber of Deputies his project for correcting the abuses of the press. It is of the most stringent kind.

SWITZERLAND.

Later accounts than those already published state that much excitement and alarm were experienced in the country by the refractory proceedings of the Radical party, who were employing every exertion to effect an insurrection, which they hoped would be coincident with a similar movement in Paris, Lyons, and Strasburg.

BARON ROTHSCHILD AND THE LONDON ELECTION.—Pursuant to the Act 11 and 12 Vict., c. 98, to amend the law for the trial of election petitions, notice has been given that a select committee to try and determine the matter of the petition, complaining of an undue election and return for the city of London, will be chosen by the general committee of elections on Tuesday, the 5th day of March, at three o'clock, in the afternoon, in committee room (lettered A) of the House of Commons. All parties interested are directed to attend the said general committee of elections, by themselves, their counsel, or agents, at the time and place above mentioned.

SUNDAY LABOUR IN THE POST-OFFICE.—The total number of petitions which have been presented to the House of Commons during the present session, against Sunday labour in the Post-office, amounts to 224, and the signatures to 26,226.

Within the last 35 years the Austrian commercial marine has received an addition of 4m lar-built ships amounting to 508 vessels, of 168,622 tons. This does not include sids either the small coasting and fishing vessels, which in 1847 amounted to 3,344, of 97,451 tons; or the steam marine of the Austrian Lloyd's which possesses 27 vessels, of 11,955 tons.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

ST. MARYLEBONE BANK FOR SAVINGS.—The twentieth annual general meeting of this institution was held on Thursday. The Rev. John Hume Spry, D D, in the chair. It appeared from the several reports read to the meeting, that during the past year no less than 2487 new deposits had been made; 20,383 deposit accounts remained open on the 20th of November last, of which 15,495 held balances averaging less than £3 1s. 4d. each. The balance due to depositors was stated to be £316,310 10s.

SOCIETY FOR IMPROVING THE CONDITION OF THE INSANE.—On Wednesday last, this society, at its annual meeting, distributed its rewards to those attendants on the insane whose testimonials of long service and good character and conduct were most satisfactory. The chief prizes were given to the attendants from the Middlesex Asylum.

PUBLIC DISPENSARY, BISHOP'S-COURT, LINCOLN'S INN.—A meeting of the governors and subscribers of this institution took place on Tuesday, at the Dispensary House, Bishop's-court, Richard Twining in the chair. The report stated that during the last quarter 1173 patients had been admitted to this dispensary, of which number 264 had been visited at their own homes. The advantages to the poorer classes of having a physician and surgeon attending them at their own homes could not be too highly appreciated, and the aid and efficient services this charity had effected in this particular had sufficiently demonstrated that this mode of assisting the poor was by far the most desirable and acceptable. The establishment was prosperous in every favourable point, and they fully anticipated a removal from their present quarters to a more eligible position.

LONDON ORPHAN ASYLUM.—The annual dinner, held in honour of this excellent institution, in aid of its funds, was held on Thursday, in the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, and was attended by nearly 150 gentlemen Viscount Hardinge occupied the chair, and was supported by Lieutenant-General Sir William Gomm, Sir Walter C. James, Lord Robert Grosvenor, the Honorable Rice Trevor, &c. After the customary loyal toasts, the chairman, in proposing success to the Orphan Asylum, directed particular attention to the unexclusive character of the charity, and considered it as a high compliment to the general utility of its institution, that the Duke of Wellington had presided on three similar occasions. There had already been upwards of 1830 orphans educated and fitted for intercourse with the world by the asylum, and from the yearly returns it was evident that its sphere of utility was annually increasing. Its healthy character was an important point in the chairman's speech; and it was gratifying to hear that during the late visitation of cholera, not a single case had occurred among the pupils. From funded property they derived an income of about £1600, but upwards of £7000 had annually to be made up by voluntary contributions, the expenses amounting to about £9000. The amount of subscriptions received on the present day has been read, which was much the same as that of last year, namely, about £1600. The noble chairman contributed 30 guineas, and £21 through a lady friend; Sir W. Gomm, £10 10s.; Dr. Outram, £10 10s.; Messrs. Rothschild, £21; Mr. T. Chapel, £21 and Mr. W. Wigram, £25; Mr. H. E. Lymes, £21; Mr. W. Kerby, £21, &c. The sum of £54 12s. was seed by persons, now prosperous in circumstances, who had been educated at the asylum.

AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—At the meeting of the members of the Society for Promoting the Amendment of the Law, held on Monday evening, at the rooms, 21, Regent-street, Mr. T. T. Bucket's plan for the improvement of the law relating to deceased persons' estates was under consideration. Mr. Spence, Q C, occupied the chair. Mr ABeckett explained his scheme as developed in two bills, with the clauses drawn in extenso, so as to admit of their being placed at once before the Legislature. The one bill introduces new principles with reference to the rights of parties interested in the deceased person's estate; the other provides a new form of procedure when it becomes necessary to administer the estate under the direction of the Court. Should the alteration recommended in the first be adopted by the Legislature, not only will creditors be disabled from obtaining preferences over each other after the decease of their debtor, but the distinction drawn between specialty and simple-contract creditors, existing at the time of such decease, will be done away with; all priorities, in every form or shape, will be put an end to; and the estate of a deceased insolvent will be divided among his creditors upon the same principles as those which govern the division of the estate of a living bankrupt. The clauses of the second bill are framed very closely upon the model of the new Bankrupt Act, substituting, however, a petition for administration for a petition for adjudication in bankruptcy. The parties entitled to set the Court in motion are creditors and personal representatives: the former, if they can show the Court a sufficient reason for its interference; the latter, as a matter of duty cast upon them. When estates are unadministered, they are to be at once taken possession of by the Court. An official receiver is to be appointed, answering to the chairman of an official assignee in bankruptcy; and the distinctions are not to be chosen as creditors' assignees are chosen in bankruptcy; debts are to be proved, assets to be got in, dividends declared, and parties examined, as in bankruptcy; in fact, the whole machinery of the Bankrupt Act is brought into action wherever it would be useful in ascertaining the extent of, and the getting in and dividing, the deceased person's estate among his creditors. The proposed alterations elicited considerable approval from the chairman and others. Want of time, however, caused an adjournment of a few minutes, when, if approved, the bills are to be immediately placed in the hands of some member of Parliament. Messrs. Samuel Warren, C. Boyle, and T. Sanders were elected members of the society. The meeting broke up about ten o'clock.

THE CITY COURT OF SEWERS.—A meeting of the commissioners was held on Tuesday, Mr Deputy Peacock in the chair. Mr. Simon was unanimously re-elected medical officer of the City of London for the next year. The Chief Clerk was directed, by a majority of 18 to 13, to sign and seal the deed of agreement between the Commissioners of Sewers and the Great Central Gas Consumers' Company.

EQUALISATION OF THE LAND TAX.—On Monday, at a meeting of the Commissioners of the Land Tax acting for the Holborn division, specially convened to consider an application made by a gentleman named Mayes, for the re-hearing of an appeal made by the objector against the assessment of his land-tax, which was heard a few weeks since, and decided adversary to the appellant, it was resolved, in accordance with the 7th section of the act 38 Geo. 3, cap. 5, that the appeal, having been duly heard and decided, could not be re-opened, except upon important resolution, moved by Mr. Coppock, and seconded by Mr. Ramsden, was carried with only one dissentient:—"That this board recommend that a general meeting of the Commissioners of Land Tax acting in and for the county of Middlesex be held on or before the 30th day of April next, for the purpose of ascertaining and setting down in writing the several proportions which ought to be charged upon every hundred, latke, wapentake, rape, ward, or other division within the said county, for and towards the raising and making up the whole amount of land tax charged upon the said county of Middlesex by the act of Geo. 3, c. 5." A committee of five members of the Court was then appointed to carry out the object in view.

ROYAL LONDON OPHTHALMIC HOSPITAL.—On Monday the annual general meeting of this charity was held at the Hospital, Blomfield-street, Moorfields; the Rev. John Russell, D.D., presiding. From the medical report it appeared that the total number of out-patients for the year 1849 was 9418; being an increase over the preceding year of 36. Those received into the hospital amounted to 268 making the number of in and out-patients 9686. The financial sheet showed the receipts to have been on the whole £4,000, which was resulted from dividends, and £1273 from donations and subscriptions. The sum invested in various securities was £8379. The report was adopted, the name of Sir John Poland added to the committee of management, and a vote elected, and thanks voted to the medical staff, after which the meeting broke up.

PAROCHIAL EXPENDITURE.—A meeting of the ratepayers of the parishes of St. Giles-in-the-Fields and St. George's, Bloomsbury, took place in the Music Hall, Store-street, Bedford-square, on Tuesday evening, to promote the adoption of the act, commonly called Hobhouse's Act, for the better regulation of vestries, and with a view of reducing the parochial expenditure. Lucas James Sulivan, Esq., in the chair. Resolutions were passed to the effect that the ratepayers of these parishes had an undoubted right to possess an efficient control over the parochial expenditure, the funds of which they were called upon to provide; that the local Act of Sir Farnish Pinnock was objectionable, as it was desirable to place the management of the parochial affairs under the direction of a vestry constituted pursuant to an act of 2nd of King William, commonly known as Hobhouse's Act, to secure for the parishioners a remedy for the evils complained of, and to secure to the parishioners more direct influence over the expenditure; and that a subscription be entered into in aid of the funds to carry out the above-named objects. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the meeting.

METROPOLITAN WATER SUPPLY.—The following Extract Minute from the proceedings of the General Board of Health, on the 7th instant, has been presented to both Houses of Parliament by command of her Majesty. The Board having had under consideration the applications proposed to be made to Parliament for private acts to authorise new trading companies to raise capital for supplying water to the metropolis: Resolved That it has been established by the Commissioners for inquiring into the means of improving the Health of Towns, as a general principle of legislation, which has been confirmed by subsequent inquiries, made under the Metropolitan Sanitary Commission, and adopted by the Legislature as a fundamental provision of the Public Health Act, and which, so far as this Board . as proceeded with its own investigations, appears to be equally applicable to the metropolis, that the works for supplying the public with water should be under the same public control as those connected with works of drainage, paving, and surface-cleansing. That, apart from the merits of any particular scheme of new water-works, and pending further investigations as to the practical means of applying the foregoing principle to the metropolis, it is inexpedient to sanction the investment of fresh capital in the same field of supply, as it is probable that the new works will have to be re-purchased, and there can be no security that these will be applicable to the requirements that may be hereafter recommended: Resolved—That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Home Department.

DISTRESSED NEEDLEWOMEN.—PRISON LABOUR.—A requisition, signed by upwards of 250 of the most respectable firms in the City and West-end of the town, and addressed to Mr Alderman Farebrother, in his character of President of the Society for the Relief of the Distressed Needlewomen of the Metropolis, was issued a few days ago, in which the requisitionists state that they "have learnt, through the practical exertions of the Society for the Relief of the Distressed Needlewomen, that the system of workhouse labour has been dis continued, but the greater evil still exists, namely, that of prison labour, to the great detriment of those dependent on their honest industry. Desirous of publicly expressing our opinion against this system of prison labour, to the prejudice of the honest mechanic, we respectfully and most earnestly request you will be good enough to preside at a public meeting, at your convenience, and we pledge ourselves to support you on that occasion." In compliance with the requisition, the president of the society convened a public meeting, which was held on Tuesday afternoon, in the Hanover-square Rooms, and was very numerously and respectably attended. Among those on the platform were Mr. Charles Fear-on, M.P., Mr. Charles Cochrane, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. G. F. Carden, and many influential gentlemen connected with the West-end trade.—Alderman Farebrother, in opening the proceedings, stated his opinion that it was only necessary to show to the Government, through that excellent man, Sir George Grey, the present Home Secretary, the absolute necessity of such a step as that for which they were assembled, to put an end to the present system of prison labour, which operated so injuriously to the industrious, honest, and hard-working artisan. (Hear, hear.) His (Alderman F.'s) experience told him that the great portion of crime arose, not from inclination, but from poverty; and it was distressing to think that while the honest artisan was starving outside the walls of a prison, the criminal was rewarded by being kept within the gaol in a state of comparative comfort. (Cheers.) At the present moment—and he was sorry to have to make such an admission—the criminal was better fed than the pauper. (Cheers.) Crime rested on the want of labour, and he must say that poverty was borne by the great masses of the industrious population with a degree of patience that must ultimately work good. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Nicholay moved the following resolution:—

That this meeting (being fully aware of the great disadvantage under which the artisan and needlewoman labour, in consequence of the employment of prisoners in the making up clothes, &c. for contractors, slopsellers, and that which protection is afforded to the criminal, has under-priced work is brought into competition with free labour, thereby reducing the prices and rendering it almost an impossibility for the poor but honest artisan to earn a livelihood for themselves and families, producing, from the want of employment, pauperism, prostitution, and (in many general crime) desires earnestly to submit, for the consideration of her Majesty's Government, the absolute necessity of discontinuing such employment, experience having proved that the introduction of machinery in the workhouses and charitable institutions has, to a certain degree, ameliorated the condition of the sempstress.

The motion was supported in speeches from several gentlemen, and was then unanimously agreed to. On the motion of Mr. Mitchell, seconded by Mr. Pilcher, the following noblemen and gentlemen were appointed a deputation (with power to add to their numbers) to wait upon Sir George Grey:—Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P.; Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P.; Mr. B. B. Cabbell, M.P.; Mr. Alderman Farebrother, Mr. Nicholay, Mr. Reynolds, and Mr. Underwood.

THE WRECK OF THE "PALMYRA."—IMPORTATION OF THE CARGO.—The steamer Seine, arrived in the river from Boulogne, has brought 516 chests and 37 bags of tea, and the steamer Albion, from the same French port, has brought 1009 chests of tea, 53 packages of China ware, and some other merchandise, being portions of the cargo of the ship Palmyra, lately wrecked off Boulogne, on her passage from China to London. A larger portion of the cargo, comprising several hundred packages of tea, had previously arrived by the steamer City of Boulogne, consigned to the proper parties in the metropolis.

BILLS OF MORTALITY.—DEATHS.—The births registered last week in the metropolis were:—Males, 785; females, 712: total, 1497. Average of five weeks:—Males, 761; females, 707: total, 1458. The deaths were 997 a number which exhibits a considerable decrease on the returns of the last two months, December and January, during which the deaths were usually above 1050, and, in one week, were 1155. The result is also favourable as compared with the average, corrected for increase of population, of corresponding weeks in ten previous years, 1840-49, which is 1144, showing a decrease of 187. The sudden alleviation in the mortality from diseases of the respiratory organs is remarkable; bronchitis, pneumonia, and asthma have numbered in the last three weeks successively, 227, 234, and 165 deaths; the average for last week, derived from the returns of the same week in ten years, is 187; or, if corrected for population, 204. But the deaths from phthisis (or consumption) have scarcely varied; they have been on the last three weeks 128, 137, and 135 respectively; the average of last week for this disease is 155. The deaths enumerated in the zymotic or epidemic class of diseases were 192; the corrected average is 215. Small-pox was fatal last week to 24 children, which is 4 less than enough to 28, means of 10 of these epidemics being under the average, and the first two being much less fatal than usual. Diarrhœa was fatal in 30 cases: in the corresponding weeks of seven years, the deaths from it have ranged from 3 to 22, and show a decided tendency to increase in later years. No deaths occurred in the week from cholera. From typhus there were 27 a comparatively light mortality from this cause. From influenza there were 2 deaths; from erysipelas, 10; from cancer, 17 deaths, of which all except three occurred to women; and 9 women died after child-birth. In two persons fatal disease is stated to have been the result of intemperance. The death of a woman of 47 years, which occurred in January, was accelerated by "destitution and exposure to extreme cold." She had been previously removed to Bethnal-green workhouse

POISONOUS CONFECTIONARY.—In the Registrars' reports for the past week in Lond ion and Lord Leonard, of Clerkenwell (sub-district), reports the death of a boy of eight years, in Princes-court, who died of "gastritis after 11 days' illness, having been seized suddenly with intense pain, vomiting, and purging, after eating some pie-crust given to him in the street." He further adds, that "the child and another (who partook of a smaller quantity) were similarly affected. The former was taken in the first place to a public institution, and the symptoms were attributed by his friends to a fall; but on the day of his death the other boy was communicated, and a post mortem examination proved that he had been poisoned. The other child is slowly recovering."

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean height of the barometer in London, at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, for the week was 29.457 in. The mean temperature was 44 deg., showing an excess of 10 7 deg. on the average of the same week of seven years. It was higher than the average throughout the week. On Saturday the mean temperature was 13 deg. above the average, and on Friday and Saturday 14 deg. above it.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

ADMIRALTY LEVEES.—The first Lord, Sir Francis Baring, has given notice that his levees for the season will, as usual take place on Tuesdays, after one o'clock, when the Senior Naval-Lord, Rear-Admiral Dundas, will also receive officers as before.

Captain H. T. Austin, C.B., to command the Arctic Expedition, and to proceed in the direction of Davis's Straits, Lancaster Sound, and Barrow's Straits, in Melville Island and neighbour ng seas.

ARCTIC SPECIMENS FOR THE BRITISH MUSEUM.—The Admiralty have directed that several cases containing rare specimens of plants, &c., collected during the late Arctic voyages, shall be forthwith sent to enrich the national treasures at the British Museum

THE NAVY ESTIMATES.—REDUCTION IN THE ROYAL FACTORIES.—The Admiralty have decided that, in the for.hcoming navy estimates for the financial years 1850-51, the amount to be paid for factory wages at the two great establishments shall not exceed £75,000. Of this sum, £43,000 is to be allowed to Woolwich, and £32,000 for Portsmouth.

THE REDUCTIONS.—An exception to the arrangement for the reduction of the army is to take place as regards the second battalion, 6th Regiment, which was formed for special service at the Oregon - the who-e of the officers are to be placed upon half-pay until appointments to other corps can be provided for them.

IRISH STAFF.—The reduction of the officers who were appointed for special service in Ireland is ordered to take place from the first of April, viz Brevet-Major Richard Macartney, at Carra, and Colonel Sir Michael Creagh, K.H., at Galway. The appointment of Colonel St. John A. Clarke, Assistant Quarter Master General in the Belfast district, is to be discontinued at the end of April. The duties of which are in future to be performed by the Assistant Adjutant-General.

REGIMENT SCHOOLS.—A circular has been issued by the Secretary at War, to the effect that, although all supplies of books and materials required for the schools of the regiments are furnished under Government, the fund intended to relieve the non-commissioned officers and men who voluntarily attend the school from providing their own stationery, copy-books, &c. All recruits, however, attending the school under the General Order of the 10th of April last, will be supplied with these articles.

MEDALS FOR THE EXPEDITION TO EGYPT IN 1801.—We have much pleasure in announcing that it has been decided, on the recommendation of the Medal Committee, to extend the issue to the land and sea forces engaged in the expedition to Egypt in 180. when the British troops, commanded by Abercrombie, effected a landing under the fire of the guns of the ships, and, assisted by the seamen and marines of the squadron, commanded by Admiral Lord Keith, succeeded, after an obstinate and sanguinary conflict with the French, gaining possession of Aboukir. The English forces, numbering 15,000, then pursued the enemy to Alexandria, and on the 21st of March fought the memorable battle of that name, in which the gallant Abercrombie was mortally wounded.

NEW CHURCH AT SOUTH LAMBETH.—A new church, to be dedicated to St. Barnabas, has for some time been in the course of erection in the populous district of South Lambeth, the expenses of building to be defrayed by voluntary contributions; but, in consequence of the funds not having reached the commensurate with the rapid progress of the building (which is near completion), it has become necessary to make exertions for that purpose, and accordingly a fete was determined upon for the delivery of sermons in the various churches and chapels throughout the parish of Lambeth. In this undertaking his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury has very laudably taken the lead, and on last Sunday preached in the most rev. private delivered at St. Mark's church, Kennington, an eloquent discourse to a crowded congregation, taking an appropriate text from Haggai ii. 8. The result was a liberal collection, to which his Grace generously contributed £25, making the whole amount £93 18s. 1d. In the evening another sermon, by the Rev. R. Bickersteth, was delivered at the same church to a large congregation, which produced a collection amounting to nearly £40.

DEPUTATION TO LORD JOHN RUSSELL ON THE PAPER DUTIES.—On Tuesday a deputation of gentlemen, repre-enting paper-makers, publishers, and printers, in England and Scotland, had an interview with Lord John Russ—l, in Downing-street. Among those present were Mr. Richard Cobden, M.P.; Mr. T. B. Crompton, of Farnworth, Lancashire; Mr. Baldwin, of Sherbourne Mill, Birmingham; Mr. Thomas Wrigley, of Bury, Lancashire; Mr. James Durham and Mr. Henry Bruce, Edinburghshire; Mr. Robert Chambers, of Edinburgh Mr. Charles Knight and Mr. W. S. Orr, of London. The deputation was accompanied by Mr. Hume, M.P.; and by Mr. Schoefield and Mr. Blair, the members respectively for Birmingham and Bo.ton.

WRECK OF AN INDIAMAN.

The scene of desolation which our great marine painter, the late Mr. Daniell, has here so fearfully portrayed, has, it is feared, been paralleled in the calamities of the past week.

On Sunday night last, another violent gale from the W.S.W. visited London and its suburbs, and, up to ten o'clock on Monday night, continued with alarming force. The wind gauge at Lloyd's fully illustrated its fury, the pressure on the face attached to the apparatus on the summit of the Royal Exchange being, in the course of Monday evening, no less than from 12 lb. to 13 lb., sufficient to excite no ordinary uneasiness for the safety of the shipping.

Among the losses reported is the wreck of a fine West Indiaman, and, it is feared, the loss of all on board of her. On Tuesday, the Sarah, Bridges master, bound from Jamaica for London, made the Margate-roads, and in the course of the forenoon was taken in tow by the Trusty steam-tug. As the day advanced, the gale sprang up with destructive fury. The ship and the tug laboured sorely; and between three and four o'clock in the afternoon, when running through the Prince's Channel, the towing hawser snapped asunder, and the ship got adrift. The tug immediately brought up, in the hope that the weather might moderate. The wind, however, continued to increase until it blew a perfect hurricane, and about midnight the steamer was driven from her anchorage. She lost cable and anchor, and was compelled to run for safety. The Sarah was then lost sight of, and from the tempestuous weather that prevailed during the following twenty-four hours, and the fact that nothing has been seen of her since, although she was right in the track of vessels trading to and from the river, coupled with the circumstance that a quantity of West India produce has been picked up in the vicinity of where she went adrift, as also pieces of wreck apparently of the same class of vessel, there is little doubt that she perished, with all hands. Several casks of rum have been seen floating about; and Mr. Cullum, the master of the General Steam Navigation Company's ship Soho, reports having passed part of the wreck of a ship, a quantity of cocoa-nuts and pimento cakes, about a dozen miles to the eastward of the North Foreland, and consequently almost in the very place the Sarah is suspected to have been lost. Whether this wreck belonged to the Sarah or not, however, it is evident that a large ship was lost in the neighbourhood. At present the number of the crew has not been ascertained, nor whether there were any passengers on board.

DARJEELING.

In our Journal of Jan. 26 we gave the details of the arrest, by the Rajah of Sikkim, of the British resident at Darjeeling, Dr. Campbell, while making a tour through his territories, accompanied by the eminent botanist, Dr. Hooker.

By intelligence subsequently received, we learn that the Rajah of Sikkim had released Drs. Campbell and Hooker from confinement, and permitted them to return to Darjeeling; though, up to the 17th ultimo, they had not reached that station.

Darjeeling is a sanitary station, situated 371 miles distant from Calcutta, on a ridge of the Sikkim range of the Himalaya Mountains: it commands a magnificent prospect of the snowy range, in which the lofty peak of Kunchin Jinga said to be 27,000 feet above the level of the sea, is very conspicuous; Darjeeling being 7218 feet.

We have engraved a north-west view of this spot, called, from its beauty, "the Bright Spot." The loftiest peak in the centre is Kunchin Jinga: to the extreme right are the ruins of an ancient Buddhist monastery and next to them, a recently

By the Hurkaru of Dec. 3, we learn that Mr. Charles Lushington, of the civil service, lately returned from England, had been ordered to proceed to Darjeeling forthwith, and assume civil and political charge of the station and its relations with the foreign powers.

EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

THE two Pictures engraved upon the present page are of that pleasing domestic class which is sure to attract a great number of admirers. The interest attached to them is simple and natural; and in neither of these instances is the simplicity of the incident spoiled by the mere prettiness of art.

In the first Picture (1 foot 6 inches square), The Hour-glass, painted by H. Le Jeune, two children are curiously watching the sand passing through an hour-glass—that homely measurer of time, formerly common in our homes, frequently placed upon pulpits in churches, but now rarely seen save in cottages and rural districts. There is the genuine curiosity of childhood cleverly expressed in each set of features in the picture: they heed not the book before them, but are wonderstruck with the great problem of the running of "the sand of life."

The second picture, The Rivals, painted by Sant, is in size 4 ft. 6 in. in height, by 5 ft. 7 in. in width. The scene is on the ice. The object of the Rivals is a coquettish little lady, in her sledge, with a pet dog resting at her feet, upon a costly carpet. One of the suitors, a skater, has evidently, for the moment, gained the fair one's eye, but is jealously watched by the rival suitor, who drives the sledge. The composition is good, and the picture is painted with much breadth and richness of colour.

We are anxious here to correct a misunderstanding of a portion of Mr. Lance's picture (No. 402), "The Jewels and the Gem," in our notice of last week. The little miniature in this picture is not a likeness of the Princess Royal, as we stated, but of Lord Almaric Churchill, the present Duchess of Marlborough's eldest son. All the jewels, caskets, and ornaments are painted from valuable articles in her Grace's possession.

MUSIC.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

The performance of Handel's "Saul" is one of the greatest successes achieved by the amateurs at Exeter Hall. The band, as well as the chorus, shared equally in the glory of a most splendid interpretation of the oratorio, which, in Costa's hands, will prove a most attractive work; the overture, the bell symphony, the dead march, and vocal accompaniments were executed with unerring precision, finish, and spirit. The great choral triumphs were in the fugued finale of the first part, "Preserve him for the glory," the introduction "How excellent thy name," with its descriptive portions of David's victory over Goliah; the soprani in "David has ten thousand slain;" the grand finale of the second part, "O fatal consequence;" the appalling "Envy, eldest born of Hell," and "Is there a man," the plaintive "Mourn, Israel, Deog;" the "O fatal day," most marvellously given; and the gorgeous "Gird on thy sword," one of Handel's colossal choral conceptions. Mr. Costa abandoned the "additional accompaniments," and left the score of Handel in its primitive state—a judicious act, for it required no colouring, and certainly no brass of modern dictation. The lovely organ of Miss Dolby is heard to perfection in the music of "Saul;" she sings it with devotional feeling and intense expression, especially the three airs in the last part, and the two duos (with Miss Birch) in the second part. The soprano parts of Michol, the Witch of Endor, and the Israelite woman, were sung by Miss Birch effectively. Miss Stewart sang the music of Merab. Mr. Phillips was impressive in Saul; his scene with the Witch was well declaimed. The music of Jonathan was artistically rendered by Benson, who only requires more power; that of Samuel, Doeg, and Abiathar, by Mr. Lawler; Abner and an Amalekite, by Mr. T. Williams. The last part of "Saul" is sublime from beginning to end. In the earlier parts, the bad construction of the poem, with so many recitative duos following in succession, renders the oratorio somewhat wearisome; it would be as well to cut out some of the recitatives and repeats in the earlier portion.

On Friday night, by special desire of Prince Albert, Mendelssohn's "Paul" was performed, for the third time this season.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH MUSICIANS.

The third Chamber Concert was given on Saturday night, in the lecture-room St. Martin's Hall, Mr. James Calkin conductor, and Mr. W. C. Macfarren accompanyist. In the scheme were Mozart's quartet in E flat, No. 4, played by Messrs. N. Mori, E. W. Thomas, Weslake, and Guest; Griesbach's discrete for pianoforte (J. H. Griesbach), two violins (Thomas and Mori), tenor (Weslake), violoncello (Guest), double-bass (Howland), oboe (Nicholson), clarionet (Maycock), horn (C. Harper), and bassoon (Chisholm); C. E. Horsley's MS. Quartet in D, No. 2; Mozart's Sonata in A, played by Mr. R. Barnett and Mr. E. Thomas, and a portion of Beethoven's Septuor, Op. 20, for violin, tenor, violoncello, contra-basso, clarionet, horn, and bassoon. The vocal selections were by Messrs. W. L. Phillips, G. A. Macfarren, Brinley Richards, Mozart, and Land, sung by Misses Leslie and Thornton, Messrs. Herberte and Ferrari. The discetto went the best; but more rehearsals would have benefited the execution of many of the pieces. The scherzo of Horsley's quartet is very clever; the subject in the adagio began well, but it was not sufficiently worked out. The duo is not one of Mozart's best, but it was well played

PARIS, Wednesday.

The discussion respecting the little theatre appropriated to the Conservatoire classes and to the performances of the Société des Concerts, has terminated by the Minister of the Interior (M. Ferdinand Barrot) granting to Mr. Lumley, the

"THE RIVALS."—PAINTED BY J. SANT.

Director of Her Majesty's Theatre, the permission to give concerts. This "Salle du Conservatoire" is National property, and it was formerly allotted by the Crown for the purposes above mentioned. For twenty-three years the Société des Concerts has enjoyed its privilege: the Minister has properly decided to allow Mr. Lumley its use, inasmuch as his projected "Concerts Costumés," with Mdme. Sontag, in no way interfere with the Conservatoire concerts and rehearsals.

Duprez sang for the last time on the stage last Wednesday night, at the Grand Opera, in selections from Rossini's "Guillaume Tell" and "Otello." In the first his pristine energy came out in the "Suivez-moi," twice throwing out with extraordinary power his famous ut de poitrine, a feat saluted by the audience with tremendous acclamations. Mdme. Viardot was the Zerlenone; her "Romance de Saule" created a great effect. An act of "Il Barbiere" was given by the Italian singers, Mdlle. Angri, Lucchesi, Majo ki, Ronconi, and Lablache; and the arlates of the Théâtre Italien played "La Coupe enchantée." The performance which was in aid of the funds of the pension list for retired artistes, did not terminate until two in the morning; and, although the prices of admission were doubled, the theatre was filled to overflow.

Clementi's "Matrimonio Segreto" was revived at the Théâtre Italien last Thursday night, with Mdme. Persiani, Mdlle. Vera, Mdlle. Angri, Signori Lucchesi, Majeski, and Lablache. It was received with much enthusiasm.

At the first performance of "Le Prophète" on the 80th ult. at Dresden, Mdlle. Michalesi was the Fidès, and Herr Tichatschek Jean of Leyden. The furore was unbounded; Meyerbeer was called on the stage, and crowns and bouquets were thrown in profusion; at the end of the fourth act, the King of Saxony sent for the composer to come to the Royal box, and presented him with the Cross of Chevalier of the Order of Merit, with many expressions of Royal satisfaction. Mdlle. Wagner is the Fidès who is delighting the amateurs at Hamburg.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—The fourth concert of the Society of British Musicians will be given this evening (Saturday).——Handel's "Deborah" will be performed next Monday, by the London Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Surman. The vocalists will be Misses Birch, Holroyd, and Kenneth; Messrs. Genge, Walker, W. Seguin, and Lawler.——On Tuesday, Mr. W. Sternd ale Bennett will commence his annual series of pianoforte soirées.——The Society of Musical Society commence their season on the 25th; the rehearsal will be on the 22nd.——Mr. Milne and the Misses Smith gave their second selection of Scotch songs at Crosby Hall and the Music Hall, on Monday and Tuesday evenings. Mr. Willy is about to commence a series of concerts at St. Martin's Hall, with a full orchestra, for the performance of Beethoven's Symphonies.——The seventeenth of the London Wednesday Concerts will be given on the 13th, at Exeter Hall: these entertainments are to take place monthly at Greenwich, the first of which was given last Monday.——At the Sussex Hall, in the City, an evening concert was given on the 11th, conducted by Mr. Maurice Davis, at which Mdlle. Magrier, Miss Lucombe, Dorby, and A. Taylor, and Mr. Leffler sang; and Miss Wolf, Mr Richardson, and Mr. G. Case were the solo instrumentalists.——At the Marylebone Institution, on Monday last, Mr. G. Buckland delivered a lecture on Musical Characteristics.——Mr. B. Jones announces a series of Lectures on Music, next week, at the Polytechnic Institution.——M. Billet's third séance musicale took place last Tuesday, at the Beethoven Rooms; and on Thursday, Mr. Cooper (the violinist) and Mr. Lidel (the violoncellist) held their second attractive classical meeting at Exeter Hall.——Ernst played on Thursday, at a concert in the Greenwich Lecture Hall; Miss Lucombe, Mdlle. Magner, and Mr. Reeves helped the principal singers.——Mr. Land has given his musical entertainment this week at Hastings, St. Leonard's, and Brighton.——The Glee Club met at the Freemasons' last Saturday, for the first time this season: in honour of the late prosperity of Felix Mendelssohn, the "Cloud-capped towers" was sung. The subscriptions for the Philharmonic Concerts of the forthcoming season have been in great demand.——Thalberg has selected the singers for the concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre for the ensuing season.——Balfe has returned to London from Berlin, where his "Bondman" has met with such success. The King of Prussia has engaged Balfe to return to Berlin, on his birthday in 1850, to produce "The Bohemian Girl."——The "Record of the Fifth Season of the Musical Union for 1849," edited by Mr. Ella, has just been published by Cramer, Beale, and Co. To the amateur desirous of having some very useful information for reference as to music in London during the past season, and of possessing a clear analysis of chamber music, this work will be very useful. To prove how classical compositions are appreciated in aristocratic circles, it may be mentioned that, in the list of subscribers to the Musical Union, there are the Royal Family, Foreign Princes and Princesses, five Dukes and Duchesses, three Marquises and Marchionesses, ten Earls and Countesses, nine Viscounts and Viscountesses, one Bishop, ten Baronets and Ladies, seven Lord Lieutenancies, twenty Honourables, thirty-two Baronets and Ladies, besides Members of Parliament, Generals, Colonels, clergymen, painters, poets, men of science, literature, &c.——A benefit concert, under the patronage of Prince Albert and the Duchess of Sutherland, took place on Tuesday evening, at the Hanover Rooms, on behalf of Mrs Sewell and Miss Horn, sisters of the late C. E. Horn, the composer. Selections from his oratorio, "Daniel's Prophecy," and his popular compositions were performed.——The Occlian Society on Thursday performed Handel's "Acis and Galatea," conducted by Mr. Walker, Mr. G. Perry organist.——Mr. Lucas has announced his annual series of quartet evenings.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

THE opening of the above ancient lyric establishment is announced for the first week in March. The preliminary circular, containing some particulars of the projected campaign of the lessee, is of remarkable interest, and in every way calculated to provoke public curiosity and to interest cultivated amateurs in "the momentary arising from the constant repetition of the same lyric fare, and from the absence of new compositions of sufficient pretensions, it is justly stated, "has been, hitherto, the most constant and insuperable subject of regret." To meet the demand for novelty and variety, the direction purposes the revival of neglected works by the first masters, and the mounting of entirely new operas by composers of acknowledged fame. The magnitude of the labours to be thus undertaken may be judged by the enumeration of the leading lyric productions, to be given in succession during the forthcoming season:—

BEFORE EASTER.—"Medea," of Mayer; "La Prigione di Edinborgo," of Ricci. AFTER EASTER.—"L'Enfant Prodigue," of Auber; "Il Reggimento sulle Scuardam," of Lortzing; "La Tempesta," of Halévy; "Le Domino Noir," of Auber; "Ilgevnia in Aulide," of Gluck; and, if time should allow, "Il Conte Ori" and "Maulda di Rastani," of Rossini.

Of the above works, the two last-mentioned, by Rossini, and "Medea," will be revivals. The operas by Ricci, Gluck, Lortzing, and Auber will be produced for the first time in Italian in this country, after enjoying great popularity abroad. "L'Enfant Prodigue" is the first new work that has come from the pen of the Grand Opera in Paris, which it is expected, will be produced in April. "La Tempesta," founded on Shakspeare's "Tempest," is Scribe's libretto, and Halévy composes the music expressly for the company of Her Majesty's Theatre.

A very attractive feature in the production of the above works is the promised advent to London of many eminent composers to superintend their productions. Auber, Scribe, Ricci, and Halévy are to come, and Mayer's Medea will be sustained by Signora Parodi, the pupil of Pasta, who will visit this country on purpose to give Parodi the traditions of that celebrated part, one of the grandest of Pasta's impersonations. The "Burgomaster Saardam" will be undertaken for the rentrée of the Titan of basses, Lablache, who is also to be the Caiaban in Halévy's "Tempesta," the gentle Miranda being allotted to the accomplished Sontag, who, in addition to the season's characters, Linda, Norina, Desdemona, Amina, and Susanna, will likewise appear as Lucia, Norma ("Don Pasquale"), Adina ("Elisir d'Amore"), Zerlina in "Don Giovanni," and Elvira in "Puritani." Altogether there are some nineteen or twenty operas, one half of which will be novelties and revivals.

As yet the names of Sontag, Parodi, and Lablache only are mentioned, but it is mentioned that arrangements and engagements are still pending of the highest interest. In a future prospectus, the list of the company will be supplied.

BURFORD'S ARCTIC PANORAMA.

The Polar regions, as witnessed by Captain James Clark Ross, during his Expedition in 1848-9, compose a peculiarly interesting panorama, now exhibiting at Burford's, Leicester-square. It is judiciously divided into two parts, and presents the scenery under both the summer and winter aspects. In the-half the circle we may contemplate the awful majesty of the Polar seas at summer midnight; turning from which we find ourselves in the midst of noon, but it is the noon of an Arctic winter in all its sublime severity. The two ships, the Enterprise and the Investigator, make, of course, the principal object of both pictures. Glaciers and atmospheric phenomena conduce to give effect to the background and such peculiarities. Splendid arches of ice, the "Burgomaster Saardam," and the pale moon, shed a wild and weird glory on iceberg and vessel; while on the ice itself the natives, and sailors and officers of the expedition, are amusing themselves with boat-sailing, and other such provincialities. All this is beautifully rendered. We propose next week to give an Engraving of one of the most striking portions of the picture.

THE RIOTS IN CEYLON.—The select committee on public petitions agreed to the following resolution at their meeting on Monday last:—Resolved, that the petition from Colombo, purporting to be signed by 87,965 inhabitants of that colony, setting forth various circumstances connected with the late riots in the colony, complaining of the measures that were adopted by the Government, and of the severity and illegality of the punishments inflicted upon the offenders under colour of martial-law, and also of grievances under which the inhabitants of that island suffer, and praying for redress, which was presented upon the 6th day of this instant February, is a petition which ought to be printed for the use of members only; and that a special report be made to this effect."

MR. ADAMS'S FOURTEENTH ANNUAL BALL was given at Willis's Rooms, on Tuesday night, and was attended by from 300 to 400 persons. Mr. Adams's band comprised thirty performers; and among the attractions of the night was the Gipsy Quadrille, with vocal accompaniments. Dancing was kept up with great spirit until past five o'clock on Wednesday morning.

ROYAL THAMES YACHT CLUB BALL.—The annual ball of this distinguished club was held at the Hanover-square Rooms on Thursday (St. Valentine's Day), according to custom. The élite of the members of the club, with their ladies, were present; and we recognised among the company the noble Commodore, Lord Alfred Paget, with most of the officers. M. Jullien with his celebrated band attended. The large room was much crowded, nearly five hundred persons being present; and the want of ventilation was the only cause of complaint. The supper, wines, &c., provided by Mr. Hewitt, were excellent. Dancing was continued until after five o'clock on Friday morning.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

QUILLOCK.—The "Staunton Chess-men" can be got in the beautiful material called "Carrara," at Wedgewood's porcelain and china depot, in Bond-street, we believe

SECRETARY D C G.—Apply to the Hon. Secretary of the Brighton Chess Club, Chain-pier, Brighton

RHO, ROMA.—You have omitted to send the solution

HYDROMANUS.—We do not understand your question. State it more explicitly

KAFFA, Brompton.—As an opportunity is now afforded the amateurs of Brompton for practising Chess, at RAMSAY'S newly-opened Library and News-rooms, we would suggest the propriety of forming a Chess Club there at once. Twenty or thirty members might soon be got together, and these be doubled in the course of next winter. Why does not "Kaffa" take the initiative?

BELLAMY.—It strikes us as very neat indeed for a two-move problem. Has the Schachzeitung yet reached hand?

J C W. Ingenious although rather very original nor very subtle

B A 1. Has it before been published? 2. The solution of Enigma No 534 is as follows:—1. B to K 8 2d; 2 R to K 4th (ch), 3 B to K B 3d; and 4. R to K 5th (mate)

JUVENTUS.—Very creditable. In future diagrams ink the red ink for the white men

W F—In the end game No 422 place the Black Rook on Q 8th, instead of K 8th; the solution is not then difficult. The key-move of Enigma No. 433 is—1. P to K R 6th, becoming a Bishop (check)

B H. We have ourselves some doubts as to the possibility of effecting mate according to the conditions in the position you send for solution

DIX, Bromsgrove.—You can get the "Staunton Chess-men" at Manning's, in Worcester. It is of no use appearing to the manufacturers, you should go to the retail dealers

In Corpus-Gardens two of the trees were blown down, and a portion of a wall in Magdalen College; and several of the fine old trees in Christchurch-walk were denuded of their upper branches.

At the annual meeting of the proprietors of the York Union Banking Company, last week, the directors reported that the business and the profits of the past year had been such as to merit the confidence of the public in the bank. A dividend of 8 per cent. on the shares (£15) was declared, and the outgoing directors were re-elected.

The Wiener Zeitung publishes a report from the Austrian minister of Finance, which states that the amount of the new loan of 90 millions at 4½ per cent. already subscribed is about 40 millions.

The sub-committee of the commissioners of Devonport, appointed to examine the bills of the several gentlemen and persons for professional assistance rendered during the cholera, have reported, after having reduced the several bills to the greatest possible extent, the total amount is still more than £937. The entire cost of the cholera in the town will be more than £2000.

The official Gazette of Wednesday, contains a notification, in order to put a stop to the smuggling of coffee into the Rhenish provinces from Holland, the most rigorous measures of surveillance are to be established.

The Bavarian army is to be augmented by a new levy of 13,000 men.

The ship, Shah Jehan, which has arrived in the West India Docks from Canton, has brought upwards of 14,000 packages of tea, being one of the largest individual importations of this important article of merchandise which has ever taken place.

At the annual meeting of the Carlisle and Cumberland Bank, held last week at Carlisle, it appeared from the report that the profits for the year 1849 had amounted to £6869, or upwards of 15 per cent. on the capital. A dividend of 8½ per cent. was declared, and £4415 of the £5570 was added to the reserved surplus fund, and the balance carried to the contingent fund. The reserved surplus fund, now amounts to £19,620, and the contingent fund to £510.

The Queen has issued a commission to award £6000 for the erection in that borough of public baths and washhouses. They are to contain 100 baths and 100 washing apartments, and are to be after the plan of the model establishment in Goulston-square, Whitechapel.

The Giornale di Roma, of the 30th ult., publishes a notification from the Minister of Finance, regulating the cultivation of tobacco in the Papal States. Around Rome a surface of 230 rubbie, about 80 acres, sufficient for the cultivation of 7,500,000 plants, is to be devoted to the purpose.

Official notice is given this week to the officers and company of her Majesty's sloop Bittern, Thomas Hope, Esq., Commander, who were actually on board at the capture of the Josephina, on the 14th May, 1848, that a distribution of the share bounties, received for the said vessel, will be made, on Tuesday, the 26th instant, at No. 14, Great George-street, Westminster, where the unclaimed shares will be re-called for three months.

By a notification of the Roman Government Commission, dated the 1st inst., the importation of corn, cattle, oil, soap, and a few other articles duty free, at Ancona and Civita Vecchia, is abolished.

The Tuscan Government has doubled the duties on corn and merchandise introduced into the free port of Leghorn. It has also increased the price of salt, and imposed a tax on mortgages.

COUNTRY NEWS.

MANCHESTER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The annual meeting of the members of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce and Manufactures was held on Monday morning, in the room of the association, King-street; Thomas Bazley, Esq., the president, in the chair. In opening the proceedings, the chairman adverted to the importance of obtaining a larger supply of cotton, and notwithstanding the opinion that Brazil never could furnish it, if their resources were properly developed by the Government. He reiterated the satisfaction felt by the chamber at the working of the great principles of Free-Trade, and at the prospect of the whole of our fiscal policy being placed on a free and unshackled basis. Mr. Thomas Boothman, the secretary, then read the annual report of the directors, which, on the motion of Mr. James M'Connahan, seconded by Mr. J Heginbottom, of Ashton-under-Lyne, was agreed to unanimously. Auditors for the ensuing year were appointed, and also the board of direction for the ensuing year. Mr. Alderman W. B Watkins proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, Mr. Henry Ashworth seconded the motion, which was cordially responded to, and the proceedings terminated.

PROGRESSIVE INCREASE OF THE TRADE OF THE PORT OF BRISTOL SINCE THE PRICAGE OF THE DOCKS.—An abstract of the Custom-house annual accounts, relating to the foreign and coasting imports and exports of the port of Bristol for the last three years, just published, contains much that is worthy attentive consideration. It will be remembered that the purchase of the docks by the city was negotiated on certain calculations which took the trade of the 1840-47 as a maximum—viz 100,722 tons of foreign and colonial imports. The abstract shows that the trade has advanced beyond that supposed maximum, 20 per cent. in tonnage and 40 per cent. in number of ships; while the progress in fathoms, proves that the population that Bristol never could furnish it, if their resources were properly developed by the Government. The abstract shows that the trade has advanced beyond that supposed maximum, 20 per cent. in tonnage and 40 per cent. in number of ships; while the progress in fathoms, proves that the population that Bristol never could improve, as her deficiencies in that respect were said to arise from "natural causes," have also increased in the same ratio. In the year 1847, ending 5th January, 1848, the tonnage was 107,467, and in the year 1848, ending 5th January, 1849, to £127,944; in the year 1849, ending 5th of January, 1850, to £221,958; increase in the year 1849-50 compared with 1848-9, £74,9.4, or 50 per cent.; and compared with 1847-48, £94,477, or 72 per cent. The duties paid on the imports show a most striking improvement in the direct trade, that which is most profitable, and in every way most advantageous to the city.

SILVER LODE.—A very valuable silver lode has been discovered in Sir Bridge estate, the property of Mr. W. Wymond, in the parish of Landolph, about four miles from Saltash, on the direct Callington-road. Applications have been repeatedly made for the past twenty years for a grant of the soil, which, however, could not be obtained until about a fortnight since, the proprietor not believing his estate contained any mineral, and supposing that his land would be broken up to no purpose. Operations were commenced on Monday week last, and when a few feet from the surface a valuable lode of silver-lead ore was opened on, showing that the opinions of the practical miners were correct. The ore taken from it, having been carefully assayed, produced 10 in 20 for lead, and 200 ounces of silver to the ton of ore. The shaft has since been sunk about 10 fathoms, where the lode is four feet big, and the ore found to be of much greater richness. This is one of the richest lodes ever seen in our locality so near the surface.—Plymouth Guardian.

MORE SAVINGS-BANK DEFALCATIONS.—DARTFORD.—In consequence of the late exposures of the Rochdale and other savings-banks, the managers of this bank adopted means of having the books and accounts examined by an examining committee of managers and an accountant entirely unconnected with the bank. The first meeting of the committee was held at the Bull Inn on Saturday, the 2d inst., when about two hundred books were produced, and as far as they were examined no errors were detected. In the evening, the secretary, Mr. Pain, calling on Mr. Jardine, the actuary, saw a depositor's book lying there, which he opened, and found it to differ nearly £100 from the ledger. He charged him with the mistake, when the actuary confessed that he had committed a fraud to the amount of about £1000. This becoming known to some of the managers, Mr. Jardine was allowed till Monday, the 4th, to examine his books, on which day he said he was a defaulter to the amount of £2000. A meeting of the managers was held on Wednesday, at which the attendance of Mr. Tidd Pratt was secured, and it was ascertained that £17,599 1s. 5d. was safely invested in Government securities, and that Mr. Jardine had consigned all his property to the trustees, which will produce about £700 or £800, and, together with £1000, the amount of his bond, will go towards the liabilities. A sub-committee was chosen, consisting of Messrs. Hugh Johnston and John Tasker and the Rev. James Hall, to investigate the matter, and to report the result as soon as possible. The business of the bank is of course suspended. Mr. Jardine, with his father, have been actuaries of this bank for upwards of 40 years, and he has hitherto carried on the first drapery business in Dartford, and borne an irreproachable character.

UNWHOLESOME VICTUALLING OF EMIGRANT SHIPS.—The Countess of Yarborough, of 465 tons register, Captain John Bennett, arrived at Plymouth on the 5th of January, from Adelaide, Port Lincoln, and Melbourne. She left Melbourne on the 14th of January, and Gravesend on the 23rd. About the time of her departure from Gravesend, Mr. Jae Bean, father of one of the passengers, made complaint to the Lord Mayor of the unwholesome state of the provisions served out on board; when his Lordship, in reply, said, that no doubt justice would be done to the complainants on the arrival of the Countess of Yarborough at Plymouth. She has ten cabin passengers, and 93 intermediate adults, with forty children; and, on their arrival at Plymouth, they elected a deputation, who appointed Mr. Bream, a solicitor, of Dublin, their chairman. This deputation, on Monday, waited on Lieutenant Carew, R.N., for her Majesty's emigration officer there, who, the same afternoon, went on board, inspected, and condemned the provisions. On Saturday last the following memorial was forwarded to the Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies:—

The memorial of a deputation from the "intermediate" passengers on board the ship Countess of Yarborough humbly showeth, that your memorialists have been deputed by the intermediate passengers proceeding to the Australian colonies on board the above passenger-ship to lay before you certain grievances. That your memorialists, with their fellow passengers, left Gravesend for above ship on the 14th of January, and Gravesend on the 23rd of January, 1850. That previous to their leaving London your memorialists were informed that the provisions on board the ship were examined, and passed in London by the Government emigration officers, and a certificate to that effect given by the officer at Gravesend. That your memorialists were informed from Gravesend to Plymouth, the provisions served out to your memorialists were of the most inferior description, particularly the beef and pork, having been opened, were found to be [illegible] at your memorialists, as forming one deputation from their fellow passengers, beg to call the attention of your honourable Government emigration officer at Plymouth to be [illegible] Carew), upon examination, and to request he will be pleased to order [illegible] to be examined by him in order [illegible] That your memorialists [illegible] and your memorialists [illegible] above the counsels which is due to it from the proper authorities And your memorialists [illegible] will ever pray.—JOHN BAKER (Chairman), GEORGE HODE, LAWRENCE KENT, JOHN DEAN, MR. Bennett, the owner, is part owner of the Countess of Yarborough, and Messrs. Whittaker and Co. are her brokers. The first casks of b ef and pork examined by Lieutenant Carew were condemned. The beef is represented as being green outside and yellow inside, and the pork fetid, soft, and unwholesome; one piece of the latter weighed 7½lb. before going into the pot, and under 2½ lb. when boiled, and this was the portion of a mess for fifteen. Many of the passengers are ashore on expenses. Lieutenant Carew will not permit the ship to leave until she is plentifully found with good provisions.

ARUSES ON BOARD EMIGRANT SHIPS.—The Adelaide (South Australia) papers of September last, which have come to hand, are filled with long accounts of abuses on board the emigrant ships, reflecting the most gross, brutal, and oppressive treatment by the seamen, mates, and petty-officers, of the passengers, especially the single females, on board the emigrant-ship Indian, on her voyage from England to that colony, and on her arrival at Port Adelaide on the 7th of August last. The corroborated statements of the passengers exhibit the greatest neglect on the part of the Captain, and the most infamous conduct on the part of the officers of the ship, and the absolute necessity which exists for more vigilant supervision than is now exercised by the Government in matters of emigration. The charges brought against the officers of the Indian (which charges were most carefully sifted by the accused) were to the effect that the single females were constantly open to the visits of the mate, &c. of the vessel; that every remonstrance on the part of the passengers was followed by ill usage and threats of worse to those who complained; and, in one or two instances, of violence to the person. The second mate on a Mr. Hill and other passengers; that the doctor displayed the most cruel indifference to the wants and ailments of the passengers; and that, in the articles of food and water, there was misfeasance, delinquency, or neglect, to a degree of grievousness which it is to be hoped but few emigrants have to endure. The committee of the Female Emigration Society, which has collected so many thousand pounds to aid the orphans, widows, and destitute females who may wish to emigrate, trusts that every care shall be taken to prevent a recurrence of treatment such as the unfortunate passengers by the Indian received. Without such a guarantee it were idle to expect virtuous females, or indeed any persons, to leave their native land.

THE STEAMED SHAN," emigrant ship, Macmeikan master, from Plymouth to Port Philip, with emigrants, was fallen in with by the Mount Stewart Elphinstone, Loney master, on the 6th September last. She had lost her foremast, mainmast, and bowsprit, during a heavy N.W. gale, which occurred on the 3rd of September. Eight of the crew had been carried overboard with the wreck of the masts, and lost; and, with the exception of four, the remainder were unable to work, from having broken limbs. Mr. Loney supplied her with four seamen, and they immediately commenced rigging jurymasts. The vessels parted company at noon of the 6th of September, in lat. 40 42 S., long. 66 51 E. The Mount Stewart Elphinstone arrived at Sydney on the 4th of October; 97 days from Cork. She had on board 227 convicts for Moreton Bay, and had merely called at Sydney for instructions from the Government. Among the numbers were Martin and O'Doherty.

ENDEAVOUR.—We have this week to announce the arrival of the ship Caroline, from London (15th April), with 179 passengers; and the ship Lovisa Isabite, from London and Plymouth (20th April and 9th May), with 161 passengers. Amongst the passengers by the Caroline is a person whose pro per name is Thomas Powell, but who shipped himself in the name of Thomas Rolands. It seems that, having been one of the principal witnesses against the English Chartists, the English Government have secretly provided him with the necessary funds for removing himself and his family to this colony. Another passenger, named John Horsley, from Ashford, Kent, jumped overboard on the 22d of May. It was said that he had parted from his friends in anger, and having been subject to bitter compunctions, his remorse became insupportable.—Adelaide Observer of Sept. 8.

IRELAND.

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN.—Mr. Reynolds has already been served with notice of two actions for a penalty of £50 in each, on the ground of his having presided as Lord Mayor, at meetings of the Town Council, on the 1st and 7th of this month. The proceedings are in the name of Mr. George Powell, a burgess. Mr. Walker, a Town Councillor, has also served a notice on Mr. Costigan, the City Treasurer, not to pay any money whatever from the City funds, on the authority of Mr. Reynolds as Lord Mayor, from the date of Mr. Reynolds's name being struck off the burgess-roll, on pain of the Treasurer's salaries being made responsible.

REPRESENTATION OF SLIGO.—One of the seats in Parliament for the county of Sligo has suddenly become vacant by the resignation of Mr. Pollock, on account of ill-health carried into subsequent inability to attend to his Parliamentary duties during this important session.

ROMAN CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY.—The first meeting of the central committee for collecting subscriptions towards erecting a Roman Catholic University, was held in Parliament-street, on Saturday, when an address to the "Catholic Archbishops and Bishops, clergy, nobility, and gentry of the three kingdoms, and to all others who are likely to contribute to this glorious undertaking," was adopted.

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF EDUCATION.—Jeremiah John Murphy, Esq., one of the Masters in Chancery, has been appointed a Commissioner of National Education, in the room of Mr. Corballis, Q.C., resigned. Mr. Murphy is a Roman Catholic.

THE PICTURE CASE.—The protracted cause of Taylor v. Simpson, which occupied the Court of Exchequer for four successive days, has been brought to a conclusion. The plaintiff, Mrs. Taylor, sought to recover the possession or the value of certain family pictures, one a portrait of her father, the celebrated John Philpot Curran, which she alleged had been obtained from her by the defendant, Mr. Simpson, and his wife. The Chief Baron charged the jury in a long and able address, reviewing the whole of the evidence, in which he animadverted with some severity on the case of the defendant in a moral sense or honourable view, upon the obtaining his possession of the pictures to be legally rightful as a free gift. The jury, after a deliberation of two hours, returned a verdict for the plaintiff of £307 10s. and costs, setting a separate value on certain pictures, viz., £5 on the portrait of Curran, £2 on the £10 Irish, £2 on the £1 9s per head.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Hunting, coursing, and steeple-chasing are now pursuing the "even tenor of their way," with every prospect of "carrying on" to the end of the season. The steeple-chase engagements for next week embrace a good day's sport in Carmarthenshire, and a little-go at Henley-in-Arden, on Monday; and three or four days' racing at Lincoln, Ludlow, Warwick, and Newcastle. The coursing reunions are as follow:—Monday, Whitehaven and Newcastle; Tuesday, Malton and Broughton—both open meetings; Wednesday, Mauble and Newcastle, Durham, &c.; Friday, Nantwich Champion and Middleton.

TATTERSALL'S.

THURSDAY.—A further improvement in the Nigger for the Derby, and the consequent decline of Ghillie Callum, were the only features of the betting this afternoon. The amount of business transacted was limi..nticant.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Consols have again receded, quoting a decline of one per cent. upon the week's prices. On Monday the opening price was 95¾ ⅜ on Thursday bargains were done at 94¾. The fall has been gradual. Monday's closing price was 95¾ ⅞, Tuesday's about ¾ lower; and as the settlements proceeded ¼ per cent. further decline was registered on Wednesday. At the opening of the market on Thursday (settling day), it became apparent that the party for the rise, who had been carrying over for the last two accounts, now found it necessary to close. Sales consequent upon this resolution rapidly reduced quotations to 94¾. The call upon the New Russian Loan falling due on Friday, made money rather more scarce in the house, which, coupled with the absence on that account of the bulk of the Bank Directors, influenced a decline of ¼, equivalent to nearly 4¾ per cent. The market has, however, since been a trifle firmer, at a slight advance. Exchequer Bills are about last week's quotations: the same remark applies to India Bonds. Not much business has been done in Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents or Reduced. Overend, Gurney, and Co. announce an advance of ¼ per cent. on money at "call;" and a rival establishment have advanced ¼ per cent. The closing official quotations leave prices as follow:—Bank Stock, 209 ½ Reduced, 94¾ ⅜ Consols, 94¾ ⅜ Three per Cent. Annuities, 1726, 94 ¼ New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, 97¾ ; Long Annuities, to expire January, 1860, 8 9-16 ; India Stock, 268 ; India Bonds, 89 ½ Exchequer Bills, 1851, 54 ; Ditto, Small, 54 ; Ditto, 1852, 54 ; Ditto, 1853, 54 ; Ditto, 1854, 54 ; Consols for Account, March 13, 94¾ ; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 54 p ; £500, June, 54 p ; Small, June, 57 p.

Considerable animation has prevailed in the foreign Market during the week, principally, however, in South American securities. Buenos Ayres Stock on Monday quoted 61, 62 ; but declined on Tuesday to 59¾, 58 ; nor has it since attained the higher quotation. Equador bonds rather heavy, declining a fraction. Peruvian, on the contrary, has again rapidly advanced, quoting 79¾ 80 on Monday, 80¾ 81 on Tuesday, and 82¾ 83 on Wednesday. Russian Scrip is flatter, quoting 2 ¼ 2. The old loan is also a point lower. Spanish Stock and Portugal are dull, and in Mexican no material change has to be recorded. The advance in Peruvian is almost unequalled. On the 1st of January it quoted 59¾. It is generally understood that the Peruvian Government are buying up the deferred stock, which will leave the dividends due upon the old stock so small in amount, that the poorest state could find no valid reason for withholding payment. The market, towards the close, was not very animated, the settling having been scarcely concluded. Prices are for Brazilian Bonds, Small, 88¾ ; Buenos Ayres Bonds, 6 per Cent, 60 ; Ditto, Account, 59¾ ; Danish Bonds, 1825, 5 per Cent., 95¾ ; Equador Bonds, 28¾ ; Grenada Bonds, 1¾ per Cent, 18 ; Mexican, 5 per Cent, 1846, on Account, 20¾ ; Ditto, Deferred, 3¾ ; Ditto, Small, 20¾ ; Peruvian Bonds, 4 per Cent., 84 ; Ditto, Account, 84¾ ; Ditto, Deferred, 38¾ ; Portuguese, 4 per Cent, 34¾ ⅜ ; Russian Bonds, 1096 ; Ditto, Scrip, 1¾ ; Spanish, 5 per Cent, 1840, 18¾ ; Ditto, Passive, 5¾ ; Ditto, 3 per Cent, 30¾ ; Venezuela Bonds, 2¾ per Cent, 34¾ ; Dutch, 2¾ per Cent., 12 Guilds., 57¾ ; Ditto, 4 per Cent. Certificates, 86¾

Shares are heavy, and a decline in Great Western, North-Western, and Eastern Counties is consequent upon the probable reduction in the rate of dividends, took place on Thursday. It should, however, be added, that some heavy bearing operations are progressing, and every effort to induce sales in Indian Railways has arrived at its climax. Caledonian, prices have declined 1¼ ; Ditto, New £10, Preference, 7¾ ; Eastern Counties, 7¼ ; Ditto, Extension, Five per Cent. (No. 1), ¾ pm. ; Ditto, Northern and Eastern, Five per Cent., 58¾ ; East Lincashire, 27¾ ; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 42¾ ; Great Northern, 9¾ ; Half (B), Six per Cent., 3¾ ; Ditto, Five per Cent. Preference, 102 ; Great Western, 65 ; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 15¾ ; Ditto, Fifths, 12¾ ; Ditto, New £17, 7¾ ; Lancashire and Yorkshire (West Riding Union), 34 ; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 80¾ ; London and North-Western, 109¾ ; Ditto, New Quarters, 12¾ ; Ditto, Fifths, 12¾ ; Ditto, £10 Call, and B.), C, ¾ ; London and South-Western, 68 ; Ditto, New, Preference, 7¾ ; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, New £10, Preference, 7¾ ; Midland, 43 ; Ditto, £50 Shares, 6 ; Norfolk, 29 ; North British, 11¼ ; North Staffordshire, 6¾ ; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 10 ; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, Class B, 4¼ ; Shrewsbury and Chester (Nor. W. Min.), Eight per Cent. Preference, 10¾ ; South-Eastern, 18¾ ; Ditto, Registered New, 6¾ ; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 19¾ ; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, 10¾ ; Ditto, Great Northern and Eastern, Preference, 2 ; York and North Midland, 19¾ ; Ditto, Pref., 6¾ ; East Indian, 3¾ ; Luxembourg, 2¾ ; Namur and Liege, 7¾ ; Northern of France, 14 ; Sambre and Meuse, 9¾.

SATURDAY.—Notwithstanding the considerable demand yesterday on the Stock Exchange, large sums being payable on the new Russian loan. Consols quoted 94¾ ⅞ opening, afterwards advancing a fraction ; but during the day the market was weak. The closing quotation was 94¾ ⅜ for money, and 95 for the March account. In foreign stock and shares no material changes.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The quantity of English wheat received fresh up to this morning's market has not exceeded 1470 quarters. By land carriage and sample the receipts have been small. The stands were very scantily supplied o-day, while the demand for most descriptions was steady at Monday's prices. The actual purchasers are limited in number, small, as increased supplies are expected on Monday The imports of foreign wheat have been only 4580 quarters. The quantities on passage, however, are fully equal to those of the middle and inferior kinds only a limited business was transacted. The supply of barley, both English and foreign, was small. Most kinds sold slowly, at unaltered currency. In malt, the fresh and foreign, was small. Most kinds sold slowly, at unaltered currency. In malt, the fresh supply which has arrived has been 2230 quarters so little was doing that the quotations were almost nominal. The show of Kongish oats was good, that of foreign small. Most qualities sold without alteration, at full prices. Beans, peas, Indian corn, and flour, were very dull

Bread.—The prices of wholesom bread in the metropolis are from 6d. to 7d. of household ditto, 6d to 6½d per 8lb loaf

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, is 6d; barley, is 6d; oats, is 0d; rye, is 6d; beans, is 6d; peas, is 6d.

Cattle.—The demand for Beasts has been steady, at barely late rates. Fine bay Friesland is selling at 3s 10d per 8lb. Common second coupets is quoted at 3s 4d to 3s 6d per ditto. Sheep are in fair demand, the market is well supplied with great quantities, in which only a moderate business is doing

Calves.—The best Irish market continues flat: in prices, however, we have no material change to notice. Mauritius and Bengal qualities have given way 6d per cwt. Foreign suffers still. Home-feds are in fair request. Brown lumps, 42s to 42s 6d ; and fair grocery 50s to 51s per cwt. Both English and foreign crushed dull, at last week s prices

Coffee is still inactive; fine native Ceylons has fallen off, and is offering at a downward tendency ... of good ordinary is 59s per cwt. In other kinds of coffee only a moderate business is doing.

Rice.—The market is flat, at about stationary prices

Provisions.—Irish butter is slow in sale, at barely late rates. Fine bay Friesland is selling at 104s per cwt. Both fine and middling Cork is 96s. Any inferior and surplus, 4ls per cwt, and upwards. Irish butter is dull: but we have no decline to notice in the quotation of Carlow, Clonmel, 74s to 76s ; Cork, 72s to 74s ; Limerick, 72s to 76s ; Waterford, 72s to 74s ; Sligo, 68 to 69s ; Belfast, 64s to 70s ; Derry, 68s to 69s ; and Tralee, 56s to 58s per cwt. Hops (Friday).—Notwithstanding that the supply of most kinds of hops on offer continues small, the demand is in a very inactive state, at last week s quotations The large brewers are not buying, and the trade is very quiet.

New Mid and East Kent pockets, £6 6s to £11 11s; New Weald of Kent ditto, £5 5s to £9 9s ; New Farnhams, £3 3s to £5 5s ; New Sussex, £2 2s to £3 3s ; Yearling Kents, £3 3s to £4 10s ; Yearling Sussex, £2 5s to £3 15s. Old Hops, £1 0s to £3 15s.

Smithfield (Friday).—Although the market is tolerably well supplied with beasts, the primest quality of which proved inferior, the demand for that description of stock was in a depressed state, at prices barely equal to those obtained on Monday. The extreme value of the best Scots was 4s 10d per 8lb, and a total clearance was not effected. The primest of Shorthorns sold at much the same currency. Some few prime quoted prices were realised ; otherwise the pork trade ruled dull. Milch cows were heavy, at from £14 to £18 each, including the calf.

Per 8lb to sink the offals :—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 10d to 3s 2d ; second quality ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d ; prime large oxen, 3s 8d to 3s 8d ; prime Scots, 4s 2d to 4s 10d ; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d ; second quality ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 2d ; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d ; prime Southdown ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 8d ; large coarse calves, 3s 2d to 3s 6d ; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d ; large pigs, 3s 4d to 3s 6d ; neat small porkers, 3s 10d to 4s 0d ; suckling calves, 48s to 80s ; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 21s each. OPENING OF ST. MARTIN'S HALL, LONG-ACRE.

SCENE FROM THE NEW PLAY OF "FIESCO," AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

In offering to our readers an Engraving of the last scene of "Fiesco," painted by Mr. Brunning, and representing the Galley in the Harbour and Port of Genoa, at night, in endeavouring to gain which the hero of the drama is assassinated by the Republican Verrina, we may be excused for re-directing attention to Mr. Vandenhoff's fine impersonation of the character. It stood out in relief from the beginning of the play. In the scene in which he declares the attempted outrage upon his daughter, the ancient Roman reappeared in the actor, and Virginius himself never looked nobler. Mr. Vandenhoff's attitudes and declamation were alike grand and impressive. In a subsequent scene, excited by a picture of Cæsar's death, Verrina would stab the canvas, but is restrained by his companion. Nothing can be finer than Mr. Vandenhoff's passion in this situation; which he completely realises. Nor is he wanting to the last scene of all. Both he and Fiesco are lone men—this has lost his daughter, that his wife, in the political conflict. They have been friends; may yet be, so that Fiesco be true to Genoa and liberty. Verrina prostrates himself at the feet and clasps the knees of Fiesco, in vain. Then it is that Verrina takes the apostate at sudden advantage, and immolates him to the greatness and divinity of an idea. We know no man on the stage who could reach the dignity of an action like this with the facility and power displayed by Mr. Vandenhoff. For such parts he is equally gifted both by nature and education. At the present time he is our only classical actor.

SCENE FROM THE PLAY OF "FIESCO," AT DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

OPENING OF ST. MARTIN'S HALL.

The opening of the great hall took place on Monday night: it is, however, not yet its intended length—fifty feet more are to be added, when the leases of some houses fall in at the west side; galleries are also to be added, and the decorators as yet have done little or nothing. There is, consequently, a naked aspect at present, which is little tempting to induce us to dwell on its architectural pretensions. There is no organ, and we do not think the disposition of the orchestra judicious; the façade is much too elevated for a good distribution of sound. The Hall is well lighted with elegant chandeliers, and there was animation in the general appearance when completely filled with amateurs; and the orchestra presented its band of some seventy players and nearly 500 singers, the latter principally selected from Mr. Hullah's upper singing schools. His presence in the conductor's seat was the signal for a general burst of applause. By his perseverance he has gained great estimation, whatever may be the opinions as to the merits of his system of tuition. The programme opened with Mendelssohn's cantata, "Praise Jehovah," the Latin version of which, "Lauda Sion," was performed at the Liverpool Philharmonic Festival. The solos were sung by Miss Birch, Mrs. Noble, and Messrs. Benson and Whitworth. After which Miss Dolby sang "Mea tormenta," from Haase's oratorio "Magdalena," which was followed by Dr. Crotch's motet "Methinks I hear the full celestial choir," by Mr. W. H. Seguin and chorus; and Handel's air, "The smiling dawn," from "Jephtha," sung by Miss Rainforth. The first part then terminated with Mr. Henry Leslie's festival anthem, "Let God arise," the words selected from the 68th Psalm. It was praiseworthy to inaugurate the Hall with the performance of a work by a native composer. Mr. H. Leslie has already distinguished himself by some chamber compositions. His present essay is one of no ordinary magnitude, and it presents his talents as a cultivated musician in the most favourable light. It is evident that he has studied zealously the Handelian and Mendelssohnian schools: the opening chorus in A is conceived in the forms of Handel; the beautiful tenor solo, "Thou, O God!" sung by Mr. Benson, with the violoncello obligato, evinces the Mendelssohnian tendency: the soprano air in E, "But let the righteous," sung by Miss Stewart, is more strongly marked with the composer's individu ality. The instrumentation in a charming duo for tenor and soprano, "Give thanks unto the Lord," must be cited. The final chorus, "Sing unto God," is full of power, and the fugue is masterly. It was, however, impossible to come to any definite conclusion as to the details of Mr. Leslie's composition, so many points being ruined from inaccurate and indifferent execution. It is to be regretted that his Anthem had not been produced by the Sacred Harmonic Society, by which notice would have been done to its undeniable beauties. The second part was appropriated to secular music, comprising gleanings from Mozart's "Idomeneo;" the two grand scenas from Weber's "Der Freyschütz" and "Oberon" for tenor and soprano, sung by Mr. Sims Reeves and Miss Lucombe—the latter admirably executed her air; Beethoven's Sonata in C minor, exquisitely played by Ernst and Sterndale Bennett; Purcell's air, "I attempt from love's sickness to fly," in which Mr. Lockey was deservedly encored; Spohr's trio, "Night's lingering shades," sung by Misses Lucombe, Rainforth and Dolby, &c.; terminating with the National Anthem.

CHAPTER XII.

THEMISTOCLES LODGE was an old house modernised. It was not a very spacious building; but it was large enough for the late Knight and and his accomplished daughter. The two pillars of the gate, which led by a carriage sweep to the front entrance, were each surmounted with a huge lion rampant; and the trees, which half hid the house from the intrusive gaze of the passers by, were carved in various grotesque shapes, and looked, for all the world, like so many chessmen carved by the hand of Nature—if indeed any one with a less vivid imagination than that of the late owner could believe that Nature would delight in such whimsicalities. Over the door the family coat-of-arms was stuccoed and painted in glaring blue, red, and yellow. Within the house all was tinsel and glitter; there was not a room which did not make the eyes ache with the daubs of red and yellow and gold that besmeared the furniture on all sides: wealth, not taste, it was very evident, reigned over the household. In the drawingroom you were struck, not with the grandeur of the apartment, but with the heterogeneous mass of riches heaped up within that narrow space.

In an upper front room there was a handsome coffin, surmounted with a magnificent stand of feathers, that seemed—so oppressive was their blackness when compared with the other articles in the room—to fill the apartment; and beneath those feathers reposed the corpse of Sir Giles Nicholls, knight, and late county magistrate. Thank heaven! he was about to be given to the worms respectably, and with all the pomp befitting his high station. In the bed-room farthest off from that in which the remains of her father lay (for she was too frightened to sleep in the room next to that in which his still ashes were packed for burial), Miss Janet was busily employed trying on her garb of woe, and taking particular pains to see that it exactly fitted her. When Mr. Nicholls arrived at the paternal residence, he really felt impressed with the solemnity of the scene; and he thought, as he looked upon his father's coffin, that there lay the remains of one who had, with but the most meagre return of thanks on his part, been the source of all his enjoyments hitherto. On the morning of the funeral the friends of the late Sir Giles assembled in the drawingroom; the undertakers busied themselves putting crape round each visitor's hat, and placing a huge pair of black gloves across the crown; the cake and wine were handed round by the head official, who begged of everybody, in turn, to take a glass, for it would give them nerve to go through the trying scene that awaited them; and at length a man thrust his head in at the door, and in a gruff whisper, said, "Are you ready, sir?" Mr. Nicholls replied that he was perfectly prepared, and in a few minutes the heavy tramp of men through the hall reminded the guests that the late owner was passing his threshold for the last time. It would be useless to detail to the fashionable reader the number of feathers and staff-bearers who marshalled the remains of Sir Giles to the churchyard. Everybody knows what a respectable funeral is, and that of Sir Giles Nicholls certainly was very respectable.

The will was in the hands of Mr. Dewpurt, attorney, of Newcastle On the Monday after the solemn ceremony, this gentleman waited upon Mr. and Miss Nicholls, and read them the last will and testament of their departed parent. Miss Janet vowed, at first, that she was not sufficiently herself to go through such a trial of her nerves; but, being encouraged a little by her brother, she was induced to accompany him into the breakfast-parlour, where the attorney was seated.

"Come, my dear Janet," said Mr. Nicholls, soothingly; "you will live with me, you know. It's merely a matter of form, since my father had no relation in the world except myself—come." And the brother and sister entered the breakfast-parlour, and seated themselves opposite Mr Dewpurt and his clerk.

"I am afraid, Mr. Nicholls," began Mr. Dewpurt, "that you will be surprised at the disclosure which this parchment will make to you."

"Proceed sir, proceed," Mr. Nicholls replied, with a careless, con-

temptuous tone, "the nerves of gentlemen are at their own discretion."

Without further preface, Mr. Dewpurt proceeded, without attending either to punctuation or intonation, to disclose to Mr. Nicholls the appalling fact that Sir Giles had willed to Janet a sufficient sum to purchase for her an annuity of £150; after the payment of which and the settlement of the deceased's debts, the residue was to go to Wellesley Nicholl.

"Now, sir," said the lawyer, turning carelessly to Mr. Nicholls, "after the purchasing of the annuity for Miss Nicholls, and the discharge of the debts of the lamented deceased, you must be aware that there will not be a patch or stick remaining. Your father stated, in justification of his will, that he had allowed you £500 a year for the last eleven years; that he had given you a profession; and that he did not despair of your talents.

"I must leave for town to-night. You will arrange matters, I suppose, sir," replied Mr. Nicholls, haughtily, his lip quivering with rage.

"Leave all to me, sir; I will see to everything, good morning. Come, Jeremiah." Mr. Dewpurt having bowed with infinite politeness to Miss Nicholls, departed, followed by his lean clerk.

"I am a beggar, Janet," said Mr. Nicholls, trembling from head to foot: "worse than a beggar!"

"You have your profession, Wellesley," returned Miss Nicholls, quite calmly.

"Not worth a sixpence!"

"You see I can't help you. I shall be barely able to furnish myself with necessaries out of such a pittance."

The brother and sister were fashionable people, felt a proper regard for one another, and parted very decorously—the sister having sighed "What a pity!" when she heard that her brother was a ruined spendthrift.

Mr. Nicholls returned home, thinking by the way of the bill drawn on Reuben Marsh, and turning over in his mind the safest way to escape from the fangs of his formidable body of creditors. There would be no more quarterly remittances, for the old goose who dropped a golden egg four times a year for him was dead.

When he was once safely ensconced in his house, he ordered it to be kept in a state of siege. Scouts were kept on the look-out from the back and front windows, and all provisions were taken in over the area railings.

"It's like Gibraltar," said a seedy man to another, outside; "I've been watching like a hawk for the last twenty days, and I'm hanged if a blue-bo-tle could have got in while I've been on guard. Nicholls has never been seen; but his wife is as vigilant as a cat. What irritates me over and above all is that varmint of a tiger, who keeps a putting his fingers to his nose over the kitchen blind every time I take a lookdown. Eood, if I once comes within reach of that tight bit of his! He looks like a ripe gooseberry in it: prick him, and it's my belief he'd shrivel up like a bust India-rubber ball. Day and night I'm to watch now; they must give in some time or another." And with these sagacious reflections the seedy individual ran his eyes from the garret to the kitchen windows, with the pride of one who anticipates a victory at hand.

The state of the property of the late Sir Giles Nicholls had been published in the papers; and, as a matter of course, had driven the creditors of Mr. Nicholls about his ears like a swarm of wasps. For twenty long days the family had supported the siege with tolerable cheerfulness. Mrs. Nicholls, who always believed in lucky dreams about with her, and declared she would part with them only with her life, had done her utmost to console the dejected Wellesley; but he refused to be comforted, and never stirred from the back room. As day after day passed on, he became more and more gloomy, till at length, on the twentieth day (on the morrow the forgery on Reuben Marsh would be presented), he called his wife to him, locked the room door, and told her that he had a terrible disclosure to make to her; that, come what might, he had done all in the enthusiasm of his love for her; that a prison of shame—perhaps a penal settlement—stared him in the face; in short, that he had forged the acceptance of her brother Reuben Marsh to a bill for three hundred diamonds! To faint, to weep, to blame, to forgive, and then to plan his deliverance, these were the stages through which Mrs. Wellesley Nicholls rapidly passed—pride first swelling at her heart—then love for him with whom she had struggled conquering her fear of the world. On the morrow morning she determined to go by the earliest conveyance to Farnham.

On the day following this disclosure farmer Marsh was up and at work before six o'clock in the morning. His firm hand guided the plough through the earth to produce his wealth. Perspiration stood on his brow as he toiled on hour after hour, and calculated the gains of his honest labour. About half-past nine o'clock Molly came running into the field with a paper in her hand, which, she said, a gentleman had just left for him, with a message, that he hoped, for the sake of Mr. Marsh, it would not be dishonoured. Reuben took the paper, stopped his horses, and as he stood in the furrow which he had just made, read the notice to the effect that a bill of his acceptance for one hundred and fifty-eight pounds, drawn by Mr. Wellesley Nicholls, was due that day before four o'clock, at Mr. Green's, solicitor, Farnham! The blood mounted to Reuben's face, as he read on; he guessed the truth at once.

"Dang the rascal!" he exclaimed at last, in a frenzy of passion. "These is too hard—a bit too hard, Muster Nicholls. Molly, I lent my sister's husband a hundred pounds wi' a willing heart: I would ha'e lent him more, only I knew he was running a full gallop to ruin. Thee know'st I told him so. Well, now look'ee here, he's been and forged my name, and I must pay one hundred and sixty pounds to-day, or let him be transporte.l. He be a rogue, Molly—a rogue!"

"That be he," replied Molly, her head shaking with indignation; and will'e spend our hard earnings on the like rogue?"

Without answering her, Reuben, with his eyes fixed on the letter, continued, "It be enough to kill a man, that it be. I ha'e worked hard for the money; I ha'e paid father's owings like an honest man, without receiving e'er a farthing from them. I ha'e lain un an hundred pounds; and now"—and the farmer drew in his breath, and frowned till his face grew purple. Suddenly slapping his thigh, he muttered from between his teeth, "I'll see lawyer Green, and read Muster Wellesley Nicholls such a lesson like, that he'll not forget to his dying day. Shouting to one of the boys who was within the black bird-scarer, the farmer hurried off, in spite of Molly's entreaties to remember that "the rogue were his own sister's husband."

Reuben had not been long absent when a crazy cab drove up to the farm yard gate, and a lady, elegantly dressed, alighted, paid the fare, and walked into the farm-house. About two hours then elapsed before Reuben again appeared in the field coming down the road at a slow steady trot. The lady was at the door to meet him.

"Well, Sally, gal!" said Reuben, shaking his sister's hand, and looking in her face with a cold searching glance, "this be a sad business."

"Oh! my poor, poor Wellesley!" said Mrs. Nicholls beseechingly.

"I ha'e just been telling Sally," said Molly, advancing with a potato which she was scraping in one hand, "that there be no excuse for Muster Nicholls, and that thee'it expose him before his fine friends."

"Ah, that I will, and may be in a way he won't like!" replied Reuben Marsh, warming again into a passion, and wiping his broad face with an old blue handkerchief. "I tell thee, Sally—and dang it I'm a man of my word—I'll to town to-night and expose Muster Nicholls; it'll be a lesson. Dang it—a hundred and fifty-eight pounds! I been't a coiner!"

"In mercy, Reuben; on my knees I beg forgiveness—it is all, all my fault," cried Mrs. Wellesley Nicholls, falling on her knees with a sandy floor, and clasping the muddy gaiters of her "vulgar" relation. But she pleaded in vain, Reuben was resolute.

(To be concluded next week.)

The Advertisement Duty.—Among the Parliamentary papers issued during the last session, was one showing the number of advertisements on which duty was paid in each year, from 1833 to the end of 1840. This is the last return, and the information contained is of some value. In England the number of advertisements in 1825 was 775,355, and 1 e duty (3s. 6d. each) was £135,871 9s.; in 1827, the number was 750,503, and the duty £133,978 13s. 6d.; in 1828, the number was 779,250, and the duty £136,368 15s.; in 1829, the number was 777,445, and the duty £136,052 17s 6d.; in 1830, the number was 788,091, and the duty £137,915 18s. 6d.; in 1831, the number was 737,949, and the duty £.. 7 3s 11s. 6d.; in 1832, the number was 783,557, and the duty £137,122 9s. 6d. The duty was reduced to 1s. 6d., from the 5th of July, 1833. In 1834, the number was 577,44., and the duty £73,308 1s. 6d.; in 1835, the number was 1,038,041, and the duty £77,853 1s. 6d.; i. 1836, the number was 1,173,136, and the duty £87,985 4s.; in 1837, the number was 1,206,680, and the duty £90,501; in 1838, the number was 1,310,281, and the duty £98,266 11s. 6d.; and in 1839, the number was 1,311,421, and the duty £98,356 15s. 6d., and in 1840, the number was 1,425,387, and the duty £106,904 0s. 6d.

THEATRICAL PERFORMANCES, WINDSOR CASTLE.

As in our last Number we illustrated the theatre, so this week we give a representation of the actors in their "Green-room;" the State Ante-room being the apartment so destined for the occasion.

The apartment is somewhat singular in form, as at either end is a deep alcove, if it may be so termed, or recess, wherein are doors leading to various rooms. These recesses are lighted in the daytime by skylights of ground glass; but the larger portion of the room has only a half light, as its illumination it receives is borrowed from the Grand Staircase, on to which look a lofty door and two windows, all of them having very plain tracery. This apartment forms one of the series usually shown to strangers, and is noticeable as showing the style in which many of the old state rooms had their ceilings decorated. The subject of this pictorial ceiling is the Banquet of the Gods; and at the sides of the coving, groups of fish, fowl, game, &c. are painted; whilst at the corners, groups of figures and boys are represented. This painted work is a fine specimen of the abilities of Verrio, whose gods and goddesses "sprawl" over the ceilings of so many of the mansions erected in the reign of our second Charles and William III. The carved festoons of flowers and game which are above the fire-place, over some looking-glasses, and the recessed doors at each end of the room, are exquisitely beautiful; as, indeed, it would be strange were they otherwise, seeing they are the handiwork of Grinling Gibbons. Some nice tapestry of rich and piquant design, having mythological subjects, fills the walls on either side of the fireplace and the walls of the alcoves before mentioned. In a recess over the chimney-piece, which, by the way, is of white marble, and neat in design, is a portrait of George III., painted on glass, and copied from a picture by Sir Joshua Reynolds; the fruit and flowers, by Grinling Gibbons, serving as a frame.

In this palatial "green room" refreshments were served during the evening to the corps dramacuque. The arrangements for the dressing-rooms were admirably studied, the Queen's Closet, King's Closet, and King's Council-room being devoted to the principal actors, and the Queen's drawing-room or Council-room; and the Vandyck-room, to the other parties engaged in the plays. To form the number of dressing-rooms requisite for the chief actors, partitions were arranged in two of the rooms, so as to divide them into small temporary apartments, and each apartment being provided with toilet requirements, made a series of appropriate and convenient dressing-rooms, communicating immediately with the "green room" in one direction, and the stage in another.

In our Engraving we have represented the actors dressed for "Charles the XII.," and others who, engaged in the first piece, have doffed their costumes for their usual dresses. "Charles the XII." was preceded by "King Rene's Daughter," translated by the Hon. Edmund Phipps, from the German version of the Danish poem of Henric Herz.

Shortly before eight o'clock, her Majesty the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, with the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, entered the theatre, accompanied by her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, M. and Madame Van de Weyer, the Marquis of Ailsdowne, the Marquis and Marchioness of Westminster, Lady Octavia Grosvenor, the Earl of Grosvenor, the Earl of Aberdeen, Viscount and Viscountess Mahon, Lord and Lady Ashley, and other visitors; and attended by the Countess of Desart, Lady in Waiting; the Marquis of Ormond, Lord in Waiting, and the other ladies and gentlemen of the Court in waiting.

Her Majesty and the Prince and the illustrious party having taken their seats, her Majesty's private band, which was stationed in an ante-room, played the overture to "Henri Quatre" (Martini), and the performance then commenced.

A select party had been honoured with invitations to the Castle to witness the dramatic representation, consisting of his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Countess Dowager of Sefton and two Ladies Molyneux, the Dowager Lady and the Hon. Miss Lyttleton and Miss Pole Carew, the Hon. and Rev. Henry and Lady Anna Maria Grey, the two Misses Cust, Peregrine Cust, Lieutenant-Colonel Hon. C. B. and Mrs. Phipps and Miss Bathurst, Colonel Hon. Chas. and Mrs. Grey, Lieutenant-Colonel F. H. and Lady Emily Seymour, Hon. and Rev. Gerald Wellesley, Hon. Edmund Phipps, Sir George and Lady Couper, Miss and Mr. Couper, Hon. Henry and Mrs. Ashley, Admiral and Mrs. Sykes, Major-General and the Hon. Mrs. Scott, Colonel and Mrs. Challoner, Captain and the Hon. Mrs. Tottenham, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Seymour, Mr. and Mrs. Crutchley, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Wells and Miss Lethbridge, Mr. Birch, Mr. Glover, the Commanding Officer of the 1st Life Guards (Colonel Hall), one officer of the 1st Life Guards (Captain Farrer), the Commanding Officer of the Grenadier Guards (Colonel Thornton), one officer of the Grenadier Guards (Lieutenant-Colonel Wm. Thornton).

The Queen's private band played between the acts.

The following was the programme of the performance:—

THE THEATRES.

ST. JAMES'S.

Adolphe Adam's three-act comic opera, "Le Roi d'Yvetot," the words by MM. Lurven and Brunswick, was produced for the first time in this country last Monday. This work was produced in Paris, at the Théâtre Royal de l'Opéra Comique, in October, 1842. It met with considerable success: founded on Béranger's popular French chanson, the sly hits at Royalty, affairs of state, and the civil list, amused the Parisians, so ready to turn into ridicule matters connected with Government, whether Royalist or Republican. Clollet's admirable acting of Josselyn, supported by the sweet and comic powers of Mdlle. Darcier, as Jeanneton, and the gay and catching music of Adam, sufficiently account for the popularity of "Le Roi d'Yvetot." Chollet being included in the cast here would alone justify his performance. The versatility of his powers is quite surprising. Who would recognise in Josselyn the roystering, gallant gendarme, the Philippe-like fanatic Chapel Master—the characters he has already sustained at the St. James's this season? It is in this facility of changing individuality, and of identifying themselves with every new part, that the genius of the French actor differs from our native performers. The story of "Le Roi d'Yvetot" is that of an easy-minded shopkeeper of Rouen, who, in his retirement at Yvetot, is called upon to assume the burden of Royalty, according to the custom of that place—each Monarch having the right to name his successor. Josselyn cares not for the honour; but his servant, Jeanneton, a Rosalcena, finds the will of the King (who is the only Wag), and has her master proclaimed, to his no small amusement, on awakening from a debauch of cider—the common drink of Normandy, as in Herefordshire or Devonshire. Josselyn is resolved to have "a pack to trust per—dition," and the arrival of the Prefect Philippe—but war is declared against him by a Knight-Commander of Malta, because Josselyn proposes to unite Marguérite, his daughter, to Adalbert, whom the Commander wishes to see enrolled amongst the monkish warriors, and consequently doomed to celibacy. Josselyn, however, honored and rewarded that Marguérite is his own daughter; and for fear of the exposure that he had broken his vows, he makes peace, and Adalbert and Marguérite are united. The Royalist political allusions sometimes make the fun of the drama, and the skill of the composer in adapting music to the words has been exhibited in a remarkable degree; it is full of vivacity and facile melodious phrases. Adam is a learned musician and organist, who can throw off a fugue as readily as he can compose comic strains; but he has devoted himself chiefly to the opera bouffa, in which he has made many hits, as in the "Postillon," "La Fonthier de Lot'ismeau," "Le Brasseur de Preston," and "Le Châlet." His ballet music in "Giselle," and in "Le Diable à Quatre" is well known and it may be recollected that he composed for Covent Garden Theatre in 1833, for his brother-in-law, M. Laporte, the music of "His First Campaign."

There was no performance on Ash Wednesday, but on Thursday a morning performance of Auber's popular "Domino Noir" took place, preceded by Chollet's buffa scena, and the duo with Mdlle. Galeard from Paer's "Maître de Chapelle."

SADLER'S WELLS.

A romantic play, by Mr. George Bennett, the actor, was produced on Monday, entitled "Retribution." It affords us much pleasure in being able to add, that it is decidedly a good play. It may be objected, that it is a melodrama—but then it is a drama; the situations are embellished with much poetic dialogue; and the poetry, though conventional, is neither weak nor maudlin. It is, throughout, heavy and sound, and, in some passages, possesses beauty as well as strength.

The characters in the play are well suited to the company. There is Mr. Bennett himself well fitted with a certain hypocritic villanous Sir Baldwin Grenvile, who, years agone, has tempted his friend Ralph de Lacy to kill his wife, from jealousy, and compelled him to abandon his infant son, from the necessity of flight. Then there is the fugitive himself, who reappears as a mock desperado, one Blackbourn, which Mr. Phelps is enabled to make entirely his own such is the mingled ruggedness and pathos of the character. Of the latter, Sir Baldwin is throughout the dupe. To him he entrusts the assassination of De Lacy, who has returned as an adherent of the Cavalier party, and whom Blackbourn pretends to have slain on the field of battle. Him, too, he sets at liberty, when safely imprisoned, on promise of restoring some papers which implicated himself of treason. Next we have a certain Mr. Dickinson, as Philips, a bundling at the gate of Sir Robert Raby (Mr. Younge), who, as the lover of Sir Robert's daughter, Alice (Miss Glyn), found an efficient representative in Mr. Marston. Sir Baldwin has also a son, a sickly youth, one Edwin (Mr. Dickinson), who loves Alice, who, also, as a brother, loves him, but no further—Philip is her heart's elected lord. Sir Baldwin, irate at this preference, would lead Alice to believe that the foundling was the illegitimate offspring of his protector. At this idea the soul of Alice is agitated to its depths. She questions her father upon the point, and then her lover. This gives occasion to some of the great acting on the part of Miss Glyn. Forcewardly, Philips had just before had an interview with Blackbourn, and knows himself to be De Lacy's son. The scene between Mr. Phelps and Mr. Marston, in which the latter is recognised by his father, is grandly conceived, and delivered with remarkable energy by Mr. Phelps, who was deservedly called before the curtain by the audience at the end of the third act. Up to the close of the fourth, Sir Baldwin, however, has the advantage of all parties. The chances of war have made Raby, his daughter and her lover, his prisoners; and, according to the sentence of a court-martial, he may doom them to the block. There stands the headsman outside the chapel, unless Raby consents that Alice forthwith wed Edwin. But Edwin is dying—retires with Alice to have speech apart with her. Sir Baldwin will take vengeance; but Blackbourn enters, followed by the King's troops, reveals his name and character, and arrests Sir Baldwin for treason. All this was admirably mounted and acted.

"Charles XII.," having been performed at Windsor Castle, has found its way to more than one metropolitan stage. At the Haymarket and the Lyceum it has been already revived; and it is also advertised for Drury-lane. At the last-named theatre a performance of "Julius Cæsar" was performed on Thursday:—Brutus, by Mr. Vandenhoff; Cassius, by Mr. Cathcart; and Mark Antony, by Mr. Anderson.

At the Queen's the comedy of the "Clandestine Marriage" was acted; and on the same evening Mr. Brooke acted Shylock at the Olympic.

At the Marylebone, the Adelphi melodrama of "Jane Lomax" has been in the ascendant; while at Astley's an entirely new and magnificent spectacle, in two acts, entitled "Corse de Leon, or the Brigand of Savoy," has been produced, founded on Mr. G. P. R. James's romance of the same name. The plot of this, as our readers know, is laid in the reign of Henry II. of France. Lord Masteran (Mr. Jackson) is the hero of the piece, from whose power Corse de Leon (Mr. Hicks), with his brigand band of horse and foot, rescues Bernard de Rohan (Mr. Crowther) and Isabella de Bruno (Miss E. Loveday). In like manner, through all their various dangers, the lovers are saved by the interposition of the brigands. The whole piece concludes with a tournament, and is throughout got up with great splendour and effect, the scenery being exceedingly picturesque.

Financial and Parliamentary Reform.—On Monday evening last a numerous and highly-respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Great Yarmouth was held at the Corn Exchange, in that place, for the purpose of establishing a branch of the National and Parliamentary and Financial Reform Association. Mr. C. Barber was called to the chair, and a series of resolutions, in accordance with the requisition, were adopted. At the close of the meeting, members and associates to the number of 120 were enrolled, and in less than an hour; besides which, several were compelled to leave without tickets, owing to the great number of applications to join the new branch society.

Trade.—On the 14th of January last, the 16th of last October her Majesty's steam-sloop Gorgon, Commander Paynter, took possession of Tigre Island in the name of the Queen, in the consequence of the Honduras Government refusing to cede their just debts, and returned to the Commander-in-chief on the station, leaving a party of 46 officers and men on the island. Rear-Admiral Hornby, however, having disapproved of the steps taken by the commander, despatched the Gorgon from Callao on the 14th December last to Tigre Island, to embark the party, and to surrender the island. Hants Telegraph.

Mr. Baxter, superintendent of the Wellington division of the Salop constabulary, has absconded. He was suddenly missed on the 23rd ult., and his whereabouts has not yet been discovered, although handbills have been circulated throughout the kingdom with a view to his apprehension. It is reported that his defalcations are heavy.

SPLENDID METEOR, SEEN ON MONDAY NIGHT.

We have been favoured with the following communications respecting this phenomenon:—

Royal Polytechnic Institution, Feb. 12, 1850.

Last evening I saw a most extraordinary meteor, of which I send you a Sketch as it appeared over Hampstead. A straight buck cloud extended from south to north, and the stars on either side of this cloud were unusually brilliant. When the phenomenon alluded to occurred, it issued forth from about S W., and appeared to travel slowly in a direction N.E. On its first emerging from its hiding-place it was a clear white light; about midway of its flight it assumed the brilliant yel.ow of the light produced in the combustion of sodium; and before it disparted, its colour was of that peculiar pink colour of potassium when burning. Robert Longbottom.

(We have engraved our Correspondent's sketch. The accompanying Illustration is by a Correspondent who witnessed the phenomenon from the Fulham-road, looking towards Earl's Court and Kensington.

Another Correspondent, writing from the Brompton Hospital for Consumption, says:—"The brilliant meteor which passed over the metropolis on Monday night had a singular effect on the numerous patients in the several wards of this hospital. It appeared to rise immediately in the rear of the new chapel now erecting in connexion with the institution, and rushing over the hospital, diffused a light of the most fearful intensity. To those only slightly acquainted with meteorological phenomena the light was alarming, but to the naturally timid the effect was most distressing.

Royal Observatory, Greenwich, Feb. 14, 1850.

The fine Meteor of Monday night, Feb. 11, was seen by the Astronomer Royal, and he has given me permission to extract some particulars from his account of the Meteor to send you.

"On the night of Feb. 11 I was standing in the computing-room, with my eyes glancing downward to some papers on a table, when my attention was attracted to a general light of strong yellow colour upon that part of the sky which was seen through a window viewing to the N.N.W portion of the sky. I raised my eyes, and saw the sky fully illuminated; the form of the N.E. dome and the walls near it (which had been totally invisible before, and were totally invisible afterwards), the room and the objects (4) were brought out not only distinctly but conspicuously—I think as well as if a large moon had been behind the dome; but the colour of the light was so different as to make comparison difficult. I then noticed that the meteor was in the direction W.S.W. to E.N.E. a brilliant body, like a Congreve rocket, followed by two others of less brilliancy close behind it (I cannot assert that there were not more than two) in the same direction. The path of the meteor was nearly horizontal, but slightly rising I think. It passed my field of view in less than 1½ second, which was very quickly dark as before. On going into the open air, I found that that part of the sky on the north, generally to the height of 30° or 40°, was starlight, and that there were stars visible overhead; but the south was clouded."

From the observations of the Astronomer Royal, it appears that at 10h. 41m. 28s. very nearly, the altitude of the meteor was 17° W. of N. nearly, and at the same time its altitude was 30° nearly.

If any gentleman at distant parts of the country should have observed this meteor, I should be glad if he would furnish either the Astronomer Royal or myself with an account of its appearance, its path in the heavens, and time of appearance, &c. James Glaisher.

Blakeney, Norfolk, Feb. 12, 1850.

As I was driving home last night, at twenty minutes to eleven, I saw a very large meteor under Orion's Belt, and midway between that and the horizon. Its appearance was instantaneous, and lasted about three seconds, emitting a most brilliant light, which had, at the period of its greatest intensity, a bluish tinge. So intense was the light that I was enabled to see the very smallest objects with perfect distinctness. The course of the meteor was from north to south, and it appeared to be not less than twenty feet in length, and contracted and expanded with the greatest rapidity, giving me the idea of an enormous flaming umbrella, which was opened and shut alternately. The quarter of the sky in which it appeared was covered with black clouds. Constant Reader.

Leamington, Feb 12, 1850.

I beg to hand you a description of a beautiful meteor which I saw here last night. I saw it about 10 45 P.M. It burst some time with a brilliant blue light, like a very large rocket star—it then descended about half-way it appeared to go out, and then appeared like the falling stick of a rocket; it soon lit up again, and continued to burn brilliantly till out of sight. It appeared to bear about E.N.E, and fell nearly perpendicularly, a little inclining to the S.; it lasted for about five or six seconds. About three minutes afterwards I heard a report like a cannon at a great distance. John Hebb.

A Correspondent of the Wolverhampton Chronicle, writing from Penn Fields near Wolverhampton, says:—"Allow me to briefly notice the appearance last night (February 11), of a peculiarly large and brilliant meteor. After a stormy day of wind and rain, the latter ceased at sunset, but the former at the same

LIFE, FIRE, AND MARINE ASSURANCES may be effected on the most advantageous terms with this Corporation, which has transacted business in all quarters of the globe during a period exceeding a Century and a Quarter, and affords unquestionable security by its Capital and Stock.

The reversionary BONUS declared on British Life Policies effected on the system of participation in profits, has amounted, on an average, to rather more than Two per Cent. per annum on the Sum Assured, or 40 per Cent. on the amount of Premiums paid.

Equivalent reductions have been made on the Annual Premiums payable by those of the Assured who desire that their share of profit should be so applied.

The position and character so long maintained by the Corporation afford a sufficient guarantee that this bonus has been declared out of surplus actually realized, and not by anticipative future profits

Policies are granted for sums payable to the Assured on their attaining any specified age, or to their representatives in case of their premature death.

A BONUS Assured with this Chartered Corporation is exempt from the Liabilities of Partnership. ALEX. GREIG, Secretary.

THE FLORIFORM PARASOL.

Registered, Act 6 & 7 Vict., c 65,

Some time ago, a Member of the Arc-Union" Journal contained a letter from a Lady on the Shapes of Parasols, the writer of which suggested that a great improvement might be made in their appearance, by adopting in their formation the configuration of the Flowers, instead of the antique Mushroom shape.

This suggestion, as far as is mechanically practicable, is carried out by the invention of the FLORIFORM PARASOL, which exhibits, when open, the elegant outlines of an expanded flower.

The FLORIFORM PARASOL may be purchased of all first-class Mercers and Parasol Dealers throughout the Kingdom; and wholesale, of JOHN HOLLAND and SON, Manufacturers, 90, Eastcheap, London-bridge.

ABBOTT and SON'S PALE ALE.—Bow Brewery, Middlesex.—Brewers, by special appointment, to his Royal Highness Prince Albert.—Private Families and Hotels are respectfully informed that a beautiful description of light Ale may now be obtained from the above Brewery at 32s, 42s, and 54s per barrel and 36 gallons—the rate of 2s per barrel being allowed if paid for on delivery. Casks of 9, 18, and 36 gallons each. Delivered in London daily, and the suburbs twice a week. Porter, Stout, and Strong Ales in casks and bottles.—City Office, 26, Gracechurch-street.

THE TEETH.—A very curious invention has been announced to the Public by Mr. HOWARD, of 17, George-street, Hanover-square; it is the introduction of an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble natural teeth, as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observation, and will not change colour or decay, and will be found very superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, and will support and preserve the teeth that are sore, and is guaranteed to restore perfect articulation and mastication. The invention is of importance to many persons, and those interested cannot do better than avail themselves of it.

TRY that FAMOUS REMEDY PARR'S LIFE PILLS.—It is a fact beyond dispute that most of the diseases with which the human race are afflicted are the result of a disordered state of the blood. To remedy this, the occasional use of PARRS LIFE PILLS should be had recourse to, and sickness prevented, as well as cured, in their operation they go direct to the disease. None are genuine unless the fac-simile of the signature of the proprietors, "T. ROBERTS and Co., Crane-court, Fleet-street, London," is on the directions. time increased for a short space, and then gradually lulled. The night became calm and clear, with a few clouds on the horizon, and the stars shone with remarkable brightness.—At a little before eleven o'clock I was struck by the sudden appearance of a brilliant light resembling a continued gleam of lightning, but which, on looking up, I perceived to proceed from an elongated luminous ball, falling rapidly from the zenith towards the eastern horizon. It appeared like a mass of molten metal, but little smaller than the moon's disc, and comparatively at a short distance from my place of observation. The light given off was intense, and rendered the whole landscape distinctly visible. When approaching the earth it seemed to burst, but without noise. A shower of luminous fragments, like red-hot stones, was discharged, or rather fell through, but were soon extinguished. The whole phenomenon was visible, as well as I could judge, for about sixty seconds. In general appearance it more resembled what is usually understood by a meteor, but its magnitude and apparent nearness was remarkable. Had it, however, exploded with detonation, I should have supposed it to be an aerolite."

I was an eye-witness of a splendid meteor on the night of Monday, the 11th inst., at 20 minutes to eleven o'clock. It first appeared like a star, about four times as large as Venus, with a dull golden tutre, and rapidly increased in brightness till it became a white light, resembling an immense diamond, and put forth a tail like a waving blade of red flame; as it proceeded, the tail either disappeared or was lost in the increased brightness of the head, which at last shone so brilliantly as to light up the whole atmosphere—the light certainly far exceeded that of the full moon; it then became suddenly extinguished. It evidently displayed the process of combustion. I first saw it somewhere a little above the Pleiades, and it descended obliquely towards the north, and disappeared about the lower part of Cassiopeia. I think its greatest length was about 2°; the length of its visible path about 18° or 20°; and the time it was visible three or four seconds. I thought the last I saw of the meteor as the light vanished was a red spot, but it disappeared instantaneously. I looked round at the clock directly it had disappeared, and it was exactly twenty minutes to eleven.

THE LATE FIRE AT ASHWELL.

IN our Journal of last week we recorded this calamitous event, on the 2nd instant, at Ashwell, near Royston. A Correspondent has favoured us with the accompanying Sketch of the ruins, which have been visited by many thousands of persons from Bedford, Cambridge, Hitchin, Baldock, Biggleswade, Royston, and the neighbourhood for many miles round.

RUINS OF THE RECENT FIRE AT ASHWELL.

The buildings destroyed are, we are informed, except two cottages, fully insured. The poor labouring people, however, who have lost their furniture and clothing, have nothing to depend on but a subscription, which has been promptly entered into; and, for this purpose, the following appeal has been issued:—

ASHWELL.—It having pleased the Almighty to permit the destruction of a very large portion of this parish by fire, the charity of the Christian public is earnestly appealed to in behalf of the destitute and houseless sufferers. Six large farms, several small holdings, and about thirty houses are totally destroyed; and nearly two hundred persons thus deprived of their dwellings, and many of every article of furniture and clothing. Contributions, both in money and clothes, in relief of their urgent distress, will be thankfully received by Rev. Henry Morice Vicar of Ashwell; Messrs. Hogge and Lindsell, Bank, Biggleswade and Baldock; Messrs. Fordham, Bank, Royston; Messrs. Sharples, Exton, and Lucas, Bank, Hitchin; Messrs Barnett, Hoare, and Co., 62, Lombard-street, London; and Rev. J. Byng, Vicar of Langford, Hanlow

One gratifying incident occurs in the midst of the painful record of the conflagration. The dwelling of the minister of the Independent Chapel, together with his furniture, having fallen a prey to the flames, and not being insured, that gentleman has been invited to make a temporary home at the residence of the Reverend Incumbent belonging to the Church of England; and, generally, relief has been administered to the sufferers without regard to sect or party.

In confirmation of the statement that the fire was the work of an incendiary, it is related in the County Press, that Mr. Westrope, on going into his farm-yard, a short time since, found very near one of his ricks a piece of straw-plait, which had been lighted, and apparently thrust into the side of the rick, but had fallen out, and smouldered to extinction. This excited suspicion, and a watch had been nightly kept on the premises, up to the period of the conflagration, on the 2nd instant.

A CENTENARIAN.

AMIDST the present agitation for the sanitary improvement of the metropolis, it a gratifying to find, in one of the most thickly-peopled of its localities, a fine old Englishman who has just attained the age of one hundred years. Such is James Colman, the original of the above Portrait, who was born on Valentine's Day, 1750; and, accordingly, reached his hundredth year on Thursday last. The place of his birth was Church-court, Strand, in the parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, now swept away by the improvements in that locality. Colman has lived all his lifetime in the parish, and now dwells in the back-parlour of the house No. 58, Castle-street, Leicester-square. His wife is also alive, at the advanced age of eighty-six years; and both enjoy the use of all their faculties. The old man regularly attends Divine service at the parish church, without assistance; and was a communicant on the 3rd instant, when the Rev. Sir Henry Dukenfield, Bart., had the satisfaction to administer the Sacrament to him.

Colman was educated at Archbishop Tenison's school, in St. Martin's parish; and among the reminiscences of his boyhood is his having witnessed the funeral procession of King George the Second, in November, 1760. Colman was apprenticed to Mr. Sherborne, a writing engraver, then living at the house No. 2, Craven-street, Strand. Our Centenarian is much respected; he has been an abstemious man throughout his long life: he may say with trusty old Adam—

> In my youth I never did apply
> Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood.

The accompanying portrait is from a Daguerréotype, taken on the 5th inst. when the old gentleman managed, without difficulty, to mount four flights of stairs, to sit for the process. It is an admirable likeness; and the features have a placid and benevolent expression, which is remarkably pleasant: the age is, in the words of the poet, "frosty, but kindly."

The Daguerréotype has been taken at the expense of a gentleman who has known and respected Colman for six-and-thirty years; and who rightly considers this remarkable instance of longevity to be rendered doubly interesting by its exemplary association with habits of temperance and other characteristics of a well-spent life—the best assurance of a cheerful evening of rest unto the soul.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 414.—Vol. xvi.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1850. [Sixpence.

THE CHARTIST LAND DELUSION.

Mr. Feargus O'Connor, the Hibernian regenerator of the people of England—the man who was to teach the children of labour how to live—the founder of O'Connorville and the Paradise of Snig's-end, has sought the aid of the law to vindicate his character from the aspersions cast upon it by a newspaper published in the town of Nottingham, which he represents in Parliament. We think it fortunate for the labouring classes that he has been compelled to do so, and that the real character of the "Land Scheme," about which so much has been said and written, has been at length laid bare, for the edification and warning of all interested.

The case of "O'Connor against Bradshaw," which last week occupied the Court of Exchequer for three days, was the means of raising two issues—the legality of the Snig's-end project, and the honesty of Mr. Feargus O'Connor. The first is most indubitably a question of very large importance, when we consider the number of hard-working men who have contributed their money for a chance of the advantages promised them by its projector. The second is a question of more interest than importance, but not without a due share of the latter quality, when we consider that a clever rogue and a foolish enthusiast—and Mr. O'Connor must be one of the two—have almost equal powers to lead a multitude to their ruin.

Mr. Feargus O'Connor, the "enchanter" at whose "wand"—(the words are his, not ours)—the Elysian fields of Snig's-end, in Gloucestershire, were to receive the happy men who were so fortunate as to gain allotments, may or may not have believed in the Paradise he drew. We shall suppose that he did. How childishly beautiful in that case appears his faith, as he unfolds it in the following letter to the men who subscribed £112,000 to realise his ardent scheme of public happiness. Writing on the 24th of April, 1847, he says:—

My Dear Friends,—On Saturday, May the 1st, every bell in England should peal forth notes of joy, and every working man should sing a song of gladness, because the path to freedom will have been opened, and the prize at the end easy of acquirement. I say that there never was such a day for England and the world, as the 1st May, 1847, will be; and that the beginning which will then be made will sap and undermine and overthrow the whole edifice of corruption, monopoly, and misrule. At twelve o'clock on that day your brethren will be each put into possession of his estate for ever; and when that hour arrives you may suppose what my pride, my pardonable pride, will be.

While quacks are devising means to perpetuate ignorance by a false system of education, and while economists who cannot employ you three hours a day are grumbling at limiting the labour of females and little children to ten hours a day, I am trying to induce you to work fifteen hours a day while young, that you may rest when you are old. I shall sleep at Herringsgate on Saturday night, as I promised to toll the school bell, even on Sunday morning, that I may have the satisfaction of hearing all my children, old and young, exclaim, "D—n the factory bell!" Your feelings will be the best answer to my accusers and the opponents of the plan, when you sit down in your own house, from which no tyrant can hunt you. And when you are located, you and your children, and your children's children—if I shall live to see my great-grandchildren—shall ever be the chief object of my every care and thought, and I won't rob you, neglect you, or diminish your store of happiness; but I will work the harder to assist the needy, as I would sorrow greatly if any lost the nest I built for him and his family.

Wishing that we may have a fine day, as many friends are coming from all parts of the country to witness the novel spectacle of slaves being turned into freemen by the charmer's wand, I am, your faithful and affectionate friend.

Could we suppose, after the verdict of the jury in the Court of Exchequer that Mr. O'Connor did not believe in the justice and the practicability of the scheme to which he applied this glowing language, and that he was merely concocting a plan to benefit himself and not the poor men who subscribed the £112,000, what is the epithet that public indignation would be justified in applying to his conduct? We leave it to the imagination of our readers to supply.

Somehow or other these Edens of the brain, these Paradises that the Cabets, the Owens, and the O'Connors are so fond of picturing before the bewildered eyes of the struggling multitudes, never stand the test of investigation. The enchanter's wand, be it waved ever so vigorously, fails to realise the Elysium to the experience of any man who settles himself bodily within its bounds. So found the unhappy exiles of Icaria. So found the unhappy allottees of Snig's-end. One John Hudson deposed on the trial last week that he was a "lucky allottee." He had been a framework knitter in Leicester, earning, by the exertions of himself and his family, at the average of one pound per week. He had paid £2 12s. for a chance of obtaining a corner in the Snig's-end-heaven-on-earth portrayed by the vivid imagination of the Hibernian philanthropist, and went in June, 1848, to take possession. He received £5 to bring his family to his allotment of two acres. "He was," he says, "delighted at first, but soon found that he had been deceived. O'Connor said he would find it a Paradise, but he didn't. He worked the land as long as he had money, but had then to go elsewhere to earn his support. The appearance of the place was at last enough to frighten a man back again. His boy and himself worked from light to dark. They paid no rent; but O'Connor said they were to pay four per cent. on the outlay as a rent-charge. He charged witness £8 10s. a year for his two acres. He could not live on the produce of the land, but he worked for others, and cleaned clocks for a living. Nothing was planted on his land but potatoes. All the timber on his estate was two apple trees. He had to pay 3s. 6d. a quarter poor-rates." Alexander Cleland, a Glasgow hand-loom weaver, who does not seem to have possessed anything like a fair share of the usual "canniness" of his fellow-countrymen in the city of St. Mungo, stated his earnings, before he was induced to go to the Gloucestershire Paradise, to range from twelve shillings to a guinea a week. Only four persons were balloted for in Glasgow, although there were several hundred members entitled to a chance of a corner in Snig's-end, and who sent sometimes as much as £45 in one week to Mr. O'Connor. He was one of the lucky four. He was to pay no rent, but merely a rent-charge. "He had several conversations with Mr. O'Connor at Snig's-end, and received altogether £13. His land had been ploughed over, but it had not been cropped for some years previous. There had been no manure on it; and for one ploughing and a half-acre of potatoes the directors charged him £7 10s. The disease seized his potatoes, and they never came to maturity. He had to work (out of the farm) for his family's life. They had a very hard time of it. They had bread sometimes, at others not. He and his son often toiled the whole day, and had nothing but turnip soup." These two cases are sufficient to show the practical cruelty exercised, either wilfully or unconsciously, upon two poor mechanics who were parties to the scheme. The whole project was either a gross mistake of a well-meaning friend to the working classes, or a deliberate fraud. The jury in the Exchequer Court are willing to have it believed that it was the former—and there we must leave it. We cannot, however, do so without pointing out that M. Cabet's transatlantic Paradise of "Icaria," so often reviled, was fairness itself in its operation, compared with the plan of allotment for Snig's-end. M. Cabet gave every man who contributed to his scheme the option of embarking in it. Mr. Feargus O'Connor made his a lottery, and—as in the case of the Glasgow mechanics—only allowed a few men out of several hundreds to become denizens of his community.

SNIG'S-END.—(FROM THE ROAD.)

The question as to the illegality of the scheme was settled by the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer. "Mr. O'Connor," said his Lordship, "had received £112,000 from the subscribers. He had no right to have received that money without the protection of the act of Parliament, namely, by the complete registration of the 'scheme.' Supposing that gentleman were to become a bankrupt, every shilling in his bank and every one of the estates which had been purchased in his name, would be laid hold of for the benefit of his creditors. This was a position which no man was justified in placing himself in. No man had a right to take such a monstrous responsibility upon him unprotected by the law. With respect to the estates, there was no man who had a legal title to them but Mr. O'Connor.' If Mr. O'Connor wishes to silence the voice of public accusation, if he wishes to prove that those who object to his conduct in this business have been guilty of calumny, there is but one course open to him. Nothing that he can do will realise the glowing anticipations of his letter of April, 1847; nothing in his power to accomplish will convert Snig's-end into a fit, profitable, and happy abode for poor mechanics, unaccustomed to agricultural labour; but, at all events, he can show the subscribers to the £112,000 invested by him in landed estates, that his hands are pure in the matter, and that, if his head fails, his heart is sound. Let him REGISTER the scheme, and throw off the responsibility of a mere trustee, by making every poor man who has contributed to it a legal proprietor to the extent of his contribution; and then—but not till then—will suspicion of his conduct be authoritatively and finally removed. Every hour's delay—notwithstanding the absolution of the charge of dishonesty, so generously given him by the jury—will but add to the weight of indignation which the deluded labouring classes will cherish against him. It signifies but little to the man who has been defrauded, whether the result be attributable to the knavery or the folly or him who has been the cause of it. Mr. O'Connor cannot—if he have any hope of continuing in public life—afford to treat either alternative with contempt.

THE CHARTIST ESTATE—SNIG'S-END.

THE Snig's-end property, high figures so prominently in the trial in the Court of Exchequer last week, is one of the seven estates upon which the "Land Scheme' of Mr. Feargus O'Connor has been proved to present so miserable a failure

Snig's-end was bought by Mr. O'Connor in 1847; the purchase-money being £19,200. It lies on the road from Gloucester to Ledbury, being a flat and seven miles from the former. The property consists of 208 acres of deadly clay, and unsuited for spade cultivation. There are about eighty cottages already built: they are of red brick, with slated roofs, and each contains a kitchen and back kitchen, and two bed-rooms. Adjoining is a pig's cot and cow-shed.

Mr. O'Connor has here a cottage for his own residence; and for some time after the purchase of the property, was in the habit of frequently visiting the "Paradise"—journeying thither by railway on the Saturday, and returning to London on the Monday.

The first Illustration upon the preceding page shows the beginning of the estate, with the cottages built in the form of crescents; and the MALVERN Hills in the distance.

It has been stated that exceptions have been put in some of the cottages, by order of O'Connor, to recover arrears of rent; and certain of the tenants have published statements setting forth the hardship of their position.

The first person seen by our Artist, on reaching Snig's-end, was a shoemaker from Exeter, who had been there about eighteen months. He thought it was "a bad place," and so did "everybody else." He works a little at his trade, when he can get any. He stated that he had lost all his little capital—in fact was entirely deceived—dragged away from a comfortable home under the promise of the ground being fully cropped; whereas, last January twelvemonths, instead of his land being cropped, he found that half an acre only had been put in the day before he came; and that was all he had to live on for nearly twelve months, except a few cabbages

Our informant next saw a man (an Irishman) working in a garden attached to a house presenting a better appearance than the rest. This man stated that he had nothing to find fault with, "as all at all" the ground was good, and he was satisfied. This Irishman, however, proved not to be a member of the community, but was only employed as a labourer by the foreman. The Snig's-end tenants are generally regarded by the country-people as outcasts, and Chartists.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The current week has been a very busy one with the coursing fraternity, the calendar having provided no less than eleven meetings in various parts of the country all of which, no doubt, came off. The equestrian classes were provided with a good day's flat and steeple-racing at Lincoln, and with some fair sport "across the country" at Henley-in-Arden and Carnarthenshire. The "gathering" at Liverpool next week will be a brilliant one; and, what with the Champion Coursing Meeting, yclept "the Waterloo," over the plains of Altcar, on Tuesday and Thursday, and the Grand National Steeple-chase, Spring Cup, and other flat races, on Wednesday, will have nothing to be desired. There will also be a steeple-chase at Scarton, in Yorkshire, on Thursday; one near Edinburgh (the Mid-Lothian) on the same days as the Waterloo; another at Ba dock, on Wednesday and Thursday; and, on the last-mentioned day, the Trentham Open, over the "ducal" property.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

We have nothing of any interest from France this week. Some rumours of a change of Ministry, which had been prevalent in Paris during the first few days of the week, have been contradicted on authority. The Moniteur contains a decree for erecting a monument to Marshal Ney, on the spot itself where he was shot. This memorial is to represent the Marshal showing his breast, and uncovering his heart to death.

The Socialists in the east and south of France continue to excite the watchful attention of the Government. A great number of strangers have lately visited Lyons upon the plea of seeking work, but there is every reason to believe that their object is to organise an insurrectionary movement.

During the last two or three days the President of the Republic has inspected the several barracks, giving away money to the soldiers, and expressing his deep regret that want of funds would not allow him to be more generous.

The Director-General of Customs has notified to his subordinates that henceforth French and English packet-boats plying between England and France (those of commerce as well as those of the Post-office) shall be authorised to convey patterns and packages of merchandise of a weight not exceeding six kilogrammes twenty-five decagrammes, without, as heretofore, thereby subjecting them to the payment of extra tonnage dues.

The idea suggested by M. Emile de Girardin of a general illumination in Paris on the 24th of February by all the opponents of the Government, has been unanimously rejected by the Socialist Clubs, "lest the agents of the police might take advantage of it to create a disturbance."

ITALIAN STATES.

ROME.—Accounts to the 12th instant state, that, in consequence of the assassination, at Rome, of a French officer who had insulted a lady, General Baraguay d'Hilliers has issued the following notification :—

Inhabitants of Rome,—The Commander-in-Chief, wishing to put an end to the assassinations which engen'der the horrors of civil war, the officers and men of the army, decrees that the carrying of knives, poniards, or any other dangerous instruments is prohibited in every of its environs. Whoever shall be found carrying about them such weapons, shall be immediately shot.

GENERAL BARAGUAY D'HILLIERS.

ROME, Feb. 11.

On the 9th—the anniversary of the proclamation of the Republic—a grand demonstration took place on the Corso, at eleven o'clock, by all the Republicans, which terminated in a peaceable promenade, and without disturbance.

It is announced that the Pope has refused the loan at 78 contracted for by the house of Rothschild. The new municipal and provincial constitution for the Roman States, which is said to be liberal, will be published immediately after the Pope's return to Rome. The diplomatic corps is to set out for Rome a few days before the Pope, in order to go out to meet him at Castel Gandolfo.

NAPLES.—At Naples, on the 8th instant, the Marshal Nunziante declared all the provinces of Calabria Citerior in a state of siege.—The advices from Sicily are anything but satisfactory. Six young men had been shot on the morning following an outbreak which took place there a day or two previous to the 9th, the date of the last accounts.—The Prince of Salerno's palace has been much damaged by a fire caused by the spontaneous ignition of a large quantity of coal in some extensive cellars adjoining.

SWITZERLAND.

Accounts from Berne to the 17th declare that the Federal Council has decided on having its evening the refugees executed. The cantons of Geneva and Berne declare that they are disposed to submit to the orders of the Council.

GREECE.

We have accounts from Athens of the 4th inst. Admiral Parker had seized about thirty small craft, and the blockade extended as far as Galaxidi. The rumour of the island of Sapienza having been taken possession of by the above English officer was without foundation. There is no other news.

RUSSIA.

At St. Petersburgh a fire broke out in the treasury of the palace of Prince Peter of Oldenburgh, by the bursting of one of the heating flues, on the 5th inst. As the cold was most intense, being 3 degrees, all the exertions of the firemen were for a time fruitless. The wind at length happily turned to the west. The immense stock of plate belonging to the Prince was melted; and a great number of valuable documents, among them several state papers, fell a prey to the flames.

UNITED STATES.

Advices from New York to the 5th inst. have been received.

Nothing has yet been done in Congress respecting the grants of land to the Hungarian refugees.

The motion of Mr. Clay, respecting the slavery question, proposing an amicable arrangement of the dispute between the free and slave states, was made in the senate on the 29th January. The first resolution maintains the admission of California into the American Union without any restriction on the exclusion or introduction of slavery within its limits. In the 2nd resolution it is provided that territorial governments should be established by Congress in the territories acquired from Mexico, without any introduction of any condition on the subject of slavery. The 3rd and 4th contended that the western boundary of Texas be fixed on the Rio del Norte, from its mouth to the mouth of the Rabbie. The 5th and 6th assert that slavery ought not to be abolished in the districts of Columbia during the existences of the institution in the State of Maryland, without the consent of the people of the district, and a just compensation to the owners of the slaves; and that Congress has no power to prohibit the introduction of slaves in any state escaping into any other state or territory; and that Congress has no power to prohibit the trade in slaves between the several states, that being an arrangement to be decided according to the principles of the constitution, by the particular laws of the states themselves. The resolutions were supported by Mr. Clay in a speech of masterly eloquence and ability, which produced a strong sensation on the senate: they were to remain for public debate, to be made the subject of special consideration in the Senate on Tuesday, Feb. 5th.

There is another proposition on the same subject before the Senate, also, at the present time. It is of the President of the Republic, General Taylor, who proposes that the whole territory under government for the territories be left to the people themselves—that Congress pass no laws extending government over them, but leave the people, at their own pleasure, to form a constitution and apply for admission into the Union as sovereign states.

CALIFORNIA.

The accounts from California are to December 31, and are of considerable interest. The Legislative Assembly met on the 17th, and Governor Burnett was inaugurated governor on the 21st. Governor Burnett's message congratulated the citizens on the formation of the state, and on Government excluding slavery. The mining operations have been suspended in consequence of snow and rains.

A tremendous conflagration had taken place at San Francisco, on the 24th of December, destroying a large portion, probably one half, of the city. The loss is estimated at from 1,500,000 dols. to 2,000,000 dols.

The Constitution was adopted, 12,000 being in its favour, and 8000 against it.

The Empire City, from Panama to New York, 16th inst., had 600 lbs. of gold-dust, supposed about 1,000,000 dols. in hands of passengers. In the vaults of the British company of Panama were about 800,000 dols. to 1,000,000 dols. in specie from the mines. This was expected at Chagres, for the Sierra.

CANADA.

Annexation meetings continue to be held in different counties and parishes of Lower Canada. The resolutions generally express adhesion to the principles of the Montreal manifesto, declare all the evils under which Canada is alleged to labour to the fact of its being a colony; and that the colonial state is only in its nature the precursor of independence.

In Upper Canada annexation does not appear to make much progress. The belief seems real founded that the Americans are not much opposed to it, although they have shown very little open sympathy with it.

Meetings of branches of the British American League have, up to the present moment, declared in favour of the application of the slavery principle to both the lower branches of the Legislature; and ten have declared against it. This fact is interesting, as the league is principally composed of Tories, while the reform party still amounts in office to preponderance.

The Government still continues the dismission of annexationist magistrates and militia officers, with the approbation of Lord Grey.

INDIA AND CHINA.

An extraordinary express has brought papers from Bombay of the 17th ult., Calcutta the 7th ult., and China the 26th December, in advance of the Overland Mail. There is no feature in the news now received that claims particular attention. Throughout India and China quietness prevailed in a remarkable degree. Colonel Bradshaw and Lieutenant Hay returned to Peshawur, the refractory inhabitants in the Euzufzaie country having rendered complete submission to British authority. Sir Charles Napier has been passing under review the army at Lahore, and the examination has elicited from his Excellency unmitigated censure. Never, says Sir Charles, was discipline so ineffective; for such troops in the field would prove dangerous to their friends and contemptible to their enemies. The health of his Excellency the Governor-General (Marquis Dalhousie) was much improved, and his perfect recovery might be expected in a few weeks. Lord Gough had taken his farewell of India, and was a passenger on board the same vessel that conveyed the present mail to Malta, where he awaited one of the Oriental and Peninsular Company's steamers, on board which he intended to journey to England.

The Chinese papers contain a rumour that the pirate chief Shap-'ng-tsai had sailed forth again in search of prey; but upon inquiry it did not appear to rest upon any good foundation. At Amoy, on the 23rd of December, an extensive fire took place, destroying 450 houses and much property. The loss is estimated at £170,000. Her Majesty's steamer Reynard, Captain Craycroft, rendered valuable assistance

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Cape of Good Hope papers of the 22nd December have arrived, but the news they supply is of little importance. The convict question was the ruling topic of conversation in all circles; and the exertions of the anti-convict associations in carrying out their proposed objects knew no limits. Trade was, to some extent, suspended, and it was expected so to continue until Lord Grey's final [illegible] has to the duties of the prisoners on board the Neptune.

A Madrid letter of the [illegible] states that Lola Montes was in that city, in strict incognito, but that she [illegible] in a few days.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

THE ORANGE AFFRAY AT DOLLY'S BRAE.

Lord STANLEY moved for a variety of papers bearing on the affray between Orangemen and Ribbonmen, on the 12th of July last, at Do ly's Brae, in the north of Ireland, on the investigation at Castlewellan, and on the dismissal of Lord Roden from the Lord-Lieutenancy of the county of Armagh, and of the Messrs. Beers from the commission of the peace. The noble Lord said it was his disagreeable duty to impugn the discretion of the Lord-Lieutenant in reference to these transactions, although he emphatically disclaimed all intention of impugning his motives. It was also his duty to impugn the proceedings of Mr. Berwick, the commissioner nominated to inquire into the matter; and likewise to impugn the conduct of the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, in allowing his high office to be degraded, and in abdicating his legitimate right of protecting the magistracy. His (Lord Stanley's) judgment strongly condemned, as "unmeaning and mischievous," all those party processions; and his sincerity was established by the fact that, when he was Minister, he had proposed the Processions Act, therefore he was free from all undue bias towards the Orangemen; but he believed them to be, as a body, brave, loyal, and religious. The noble Lord proceeded to give a circumstantial narrative of the unfortunate occurrence, and then minutely dissected the evidence given before Mr. Berwick's commission. He contended that neither the dismissed magistrates nor the stipendiary magistrates believed that the Orange meeting was illegal; on the contrary, Lord Roden had reason for supposing that he was acting under the sanction and approval of the Government, and with the countenance of the police who attended. The noble Lord also contended that the evidence laid before the Lord-Lieutenant by Commissioner Berwick was unfairly and partially reported—that it was garbled and distorted, and in one respect false. He charged the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland with having, on the mere recommendation of the Lord-Lieutenant, in the space of 3 hours after receiving that recommendation, without question or explanation, summarily dismissed two magistrates—a mode of proceeding that amounted to an abdication of his high functions, and to the degradation of his office to the will of the Minister. In 1848, the Government was willing enough to take the Orangemen into favour, to flatter and caress—nay, trust them. The commission given to Mr. Berwick was of much more doubtful legality than the procession itself; it was a mock tribunal which took away men's characters, while the witnesses were not intimidated by perjury. He contrasted the evidence, as furnished to the Lord-Lieutenant, with the report, which had been kept a secret, and hinted that material portions were omitted, and that much was distorted; and as to Mr. Berwick's report, he maintained that a strong bias was evident throughout it. The commissioner had endeavoured to insinuate and even to bribe, as it were, the sitting magistrates at the Castlewellan inquiry, by holding out a promise that the parties, if convicted, would only have a nominal sentence. In short, the whole proceedings were unwarranted, arbitrary, and unjust. An application to the Queen's Bench would have settled the case, but the friends of Lord Roden could not settle it, and could not fail to excite the feeling in the magistracy that they were the dependents of the political Government of the day. Lord Stanley, in concluding his speech, which occupied three hours in the delivery, and which was made up almost all of details, explained the motives that induced him to bring forward this question. He found that the public mind was misled with respect to the matter; and he thought it right that the facts should be known, and that the truth, and the whole truth, should be before the country. He brought it forward in a quasi-judicial capacity, and he sought by it no party triumph, no vote of censure on the Government; much less did he stir it for the purpose of exciting animosity between Protestant and Roman Catholic, or of raising discussions prejudicial to the tranquillity of Ireland. He merely asked for further information than he already published.

The Earl of CLARENDON (who had come over from Ireland for the debate) immediately rose, and began by expressing a hope that his appearance there would not be misconstrued or made a precedent for a Lord-Lieutenant to come over from his post to answer charges made in that House against his administration. He had come over from Ireland on this occasion, because a sort of challenge for him to appear in his place in Parliament had been made, both by Lord Stanley and Lord Roden, and he had not determined to come without much doubt, for he knew it would lead to much difficulty and detriment to the public service if the Lord-Lieutenant were expected to attend in Parliament to answer similar accusations. He was not sorry that the question had been brought forward, for he felt satisfied that, by relating facts and supplying omissions, he could prove to their Lordships that the dismissal of Lord Roden and of the two magistrates was an act necessary to the appointment of the noble Earl, proceeded to give a detailed account of the investigation instituted under Mr. Berwick, and insisted that party processions were ipso facto illegal if they threatened danger to the public peace, of which Lord Roden and the magistrates were duly warned by the Lord-Lieutenant were expected to attend in Parliament to answer similar accusations. He was not sorry that the question had been brought forward, for he felt satisfied that, by relating facts and supplying omissions, he could prove to their Lordships that the dismissal of Lord Roden and of the two magistrates was an act necessary to the appointment of the noble Earl, proceeded to give a detailed account of the investigation instituted under Mr. Berwick, and insisted that party processions were ipso facto illegal if they threatened danger to the public peace, of which Lord Roden and the magistrates were duly warned by the law officers of the Crown. He defended Mr. Berwick's character, and maintained that throughout this investigation he had acted fairly and impartially. With respect to the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, the noble Earl asserted that he had been consulted, and it was only after full deliberation with the Cabinet and with the Lord Chancellor of Ireland that they arrived at the painful conviction that it was necessary to supersede Lord Roden and the Messrs. Beers. One great consideration overcame all private feelings—the necessity of rendering law in Ireland a reality, of meting out justice equally to high and low, and of placing all parties with confidence in the impartial administration of the law. Such inquiries as that of Mr. Berwick had been sanctioned by successive Governments and Parliaments, and that gentleman had been made a magistrate of the county in order to enable him to take evidence. Lord Clarendon read a letter from the Irish Attorney-General, declaring that he was throughout acquainted with the whole case, and had not now, nor ever had, the slightest doubt about the necessity of dismissing Lord Roden, and that he regarded every act of dismissal as an act of mercy. Lord Clarendon also read a letter from a reporter, which completely contradicted the statements made by the short-hand writer relied on by Lord Stanley, and, in fact, charged him with perjury. In concluding his speech, Lord Clarendon vindicated himself from the charge that he had given arms indirectly to the Orangemen of Dublin in 1848. He established that Captain Kennedy gave the £600 to the Orangemen out of his own pocket, and he said himself, to keep them in humour; and he gave their Lordships his solemn assurance that he had neither directly nor indirectly, had he given the Orangemen a weapon, or a shilling to buy one. The noble Lord closed his defence of having clear Lordships the satisfactory assurance that Ireland was now more free from sectarian or religious disturbances and agrarian outrages than for a long period, and that there was solid ground for a hope that the social regeneration of that country had at last commenced. He had no objection to the production of all the papers asked for.

The Earl of RODEN defended his conduct; and, after observations from the Earl of ENNISKILLEN, the Earl of Winchelsea, Lord Brougham, the Marquis of Clanricarde, and Lord Abinger, Lord STANLEY replied, and expressed his satisfaction at the course of the debate, which fully established the character and honour of LORD. Roden as an impartial magistrate.

The motion was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE CHARTIST LAND SCHEME.

Mr. FEARGUS O'CONNOR, addressing the Speaker, said that his character had been attacked in another place (the House of Lords, at the sale trial there) by an hon. member of that House, the hon. member for Sheffield (Mr. Roebuck), and he begged to ask the Speaker whether there was any mode in accordance with the rules of the House by moving the adjournment or otherwise, whereby he could bring the subject forward, and defend himself from the charges made against him?

The SPEAKER said there was no course which he knew of whereby the hon. member could bring the matter before the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Lord J. RUSSELL rose to move "That, upon Thursday, the 11th day of April next, and every alternate Thursday following, orders of the day have precedence of notices of motions." The noble Lord stated that the object of the motion, which had been agreed to for several sessions, was, that business might be settled earlier in the session than it could be done if notices to introduce resolution had originally been agreed to, the Government had gained little. From 1843 to 1846, they had ten Thursdays; in 1847, eight; in 1848, seven; and in 1849, only eight. And private members would have practically as much time as was at all necessary.

Mr. HUME moved, as an amendment—"That upon Thursday, the 11th April, and every Thursday following, orders of the day have precedence of notices of motions; but that the right shall not exist before [illegible] Mr. [illegible] placing Government orders at the head of the list." The hon. member then went on to say, that he only seen there would be no opportunity for individual members bringing forward any matters. (Laughter.)

On a division the amendment was lost by a majority of 143 to 47.

On the question that the original resolution pass,

Mr. DISRAELI said that these motions were a kind of systematic attack on the privileges of a minority (hear, hear), and before this a minority had been the only hope of a suffering community. (Hear, hear.) He could not understand why hon. gentlemen should be so ready to relinquish those privileges which of old had been the greatest boast of that House (Cheers.)

Lord J. RUSSELL remarked that the practice had prevailed for ten years, and what had proved good for ten years could not be bad. Thursdays earlier in the session, rather than all Thursdays at a later period of the session. He should take the sense of the House on the motion.

Sir R. PEEL said it certainly was a strange thing to deprive independent members of their opportunities for impeaching the acts of the Administration. (Hear, hear.) But he had a reluctance to oppose the proposition, inasmuch as he would be loth to be made it himself. (Hear, hear.) However, when he reflected that the Government had indicated an intention to [illegible] of public importance ("Hear, hear," and laughter), and it appeared that the House were extremely indisposed to attend to individual members on such subjects (Hear, hear), and he conceived that they were better in the hands of the Government—on the whole he would support the motion. ("Hear," and a laugh.)

On a division, the numbers were

For the motion	113
Against it	47

The resolution was accordingly agreed to.

METROPOLITAN GRAND JURIES.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL stated, in answer to Mr. Forster, that Government intended to introduce into the House of Lords a bill to alter the Grand Jury system for the metropolitan districts.

THE LATE HOSTILITIES BETWEEN DENMARK AND PRUSSIA.

In answer to a question from Mr. Sandars, Lord PALMERSTON said that the English Government had proposed to continue the armistice between the Danish and Prussian Governments, and that the Danish Government consented to do so conditionally on the Prussian Government and Central Government of Germany also consenting. There might be some difficulty as to the latter Government, but he was in communication with it. Meantime the armistice would be continued until notice was given.

THE AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

On the order of the day for the second reading of the Australian Colonies Government Bill,

Mr SCOTT moved that such second reading be postponed until further papers were produced. He contended, at great length, that the measure had been adopted without due deliberation, and that the colonists were averse to being experimented on.

Mr. LABOUCHERE would not, at the present stage of the bill, go into its details; but, after alluding to the fact of Mr. Scott's being retained as paid agent for Port Phillip, denied that he represented accurately the opinions of the Australians. He quoted certain documents in support of this contradiction; and, in reference to the monstrous question, defended the Ministerial scheme, alleging that although he certainly preferred two Chambers to one, yet, as it seemed necessary to have one only, it was equally necessary to have a sufficient number of Government nominees to counterpoise the democratic influence there.

Mr. ROEBUCK objected to the bill was, that it gave power to men who did not derive their authority from the will of the colonists. This bill was the worst of all abortions ever put forth by an incompetent administration. We were taking an irrevocable step, and one which would for the future be the continual source of discontent and quarrel; whereas we ought to give the Australians really free institutions, instead of a government by the clerks of the Colonial office. He wished to understand why different measures were doled out to Australia and to the Cape? The influence of the Colonial-office was a mildew upon the colonies.

Lord J. RUSSELL had never heard a speech so full of blunders as that of Mr. Roebuck; and, moreover, was really asking the House to set at nought the opinion of the Australians, and to force its own idea of a Constitution upon them. The attacks in which it was replied, he had alleged against the Colonial and other like him to assail the Colonial Office, were, in truth, attempts to dispute the power of the Crown. The "clerks" had literally nothing to do with any matters of decision. The object of Ministers, in bringing in the present bill, which was provisional in its nature, was to give increased weight to the opinion of the colonies. The people of Australia would certainly not be satisfied with the species of constitution which had been sent to the Cape; and, though he (Lord J. Russell) preferred two chambers to one, it was for the Australians to decide the question. After defending the Colonial Office from Mr. Roebuck's attack, and declaring that the bill had been drawn with great care, he should ask the House to read the bill a second time.

Mr. F. PEEL had no objection to the greater part of the measure, and especially approved of the principle of popular institutions, but he wished to see two distinct and independent chambers. He could not admit that the colonists had expressed an unmistakeable opinion upon this part of the question. He would desire an upper chamber, to which, in order to prevent the swamping of small states by larger ones, each state, without regard to its population, should send an equal number of representatives.

Sir WILLIAM MOLESWORTH objected to the bill as not giving the Australians a power to frame their own constitution, but as being a hybrid scheme for sending them a bad constitution, and telling them to mend it.

Mr. CHISHOLM ANSTEY warmly opposed the bill.

Mr. MANGLES supported the bill, though he had objections to details.

Mr. HUME was opposed to rely rather upon the declarations of Ministers than upon the words of the bill as it stood at present. He objected to the clauses relative to the Church. But he was anxious to forward the bill, and recommended its being read a second time.

Mr. HAWES admitted that the mass of the colonies preferred two chambers to one, but said that each colony had a right to expect that no important alteration in its constitution should be made without consulting its own representative body. He was indisposed to vary any of the provisions of the bill; and, in answer to previous speakers, he defended the system under which picked men were sent out from England to fill important colonial offices.

Mr. VERNON SMITH said that all the satisfaction the colonies had expressed amounted to this—that they were glad to have as much as they could get. He condemned the connection of the Colonial Office with the Church, and said that England were much more interested in the colonial questions of military expenditure and of transportation.

Mr. ADDERLEY adduced an instance in which Lord Grey had completely misunderstood an opinion from a colonial governor, and supported Mr. Vernon Smith's statement as to the limited satisfaction expressed by the colonies.

Mr. MONCKTON MILNES said that as large and liberal a concession had never been made to any of the colonies. He recommended a general Australian Confederation, especially for the purpose of treating waste lands upon a uniform system, without which emigration would be discouraged.

Mr. WYSE commended the principle of the bill, but objected to its details.

Mr STANFORD made a Protectionist speech, charging Ministers with abandoning an ancient and wise system. The impatience of the House brought the honmember to an end.

The bill was then read a second time.

PARTY PROCESSIONS (IRELAND).

The Party Processions (Ireland) Bill passed through committee.

LAW OF LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Sir W. SOMERVILLE moved for leave to bring in a bill to provide compensation to tenants for improvements effected by them, in certain cases, and to amend the law of landlord and tenant in Ireland. He mentioned the various attempts which had previously been made to legislate for the above purpose. The bill which he now wished to bring in was a material reform the same in effect as that included in 1848. It was most simple and easy of comprehension; but he should not go into a detail of the measure, preferring that it should be in the hands of members. Among other clauses it contained provisions that ejectment for non-payment of rent should not apply to tenants from year to year, and against the prevalent custom of carrying crops away on Sunday or by night

Lord CASTLEREAGH said that if this bill went to destroy tenant-right in Ulster, it would meet with the greatest hostility. He regretted the tenant agitation in Ireland, and still more that the Presbyterian clergymen were taking the lead in it, and he cited some of their language with great disapprobation, especially an expression of one of them, who had declared at a public meeting that "God had not only made his own people farmers, but had given them their farms in perpetuity."

Mr. MAURICE O'CONNELL expressed satisfaction at the prospect of the bill

Colonel DUNNE expressed similar feelings, and hoped that the bill would be discussed when the majority of Irish members were present.

Sir W. SOMERVILLE said that his bill would not affect tenant-right in Ulster.

Leave was then given to bring in the bill.

Mr. CORNEWALL LEWIS obtained leave to bring in a bill to authorise the inclosure of certain lands, in pursuance of the 8th and 9th general report of the Inclosure Commissioners for England and Wales, and to confirm the proceedings in the matter of the common wood inclosure.—Adjourned at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Earl GRANVILLE moved the second reading of the Railways Abandonment Bill, the object of which was to provide for the dissolution of companies by vesting powers for that purpose in the railway department of the Board of Trade.

Lord BEAUMONT, the Duke of Richmond, the Lord Chancellor, and Lord Langdale approved of the principle of the measure, but objected to the details.

Lord MONTEAGLE recommended that the bill be referred to a select committee.

The Earl GRANVILLE acquiesced. The bill was read a second time, and referred to a select committee.

The Earl of GLENGALL laid on the table a Bill to Facilitate the Transfer of Lands in Ireland, which was read a first time.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE INCOME-TAX.

Lord J. RUSSELL (in answer to Mr. Henley) said that there was no intention of altering the Income-tax.

THE AGRICULTURISTS AND THE POOR-LAW.

Mr. DISRAELI, in pursuance of his notice, moved for a committee of the whole House, to consider such a revision of the Poor-laws as may tend to mitigate the distress of the agricultural interest. He represented the condition of that interest as even darker than when Parliament, at its meeting, refused to recognise agricultural distress. He stated the abiding belief on his side of the House that such distress had been caused by recent legislation, and that the only remedy for it would be the re-enactment of protection. That belief which, in time, he said, the whole House would share), but, he added, it was not well that the House should become a mere debating society; and after the division on the Address, it was clear that a large majority in both Houses would not, at present, disturb the legislation in question. It was, therefore, necessary to look to the best remedy, the adaptation of the system of taxation to the altered circumstances of the agriculturist. The latter demanded two things—equality with his fellowsubject, land, in his own market, equality with the foreigner. From the time that the Freetraders had resolved that the soil of England should compete unrestrictedly with all the other soils of the world, they had lost all right to go into questions of rent and profits, as between owners and occupiers, although it used to be believed in the House, and it was still so in the country, that, as all our institutions sprung from the land, a statesman ought to take care of the territorial population. Certain parties considered land as merely a

EXPLOSION OF A STEAM-BOILER IN HAGUE-STREET, NEW YORK

TERRIFIC STEAM-BOILER EXPLOSION IN NEW YORK.

A terrible disaster occurred on the 4th instant, at New York, by the explosion of a boiler of a steam-engine in a machine shop, crushing the building, which was six stories high, into a vast mass of ruins in less than one minute. About fifty persons, it is said, were killed and sixty wounded, by this awful catastrophe, the building being occupied by several workmen. The accident occurred in the large machine shop and printing-press manufactory of A. B. Taylor and Co., 3, Hague-street, which had just been supplied with a new boiler for the steam-engine. It was located in the basement of the building. At about half-past seven o'clock in the morning, the boiler exploded, the forces passing upward and outward towards the street. Bystanders say they never saw a wreck so complete; the walls, floors, large timbers, and roof lay in one immense pile, all on fire, and seething, smoking, and steaming beneath the flood of water poured upon them.

The New York Weekly Herald, in its account, makes the following extraordinary statement:—"As soon as the explosion took place, we are informed by persons who witnessed the catastrophe, that the whole building, which was six stories in height, was actually lifted from its foundation to a height of six feet, and, when it reached that elevation, it tumbled down, crushing in its ruins a vast number." It then goes on: "So great was the force of the explosion, that fragments of the building were scattered in every direction; the windows in the neighbourhood were broken; and a large portion of the front wall of the fated building was thrown with tremendous power into the houses opposite. In fact, the building was completely wrecked, hardly one brick being left standing on another, with the exception of a solitary piece of wall, eight or ten feet high, as if to indicate what had been. So dreadful was the explosion, that the windows in several houses in Pearl-street were broken. Even the sashes of 351 were smashed. A gentleman, who was looking on at the time, informed us that the explosion was like the reports of two cannons fired in quick succession one after the other. Doubtless, the second report was the crash of the falling ruins. Immediately after the explosion, fire burst from the promiscuous heap of bricks and beams, and human bodies were seen with legs and arms sticking out—some of them dead, some living. The fire alarm for the district was first given, and then a general alarm, which brought the firemen from all parts of the city to the scene of desolation." Some piled the engines, while others assisted to get out as many as possible of those who were under the ruins. In a short time the fire was so far subdued that the firemen could work more effectually in removing the bricks and timbers; and towards ten o'clock there was scarcely any flame issuing from the wreck: but the heat was very great, and the great difficulty to be avoided was lest those beneath the pile should be either drowned or scalded; while on the other hand they might be burnt to death by the fire; and but little could be done to save those still living, until the fire was completely brought under.

MICA BAY.

This romantic Bay is the principal mining establishment on the British side of the Lake Superior, and has excited a good deal of attention of late from the Indians taking forcible possession of it, on the ground that no equivalent was given them by the Provincial Government.

Perhaps it is as well that the miners had no arms; for, had they anticipated any such attack, and been prepared, no one, who has read Buxton's "Life in the Far West," can for a moment doubt that the result would have been very serious.

The Quebec Mining Company will resume operations in spring next; and, as it is said they have a most valuable mine, it is to be hoped that the exports of copper from the British side of the lake will soon equal that from the American, which this year exceeds in value one million sterling.

MICA BAY, ON LAKE SUPERIOR.

The island of Michipikoten, belonging to the same company, is rich in both silver and native copper, and is soon to be colonised and the mines tested.

We are indebted to a Quebec Subscriber for the accompanying Sketch of Mica

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Retrenchment.—The Lords of the Admiralty have ordered a committee from each of their departments at Somerset House to assemble and report upon the merits of a plan to unite the Record Offices into one, by which great and unnecessary labour, as well as £2000 annual expense, will be saved to the country.

Pursers' Accounts and Somerset House.—In consequence of the great pressure of business at Somerset House examining pursers' accounts, it is reported that their Lordships are about to appoint all the unemployed clerks of the navy in that department.

Royal Marines, Woolwich.—An order has been promulgated for the reduction of the strength of this branch of the service to the extent of ten companies, each company consisting of one captain, two subalterns, five sergeants, five corporals, three drummers, and 76 privates, making a total of 30 officers and 100 non-commissioned officers, 30 drummers, and 760 privates, including 150 of the marine artillery. The present strength of the Royal Marine corps at the four grand divisions, including those afloat and on the recruiting service, is 7000 near the full complement; consequently, the reduction now announced will not greatly reduce the efficiency of the divisions, as the men are not to be discharged at once, but the reduction will take place by the discharges in the usual course, or as casualties and deaths occur. The reduction will be most felt by the officers, as the number stated will cease immediately from the performance of active duties. It has given great satisfaction to this corps to know that instead of the ten junior captains being placed on the half-pay list, ten o the senior captains are to be allowed to retire on full pay.

Letters from on board the Arrogant steam frigate, one of the vessels of the squadron at present at Lisbon, describe the resignation of their gallant commander, Captain Fitzroy, as a calamity, as he was so highly beloved by his officers and crew. The esteemed officer was so pleased with his officers and men as to remain two months longer in the command than he intended, in the hope that his health would have been so far restored as would have prevented the separation which has now taken place, to the deep regret of all parties.

The Army Estimates for the Year 1850-51.—It appears by the estimates of effective and non-effective army services, from the 1st of April, 1850, to the 31st of March, 1851, issued on Wednesday by order of the House of Commons, that the number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and rank and file which it is proposed to maintain for the service of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland (exclusive of the troops in the East Indies) for the ensuing year, is 99,128. The estimate for the charge of her Majesty's land forces for service at home and abroad, is £4,540,936. Five regiments of cavalry and twenty-four of infantry are employed in the East Indies. The charge of these regiments, and of the East India depôts at Maidstone and Chatham, is defrayed by the East India Company, and this amount (£978,565), deducted from the above, makes the sum to be provided, £3,562 430.

The Arctic Expedition.—It is now decided that the Baboo and Ptarmigan sailing-vessels will be commanded by captains, and the Elder and Free-trade screw propeller steam-vessels, by lieutenants.

Sir John Franklin.—We learn that Mr. Grinnel, one of the merchant shipowners of New York, and formerly a member of Congress, has augmented his former subscription of 5000 dollars towards the fitting-out of an expedition to proceed in search of Sir John Franklin's party, to the princely donation of 15,000 dollars. It is intended that two small vessels of 160 and of 60 tons respectively shall proceed to Barrow's Straits, in May next; and it is calculated that the cost of such an expedition will not be more than 25,000 dollars.

ATHENS AND THE PIRÆUS.

In one sense the day of Greece is over. She can never again exercise political influence in Europe, except in the case of her becoming, through the captiousness of the great Powers, a bone of contention she can never again send forth conquering fleets from the Piræus, nor evince, in any respect, the aggrandizing spirit which once rendered her so troublesome a neighbour. Her army is insignificant; the largest ship in her fleet is a corvette; and as to her finances, the less said about them the better. But, in another sense, the day of Greece will never be over. While men continue to possess thinking minds, and the capability of appreciating the beauty of intellectual excellence, they must hold Greece in high and reverend admiration. We derive from that land the first inklings of (profane) poesy and historical composition; the rudiments of the fine arts; the principles of law and philosophy. Look where we will on the paths of genius, we find them all leading us back to that one country, and, with scarcely an exception, to one favoured city of that country. That city it is which has lately been undergoing the penalties of blockade by our squadron, and of which some description may not be unacceptable to our readers.

THE PIRÆUS, AT ATHENS.

The names of places are nearly all as they were in the ancient days. Even where a modern name has been introduced the people frequently repudiate it, and fall back on the classical designation. About Athens all has been clearly made out and the sites identified. The three harbours are still there—the Piræus, the Munychia, and the Phaleram; of which the first only is serviceable. The Piræus is not large, but it is very snug. The entrance is particularly narrow, so that the channel for ships of considerable burden has had to be marked out by stone piers. On the shores of the harbour is a considerable town, comprising many good houses, as well as branches of the consular establishments, and the unfailing Lazaretto. The view we give is taken from the rising ground, near the outer mouth of the harbour; in the distance are seen the prominent features of Athens itself, viz. the Acropolis and Lycabettus; while Pagnes and Pentelicus bound the prospect. The Piræus is about five or six miles from Athens, and it is not very long since this distance was rendered inconsiderable by the running of an omnibus between the two stations. Now this service is performed by cabs, of which there is an abundance. The cabmen afford, in their persons, a very good specimen of the national character; and no stranger can converse with them during the journey up to Athens, without perceiving symptoms of the Hellenic stamp. The most ragged charioteer is perfectly well-informed, though probably loose-principled, on political matters; and some will even discuss philological questions. In passing up the road, considerable remains of the celebrated "long walls" are to be perceived, which used in olden time to connect the city with the Piræus, and which were so important as a defensive work.

The Queen's Avenue at Windsor.—Just before the departure of the Court from Windsor Castle for Buckingham Palace, a new avenue of trees was planted in the Home Park, leading from the Royal residence to the terminus of the London and Windsor Railway, in Datchet-lane, which is situated just beyond the walls of the Park. Her Majesty, accompanied by the Prince Consort, the Royal children, and a numerous party, was present at the ceremony of planting the trees, of which there are between thirty and forty. The first tree was planted by her Majesty close to Datchet-lane. The Prince Consort, the Royal children, and the visitors present also planted one each until the required number was completed. By means of the private drive which has been formed, her Majesty can now proceed from the Castle, through the Royal domain, to the railway terminus, without having to travel more than a hundred yards on a public road.

SUSPENSION-BRIDGE ACROSS THE DNIEPER, AT KIEFF, IN RUSSIA.

GREAT SUSPENSION-BRIDGE IN RUSSIA

CONSIDERABLE interest has been excited in St. Petersburg by the exhibition of a remarkable model of a Suspension-Bridge across the river Dnieper, at Kieff, one of the principal cities of Russia. This model was made in London, where it was exhibited to most of the principal engineers and architects. It has been put up in one of the grand saloons of the Winter Palace; and it was formally presented to his Imperial Majesty on his fête day, the 14th of December, by Mr. Vignoles, the English engineer, from whose designs, and under whose immediate direction, this Bridge is now constructing.

The Dnieper is one of the largest rivers in the Russian Empire; rising in the vicinity of Smolensko, and flowing in a southerly direction, it enters the Black Sea to the eastward of Odessa. In a broad geographical sense the Dnieper may be considered as the ancient boundary between Russia Proper, or Muscovy, and the great kingdom of Poland, which once extended westward nearly to the giant mountains of Bohemia, southward to the Carpathians, and northward to the Baltic.

The principal city watered by the Dnieper in its long course to the sea is Kieff, celebrated in history as the first spot wherein Christianity was planted among the barbarous hordes then leading a nomadic life over the steppes of Russia; well known also as an important military frontier post, alternately possessed by the Poles and by the Muscovites; and at present rising into great importance as the capital of the south of Russia.

Kieff is most picturesquely situated on the right or southern shore of the Dnieper; it covers a great extent of space, with numerous public buildings crowning the many heights of the undulating ground on which the city is built. Among these the number of churches is remarkably conspicuous, especially the far-famed "Lavra," said in the romaunts of the middle ages to be approachable only through the "Golden Gates of Kieff." The general aspect of the city is very striking, and the impression on a traveller from the western parts of Europe is that which he would expect to receive on first viewing some Asiatic capital.

The commercial part of the town, called the Podol, lies on a low plain at the western extremity; the rest of Kieff is elevated from 100 to 300 and even 400 feet above the level, overlooking all the left or northern shores of the Dnieper, which are low and flat marshes, extending for many leagues above and below Kieff, and from one to two leagues wide. In the spring the whole becomes a lake as the waters rise, and the only approach from the north into Kieff is along a causeway raised above the level of the floods. It is from the end of this causeway that the Suspension-Bridge is thrown across the Dnieper to the foot of the steep acclivities on the right bank. The river, which for several leagues above has spread through numerous lateral channels, here unites into one deep bed, and presents the narrowest passage. This passage is, however, still half an English mile in breadth; the depth of water in a dry autumn being upwards of thirty feet in the stream-way, and sometimes more than fifty feet after the melting of the snows in spring. Over this chasm, which once formed the barrier for Poland against the invasions of the Muscovite, the necessity of internal communication, and the general march of improvement, has called for the erection of a permanent Bridge; and, with enlightened policy, the Emperor of Russia ordered such a Bridge to be constructed.

RUSSIAN BULLOCK CARTS

The soil of the bed of the river being wholly of sand, and the current often changing its channel, considerable difficulties present themselves, while the tremendous breaking up of the ice after winter, followed by the melting of the snows in the more northern districts, swell the stream to an extent scarcely comprehensible to the inhabitants of Great Britain. It became, therefore, a necessary condition that the number of piers of any bridge to be built there should be the fewest possible, with the largest openings between them. Hence, it seemed most natural that, within given limits of expense, the principle of a Suspension-Bridge should be preferred; and the designs were so prepared accordingly, and submitted to his Imperial Majesty. On Mr. Vignoles's urgent recommendation, the use of wire ropes as the means of suspension was negatived, and the adoption of wrought-iron chains, with broad, flat links, was decided on. Such was the system employed for the Menai and Conway bridges in Wales, by Telford, at several places in England, and also in Hungary, at Pesth, across the Danube, by Tierney Clarke. All these bridges, however, have but one central opening; the Suspension-Bridge at Kieff has four principal openings, each of 440 feet, and two side openings of 225 feet each, and also a passage of 50 feet on the right shore, spanned by a swivel bridge, opening for the passage of the steamboats and other river craft. There are, therefore, five suspension piers in the river—one mooring abutment on the left bank, another mooring abutment on the Kieff side of the stream (which, on account of the passage for boats beyond it, is actually an island of masonry in the river), and an abutment for the swivel bridge on the right bank. Each of these has required a cofferdam of unusual size, particularly the two last mentioned.

The architecture of the river piers is rather novel, and of a striking character, harmonising with that used in the extensive range of first-class fortresses which crown the heights of Kieff. The ways through the piers have a clear breadth of 96 feet, and a height of 35 feet to the soffit of the semicircular arches. The platform has nearly 53 feet of extreme breadth, of which 35 feet is exclusively devoted to the carriage-way. The platform is suspended from four chains, all on the same horizontal plane two on each side of the road; the footpaths project beyond the chains, and are carried by cantilevers round the piers exteriorly; so that the foot-passengers are completely separated from the horsemen and carriages.

The chains are composed of links 12 feet long, and each weighing about 4 cwt. Eight links form the breadth of each chain; the total length measured along their curves being about four English miles.

For the swivel bridge, the iron employed therein is almost exclusively malleable. The bridge is moved horizontally (on the same principle that locomotive engines are sent round on the large turn-tables at a railway station), and by the efforts of four men only, acting on a very simple apparatus. The construction of the platform of the bridge presents several novel combinations of wood and iron, and is of most remarkable stiffness, to resist the violent action of the eddies of air in violent winds, which have so often injured and even destroyed the ordinary platforms of suspension-bridges in other places.

The total weight of iron used in the construction of the bridge is about 3300 tons, including the machinery used in the various stages of its construction. The whole was made in England, several of the most celebrated iron-masters and manufacturers having been engaged therein. It required fifteen vessels to convey the iron to Odessa, whence it was taken up to Kieff (a distance of nearly 400 English miles) in small waggons, drawn by oxen, over the wild steppes, almost without roads, or paths that deserve the name.

The quantity of machinery of every kind employed in the construction of the Kieff Bridge is enormous, and not less than nine steam-engines are in use. Two of these are large stationary ones, each capable of working up to a power of fifty horses; the rest are from four to eight horse-power, and can be moved about as required. These engines pump water, drive piles, grind mortar, hoist timber, iron, &c., draw loads, &c.

A temporary bridge, carrying a railway, has been thrown across the whole breadth of the Dnieper. It is of great strength, and is connected by a self-acting inclined plane with the heights of Kieff, whence the great quantities of granite and masses of iron are sent down from the dépôts above to the works on the river. The provision of granite, bricks, timber, cements, lime, field-stones, &c., is very extraordinary, covering many acres of ground.

A whole village of workmen, offices, depôts, sheds, dwelling-houses for the superintendents, and comfortable cottages for the numerous workmen, has been erected on the left bank of the river, on ground expressly raised for the purpose above the flood level. A regular commissariat is attached to the establishment, and the whole organisation of service is very complete.

The bricks employed are very hard, and of a beautiful pale colour. Extensive quarries of granite were opened in a few days after the commencement of these works; but the principal supply, and the finest and largest blocks, are found nearly 100 miles from Kieff, and are brought thither on bullock carts through a rough country destitute of roads.

Not the least remarkable part of the establishment is that for the manufacture of the hydraulic cement required for the foundations and masonry. It is, in fact, an artificial "pozzolana," made from a pure clay found in the Kieff hills, and prepared on the principles laid down by the celebrated French engineer, Vicat, in his recent publication on puzzolanas. The buildings for this purpose are very extensive, being gigantic laboratories, where the operations are carried on day and night. Eight large roasting ovens, of peculiar construction, are in constant action: the quantity manufactured is upwards of 300 bushels (or about 500 cubic feet) in every 24 hours.

This very magnificent Bridge will be the largest in Europe, the length being fully half an English mile, and covering an area of 140,000 square feet, being considerably more than three acres

The works were first commenced in April, 1843. The ceremony of laying the first stone took place in September of the same year. Eight large coffer-dams were constructed by the early part of the year 1840; two of these, having been destroyed or damaged by the spring floods, were also replaced by new constructed. The foundations of the abutments, and of two of the river piers, were safely got in before the winter began; and all the foundations and coffer-dams have been secured by an extensive system of protecting work of enormous fascines, laid down, according to the modern practice in Holland, by Dutch contractors, brought purposely to Kieff by Mr. Vignoles. It is expected that the whole of the masonry will be completed by the end of the season of 1850; and that in the course of the autumn of 1851 the Kieff Suspension-Bridge will be finished and opened.

The beautiful model of this remarkable Bridge is on a scale of about one-one-hundredth of the length of the actual work. It is the most perfect thing of the kind, probably, ever designed or executed, and reflects the highest credit on Mr. James, of London, the modeller, and his chief assistant (Mr. Sims), who, with another engineer, went purposely from London to erect the model at St. Petersburg. Every piece of wood or iron, every bolt, screw, and plank—and they are there by thousands—is represented in miniature, and in the most perfect manner: the architectural details of the masonry, the interior arrangements of the abutments, the moorings and saddles of the chains, the mechanism of the swivel bridge, all are faithfully represented to the proper scale and in due proportion. The proportionate scale of length being as one to one hundred and seven is of course as one to a thousand, and that of cube as one to a million! and all the smaller pieces of iron are accurately put into the model in the latter proportion. The stand for the model is of mahogany, supported on bronze lotus pillars, with gold capitals and frieze, forming a very handsome piece of furniture, worthy even of the Imperial Palace. The water of the Dnieper is represented by a mirror, which reflects the under-side of the platform; and the entire model is covered with a splendid glass case, the frame of which is of metal, and the plates of glass, supported on richly-gilt pillars of the Corinthian order—the whole exquisitely chased. The model and stand have required two years to make; and the expense from first to last has been fully six thousand pounds sterling!

The cost of the Kieff Suspension-Bridge, exclusive of the approaches, will be upwards of 400,000 guineas; say about two millions and a half of silver rubles of Russia, and nearly eleven millions of francs; though large in amount, may be considered a very low price for so large a work

Mr. Vignoles has already prepared, by command of the Emperor, designs for several other large bridges in various parts of Russia: some of these have been approved of, and others are still under consideration; and there are in various stages of progress for still more bridges, besides other works, for all of which the iron must be furnished from the English manufacturers.

THE ROAD TO ST. PETERSBURGH.

PETERSBURGH, Jan. 30, 1850.

From that stream, which was the second we crossed by a raft, the journey to this wonderful capital is singularly monotonous, and, as an intelligent traveller, is rather than fertile in many incidents to a knight-errant. The next day another and much finer river, the broad and powerful Dwina, is traversed by a similarly expert application of similarly primitive machinery, and the journey which, in a few years, the energetic Emperor will have replaced by such bridges as that at Keaff, in the south. His reign will have been marked not only by the enlargement, but by the consolidation and amelioration of the huge dominions—by railroads of an extent unmatched, of course, in countries of less immensity—and by bridges which the vast breadth of Russian rivers, and their strength of current, swollen by innumerable tributaries, compel the architect and engineer to construct with unusual boldness of design, with massive materials, and of prodigious girth and magnitude. These are proper monuments of an illustrious reign, and alone would preserve the memory of their founder.

At the time of the journey, of which a few slight particulars have been sketched for your readers, the inclemency of the season taxed the excellence and proved the value of the splendid road, macadamised in its whole length, which connects Warsaw with the capital. The Assyrian, N. B. is called, was perhaps, to its advantage, because no other kind of road would have enabled us to proceed; and we therefore felt the value of its construction. In another sense it was, of course, travel-and-dirt-stained, and it is better to say nothing of the carriage, either earlier, when there is less wet, or later, when the superstratum of talck, smooth, and firm snow affords a rapid and gliding run to the sledge. One might, therefore, truly say that this great road never is of more merit, or yields better service, than when it is in the worst condition.

During the interregnum between the unsettlement of the weather and the permanent setting in of the frost, travellers swear, and carriages break down. You will, perhaps, imagine that the inclemency of the season is the cause which the travellers in Russia not much; but they pray furiously, and thus strangely do they exhurt their hardy horses. "It's dark: yes, but there is One who sees. The road is heavy, and you cannot drive faster. Corraggo! Try and get through it. God is with you! Oh, on! Up the hill! At it again! God is with the wayfarer! God is with the worker! Courage! God is with you!" These were the exclamations to which, as I sat by the driver on the box behind the horses, were lavished many and spirited, small, and barely equal to their task, with great striving. Coachman succeeded coachman, team succeeded team, and still the former and the latter continued to resemble their respective equivalents in appearance and in language on the one hand, and in the seventy of their draught upon the other. I have mentioned the appearance of the Russians for the first time, and here I may be permitted to add an observation. It is needless to premise that, in this widely-extended empire, where so many different races are gathered together beneath the shadow of one throne, there is a prodigious diversity of physiognomical types. Besides the many German subjects of the north, Ottomans of the south, and Tartars and Circassians of the south-east, there are the striking contrasts of the Finns, with their long, yellow, shawllike locks; the Cossacks, with their small, well-knit frames; and, not to specify minutely the various tribes, to comprise them all in one many-visaged denomination, the interminable family of the Muscovites. Now, though beyond doubt amid these you meet with many casts out of the Tartar and Calmuck mould of face and form not the less prevalent specimens of the Russian race are to be faithfully described, is the misrepresentation of those travellers who, in allusion to this circumstance, or in reliance on it, decry the general appearance, the physiognomy, stature, and bearing of the Russians, as the finest in the world (and in but a brief space of years I have noticed a very great variety of people far enough asunder) have I beheld among the peasantry countenances so fine, or frames more elastic, vigorous. The excellent pressure is aided by the costume, picturesque, yet the reverse of lawdry: the shoebs, faced with the fur or hair of the animal from which it was rifled, belted in the middle, and flowing thence freely; the long boots; the chapiter head-dress (excuse this architectural metaphor, which is not inapplicable to the head-gear of both); and the long patriarchal beard. Patriarchs indeed many of these peasants look; tall broad-shouldered, straight-backed, erect, and strong the "poor serfs" of Mr. Cobden. It is a fine illustration of the text, that the strength among these men the Sovereign of all the Russias possesses the most hearty abettors of his authority. He reigns with an unconditional sway far different from that which, over other classes, is his by other means among the sheepish-wrapped peasantry; with a sway half of this world and half religious: with a welcome unbought, and soul-sanctioned compliance, as their protector from vassalage, not their vassal lord. But at present we are hurrying towards the capital: and as I have already mentioned some things that have occurred in it, I must take an opportunity of describing the feelings which the approach to it, the entrance, and its first general appearance are calculated to awaken.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1850.

THE foreign politics of the week offer several points that are worthy of note. The Swiss Cantons, unwilling to run the risk of offending such powerful neighbours as Austria and Prussia on the one side, and France on the other, have signified to the political exiles whose presence in Geneva and Lausanne gave umbrage to the anti-revolutionary powers, that Switzerland must no longer be their place of refuge. In consequence of this turn of affairs, Messrs. Mazzini, Bocchot, and others will immediately be furnished with passports for London, and exchange the fresh air of the lakes and mountains for the closer atmosphere and safer purlieus of Leicester-square and Regent-street. Switzerland has acted wisely in this emergency; though France, it must be confessed, has acted somewhat harshly and tyrannically towards her sister republics.

The Schleswig-Holstein business, which slumbered for a while in the lap of an armistice, has again awakened, and threatens to disturb Europe. The offending power in the quarrel is most indubitably Prussia, who, for Prussian objects wholly ambitious, does not hesitate to foment intrigue and insurrection in the Danish dominions. Denmark itself makes no objection to the renewal of the armistice with the Germanic Confederation, and with Prussia as its Executive; but only upon condition that the stipulations of the convention of the 10th of July last, both patent and secret, should be binding on all the interested parties. Prussia signed this document, but now on various pretexts postpones or refuses to adhere to it. Whatever the personal exigences of the Prussian monarchy may be, it cannot be allowed to play fast and loose with principles, nor to impede the commerce of Europe with the public for its own purposes of aggrandizement, or to seize upon the leadership of Germany by working upon the passions of the German people. There can be little doubt that, should hostilities be re-commenced, it will be both the interest and the duty of the great Powers of Europe to intervene for the settlement of the dispute. Neither Russia nor Great Britain can tolerate a war of this kind, attended as it has been, and as it must continue to be, with the ruin of their trade with the Baltic. Though Denmark is a weak state, she will be supported in this quarrel by the moral strength of Europe, perhaps by its physical strength also, should Prussia unwisely refuse to fulfil the stipulations she has signed, and which are insisted upon by Denmark.

THE ADVERTISEMENT DUTY.

HAVING briefly dwelt, in our last, upon the impolicy of the Excise duty upon paper, and stated the advantages likely to result to literature, and the cause of public morals and education, by its total abolition, we proceed to offer a few remarks upon another of the three taxes imposed upon newspapers. The advertisement duty is not a matter that affects literature. It is simply a question of trade, and of justice to that particular branch of the literary profession which devotes itself to the dissemination of news and of political opinions. The advertisement duty has often, and too long, been considered a subject of private rather than of public concern—a matter of "the shop," in which the conductors of public newspapers were far more interested than their readers. We think that this opinion is erroneous, and that the great bulk of the trading and industrious community are far more deeply interested in it than they have hitherto chosen to acknowledge. It is a recognised truth that whatever we say tax interferes with, or prevents the expansion of trade, it is so far injurious to the public, and consequently to the State. It is also acknowledged that the sums produced by such a tax cannot be considered in the light of a clear profit to the Exchequer, inasmuch as its interference with trade must have diminished the receipts derivable from other sources, and which are always greatest when trade is most prosperous. Upon this principle it would be easy to show that the advertisement duty ought to be entirely repealed. It is our opinion that Government ought not to tax people for making known their wants to each other, and that such a tax as the advertisement duty is a direct hindrance and impediment in the way of trade, commerce, and industry. But assuming for the moment that the advertisement tax is, like every other, an unfortunate necessity of our financial position—and that, however well inclined our statesmen might be to abolish it, the national Exchequer cannot afford to forego it—it remains to be considered whether the tax is not susceptible of modification. Conceding its necessity to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, or to any one else who may insist upon the desirableness of retaining it as a source of revenue, it becomes a question whether the amount of the tax, and its limitation to newspapers, does not, besides injuring newspapers, and placing impediments betwixt producers and consumers betwixt buyers and sellers and betwixt employers and employed—deprive the State of a still larger amount of revenue which would be derivable if it were more moderately and fairly levied.

In the first place, it should be borne in mind by the present duty the Government does not tax advertisements merely because they are advertisements, but because they are inserted in newspapers. The huge issues called advertisements, and which look about him, may be conveyed in the multifarious expedients resorted to by those who have anything to sell, or any amusement to offer to the public, show not alone the prevalence and the necessity of advertising, but the prodigious profits of the venders. Who has not observed the huge vans, reaching as high as our first-floor windows, and covered with advertisements, which are drawn through our thoroughfares, to the imminent hazard of all who ride in carriages or on horseback? Who, also, has not seen the cohorts of men with boards upon their backs and fronts, parading up and down the streets to catch the eyes of the passing multitudes? Who has not seen similar battalions of peripatetic advertisements preceded by fiddlers and Lornbdowers, to catch the ears as well as the eyes of passengers? Sometimes a troop of animated blacking-bottles has been observed to walk along the Strand; and sometimes a gigantic hat, with a man in it, has wound its way along the thoroughfares, to the great wonderment of all provincials, to make known to the wayfarer the name and whereabouts of its celebrated maker. As for placards, there is no end to the ingenuity displayed in their fabrication. They are occasionally, as mysterious as romances, as puzzling as conundrums, and as ambiguous as oracles The town one day is asked upon every wall, "Where is Eliza?" whilst on the next it is told to "Prepare for the appointed hour." At another time a sample date in large characters stares everybody in the face, and frightens my Lord Brougham with visions of a Chartist rising, instead of gratifying him with the news of the opening of the Cremorne Gardens. By all these advertisements the revenue profits nothing. The active and enterprising traders who resort to these expedients for making known to the public their wares or their novelties, are driven from the newspapers because they are taxed. Thus newspapers suffer, and thus Government, by grasping at too much revenue from this source, loses the larger revenue that would be obtainable from a more moderate and equitable system.

We think, if the Government will not abolish the tax altogether, that, by reducing its hold upon newspapers, and reducing the tax to expenses upon each advertisement, whatever its vehicle, it would make a much larger sum of revenue, but, on the contrary, very considerably augment it. It seems but reasonable that, if there must be a tax upon advertisements, all advertisements should be equally liable. It is not just that newspapers alone, already taxed in two ways—firstly, by the excise duty upon paper, and, secondly, by the penny stamp on each impression—should bear this third burthen, whilst every one is free to advertise through the medium of obstructions in the streets, or disfigurements upon the wall.

We think it highly probable, that, were the advertisement duty reduced to one-third of its present amount, and were all advertisements made liable to it, advertising would be greatly fructified. While the minor political Chancellor would thus be a direct gainer, a boon would be granted to newspapers, which they well deserve, as the instruments and diffusers of civilisation. Were it a boon to them alone, it is probable that, however much they might be obliged to it, they might appeal in vain to the justice of the Exchequer; but when the boon would be greater to the wealth-producing and struggling classes of the community, unaccompanied by any loss of revenue to the nation, the claim is greater that the claim will be considered. It is with this hope that we have drawn attention to the subject

The inequitable and hardship of the present tax, by which the poor servant in want of a place is mulcted of as large a sum as the rich man who desires to sell an estate of perhaps thousands per annum, have often been pointed out. It is proposed, however, that no Government can abolish a tax so advantageous duties varying with the value of the thing or matter advertised. The best remedy is to abolish the tax entirely. If, however, the tax be retained, the only remedy in that case is to make it so moderate in amount as to cease to press with severity upon the poorest persons who are under the necessity of contributing to it. We think this object would be fully attained by the sixpenny duty.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION OF THE INDUSTRY OF ALL NATIONS IN 1851. A public meeting of the inhabitants of the City of Westminster, convened by the High Bailiff, in compliance with a numerously signed requisition, was held in Exeter Hall, under the presidency of that functionary, in Willis's Rooms, Kingstreet, St. James's. The meeting was fully attended, and was graced by the presence of a large body of the female nobility, among whom we noticed the Duchess of Sutherland, who accompanied by her sister, Lady Mary Howard. The meeting was addressed most eloquently by the Earl of Carlisle, the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Oxford, the French Ambassador, the Belgian Minister, the Prussian Ambassador, the American Ambassador, Lord Brougham, Lord Ashley, Viscount Canning, and several other gentlemen connected with the Royal Commission issued to carry out the intended exhibition. A series of resolutions, embodying the proposed scope of the works of art, manufactures, and science—of gratitude to her Majesty and her Royal Consort for the part they had taken in promoting it—were unanimously adopted. A committee was appointed, and subscriptions to the amount of £2000 were received in the room during the meeting, which separated, after a vote of thanks to the High Bailiff for calling the meeting, and presiding over its deliberations.

METROPOLITAN SUPPLY OF WATER.—A public meeting of the inhabitants of St. Pancras took place on Thursday last, at the Vestry-rooms, King's-road, St. Pancras; Mr. William Dyke in the chair. The chairman stated that this meeting had been convened for the purpose of considering the best means for securing an abundant supply of the purest spring water at the most reasonable rate, and to receive the propositions of the London (Watford) Spring Water Company upon that most important subject. After the meeting had been addressed by several gentlemen, and by Mr. Homersham (the company's engineer), who entered into a full detail and explanation of the plan proposed, resolutions were passed condemnatory of the present supply of water, and in favour of the adoption of the plan now brought before their notice by the London (Watford) Spring Water Company.

HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN.—The annual meeting of the subscribers and friends of this charity, took place on Thursday last, at the Hospital, Red Lion-square; the Duke of Cleveland in the chair. In report showed that a great increase had taken place in the number of patients admitted during the last year. In 1848 only 53 had been received, while in the past year the number of aggravated cases which had been relieved by the charity amounted to 106. The total of in-door attendance of out patients has been 80 or 90 a week, or between 4000 and 5000 a year. The receipts for the past year had amounted to £715, and the expenditure to £797. The routine of business having been transacted, the report was adopted, and the meeting separated, after passing a cordial vote of thanks to the noble chairman.

THAMES PLATE GLASS COMPANY.—On Thursday, the annual meeting of this company was held at the Pazza Tavern, Covent Garden, when a report was read which stated the business of the company was on the increase, and recommending the declaration of a dividend of 4 per cent. on the paid-up capital. The report was adopted.

METROPOLITAN SANITARY ASSOCIATION.—DEPUTATION TO THE PREMIER.—A deputation from the Metropolitan Sanitary Association waited upon Lord John Russell, on Saturday, at his official residence in Downing-street, for the purpose of presenting to her Majesty's Government the resolutions passed at the late meeting held in the Freemasons' Hall, and of explaining the necessity of further measures to improve the condition of the metropolis. The Bishop of London headed the deputation, which was very numerous, consisting of Lord Moreton, Dr. Alderson, Rev. J. W. Buckley, M.A., St. Mary, Paddington; Rev. R. Burgess, B.D., rector of Chelsea; Mr. Charles Salisbury Butler; Mr. Carlton Haynes, M.P.; Sir William Clay, M.P., &c. The Bishop of London, at the close of a lengthened address, in which he pressed the objects of the association upon the attention of the noble Lord, asked, whether, in consequence of the gracious expressions in her Majesty's Speech, at the opening of Parliament, that a plan might be put in full would be introduced, under the sanction of her Majesty's Government, for the sanitary improvement of the metropolis. And next, if no such intention should be entertained by her Majesty's Government, whether it is fit for the improvement of the sanitary condition of the metropolis should be introduced by some member of either House of Parliament, such a measure would be favourably received by her Majesty's Government; also, whether their assistance would be given to those who might wish to carry such a bill into law. The association, however, earnestly and anxiously hoped that the first branch of this alternative might be calculated upon; and that her Majesty's Government would see their way clear to add, the duty—of bringing in some effective measure for improving the sanitary condition of the metropolis. (Hear, hear.) The right rev. prelate then handed to the noble Lord a copy of the resolutions which had been unanimously agreed to at the late meeting. Mr. Carlton Haynes, Mr. Wyld, the Rev. H. Mackenzie, the Rev. R. Burgess, the Rev. Dr. Cumming, Mr. T. M. Nelson, and Mr. H. Edwards, having severally supported the right rev. [illegible] measure, or into a discussion upon any general measure. I can only state to you that I consider the object of [illegible] portant than it has been described to be by the members of the deputation who have just spoken. It has constantly engaged the attention of the Government; and my noble friend Lord Carlisle has been in constant communication with upon it. I know that, with regard to the metropolis, he has felt the difficulties of the subject very greatly; and certainly his opinion is that he does not think there can be any one measure which will be completed all the evils which comprise sanitary regulation: but he thinks it is more feasible to attempt by separate measures to meet the various evils that have occurred. (Hear.) With regard to a general measure, I should also say we must consider that in this country there is very naturally and properly great jealousy of any interference either with local rights or individual will and freedom from control; and that when you bring in a bill of 300 clauses, you find very great difficulty in conducting for each of these clauses against the separate opposition that may be made to them. But I will only say this, with regard to the difficulties of the subject, that we will direct our attention to them; and I can assure your lordship and the deputation that her Majesty is deeply interested in this subject." (Hear, hear.) The noble Lord added, in answer to an observation from a member of the deputation, that the opinion of the Government was in favour of separate measures rather than one general measure. The deputation then retired.

GENERAL LYING-IN HOSPITAL.—A meeting of the governors of this Institution to take place on Monday, at the Hospital, York-road, Lambeth—Mr. F. S. Cocks, M.P., in the chair. The report shows that the expenditure during the last year had exceeded the income to some extent. The receipts arising from dividends and subscriptions amounted to £1015 4s. 4d. The annual [illegible] for the last five years had amounted to £260 14s. 9d. The number of patients admitted during the last year were 311 in-patients and 448 out. The recommendatory letters for patients were 1386. Resolutions to the following effect were then proposed and carried:—That governors and subscribers be at liberty to exchange one in-patient's letter for four out. That every [illegible] on admission, pay 5s. towards the expense of their washing. That persons [illegible] contracts be entered into for obtaining a supply to the hospital of such articles as the weekly wash will shall arise. That the house committee shall carefully inspect all the linen of the [illegible] every six months, and present weekly, such a statement of the condition and quality of the same that any application to make it necessary to [illegible] a special meeting of the general [illegible] and of the [illegible]. After some discussion relative to the resolution to [illegible] the in-patients to pay 5s. towards their washing, it was ultimately arranged, that 2s. 6d. only should be subscribed. A vote of thanks was then accorded to the chairman and sub-committee, and the meeting [illegible].

LUKE'S HOSPITAL FOR LUNATICS. The annual court of the governors of this hospital, which was instituted in the year 1749, was held on Wednesday, at the George and Vulture Tavern, Lombard-street, Mr. Jenny Pratt, [illegible] in the chair. It appeared from the report of the general committee, that the last year, that, in addition to 101 incurable patients, previously maintained and provided for in the hospital, 235 patients, deemed curable, had been under treatment, of whom 118 remained in the Hospital on the 1st of January. Of the 167 cases whose treatment was completed, 101 were discharged cured—being equal to 60½ per cent.; 52 were discharged incurable, being equal to 31 1-7 per cent.; and 14 (being equal to 8 2 3 per cent.) died in the hospital. 4 of whom, out of 12 severe cases, died during the period of the late epidemic from typhoid fever and cholera. On the 13th of June, 1750, nearly 100 years ago, the founders of this charity held their first general meeting, and the hospital was opened for patients on the 31st of July, 1751. It was proposed to commemorate this event in a fitting manner by celebrating a centenary festival in 1851, and resolutions in accordance with this view were passed by the board. Several legacies were announced as having been paid or become payable during the past year, including a legacy of £100 from the late secretary, Mr. Thomas Webster, whose father and himself held office successively for a period of ninety-nine years. The receipts for the last year, including a balance in hand, amounted to £8903 15s. 8d., and the expenditure had been £6822 9s. 4d., leaving a balance in favour of this charity of £2081 10s. 4d. Mr. George Mence was unanimously elected secretary.

CITY COURT OF SEWERS.—At the court held on Tuesday the chairman read a report from Mr. Haywood, the surveyor of the commission, which gave an outline of their transactions and the works executed by the commissioners during the past year. The report included statements of the improvements effected in the City slaughtering houses and churchyards, and contained copious details of the steps taken to procure the abatement of nuisances, and the carrying out of various remedial measures enumerated. The court expressed their approbation of the report, and directed that copies should be sent to all the members of the corporation.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—A meeting of this society took place on Tuesday evening, at Exeter Hall. The report stated that they had been enabled to realise an extensive library and reading-rooms; but not having sufficient accommodation, they had been compelled to seek for more commodious premises. They had decided upon taking their present place in Gresham-street, although their pecuniary obligations would be four times as much. Although the library and reading-rooms had been open only since the 25th of September, they had now 1000 volumes, and the number was rapidly increasing to meet their present requirements. Their total receipts in 1841 were £608 14s., while, during the last year, they amounted to £1251 6s. 3d., showing an increase of £1642 12s. 3d. Their expenditure had been for the same year £1120 10s. 8d., leaving a balance in the hands of their treasurer of £30 15s. 7d.

THE METROPOLITAN POLICE FORCE.—On Wednesday, the accounts of the metropolitan police to Parliament for the year ending the 31st of December last were printed. The receipts were £442,518 13s. 8d., and the expenditure £373,640 11s. 11d., leaving a balance in hand of £68,878 1s. 9d. There was an increase in constables last year; the entire force on the 1st of January last consisted of 3492 persons, of which 4769 were constables.

FEES IN THE COURT OF CHANCERY.—On Wednesday some accounts of the Court of Chancery were printed by order of the House of Commons. It appears that on the Suitors' Fee Fund the receipts in the year ending the 25th of November last were £150,142 15s. 6d. After all charges the excess of fees was £13,154 15s. 3d. In the masters' offices the fees received in the year were £40,600 3s. 9d., and in the taxing masters' offices £2,201 4s. 8d.

THE "SWEATING" SYSTEM.—A deputation of the Tailors' Trade Protection Society waited last Saturday evening on Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P., and Sir Benjamin Hall, Baronet, M.P., in the Marylebone Court-house, for the purpose of impressing his Lordship and his honourable colleague to support a petition to the House of Commons, praying the interference of the Legislature to put down, by a legislative enactment, the present "sweating" system. His Lordship and Sir Benjamin Hall promised to support the petition; but that the former doubted whether the Government would pass a law compelling masters to give in-door work, and suggested an application to the Board of Health.

Previous of the "sweating" system were most forcibly pointed out by Mr. William Dyke, Mr. Essary, and Mr. Pryor, which they stated brought poverty upon the industrious workman, while the jobbers, who undertook to complete the work at low prices, ground down the former to the lowest possible wages—wages so inferior, that, with constant toil, they were scarcely able to eke out an existence. It was stated that one jobber alone realised £3000 a year, and kept his carriage.

A NEW BRIDGE FOR WESTMINSTER.—It is stated that it has been determined to take down the present bridge at Westminster, and that a new one is to be erected some four hundred yards further from the Houses of Parliament, in order to heighten the effect of those elaborate specimens of British architecture. The new structure is to be low and straight, supported by gothic arches. Plans for the erection of first-class detached, or semi-detached houses, forming a line of streets up to Buckingham palace, have, it is also said, been approved.

CITY OF LONDON HOSPITAL FOR DISEASES OF THE CHEST.—The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor has signified his intention of presiding over the second anniversary festival of the newly-formed institution, which, it is said, no strenuous effort will be made to enable the committee to proceed with the erection of the intended new hospital at Victoria Park.

DANGEROUS BULLOCK.—On Monday, a bullock broke away from the herd to which it belonged, near Green-wich, and proceeded at a furious pace towards the metropolis, knocking down every body who attempted to impede its progress. Near the New Cross turnpike, Mrs. Annan, of Peckham, was thrown down and dreadfully injured. In the New Kent road a child was killed. On reach ng the Bricklayers' Arms the beast seemed to pause; but the immense crowd of men, boys, and dogs, that had followed soon came up, and it resumed its career towards the Borough. Between the Bricklayers' Arms and the Townhall no fewer than four persons were knocked down, and received such injuries that their immediate removal to Guy's and St. Thomas's Hospitals was considered necessary. On London-bridge the anxious crowds of spectators in the road forced the animal on the footway, and numbers, unable to escape, were knocked down. On reaching King William-street, the animal passed down Arthur-street into Upper Thames-street, and the police, headed by Inspector Forman, 96, Upper Thames-street, Dyer's Hall Iron Wharf, being open, rushed in, and was at length secured. It is not known to whom the beast belongs, and from the damage done it is supposed that it will not be claimed.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Births registered in the week ending Saturday, Feb. 16, males, 724; females, 764: total, 1476. Deaths during the same period males, 483; females, 458: total, 938. The deaths the week show a decrease of 19 on those of the former week, and of 109 on the weekly average of last January. In the corresponding weeks of 10 previous years (1840-9) the average was 1041, which, if corrected for increased population, becomes 1136; the present decrease of mortality, as compared with former years, is, therefore, 198. In the epidemic or zymotic class of diseases, the deaths last week were 144; in the corresponding weeks of the years 1840-9, they fluctuated between 112 and 333; the corrected average is 208. From phthisis (or consumption) the deaths last week were 113; at the same period of previous years they ranged from 115 to 170. From other diseases that affect the respiratory organs (exclusive of hooping-cough) the deaths were 139: in previous years, at this time, they ranged from 115 to 150. From the class of diseases: small-pox was fatal to 6 persons, less than one-third of its former mortality; scarlatina to 13, while the average is 34; hooping-cough to 31, the average being 46; typhus to 23, the average being 36. From diarrhœa 14 persons died, a mortality wh ch is about the usual amount. From asthma and bronchitis there were 110 deaths, the average is 100; from pneumonia there were 76, whilst 90 forms the average. Diarrhœa was fatal to 14 persons, whilst the average is 7, though the number who died of this complaint in the same week of last year was 37. The wife of a journeyman lamp-maker, aged 60, died on St. John the Evangelist, Westminster, of delirium tremens. She was the first attack of Asiatic cholera six months before. Four nonagenarians died during the week, of whom three were women; the man died in the Goswell-street sub-district, at the advanced age of 95 years.

MORTALITY OF LONDON FOR SEVEN YEARS.—A table accompanies this week's report of the Registrar-General, arranged in the order of the rate of mortality from all causes during the seven years 1838-44. By this arrangement it appears that the West London district is the healthiest, and that of Mile-end New Town is the unhealthiest in the metropolis. The mortality is at the rate of 322 annually in 10,000 inhabitants; while in Hackney it is 197; in Lewisham, 173 in 10,000 inhabitants. Only fourteen in a thousand die annually in the Strand district; mortality of less than 230 inhabitants in 10,000; of twelve the mortality exceeds 260 in 10,000; and of twelve the mortality lies between these extremes. The healthiest districts, parochial districts, in which the water and the sewers are the worst, experienced the greatest mortality.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean daily height of the barometer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, during the week, was 29.784in. The mean temperature was 42.8 deg., or 2.8 deg. exceeded the mean of the week in seven years by 6.9 deg.; on Sunday it was 9 deg., and on Friday, 14.9 deg. above the average. On Wednesday, when the mean temperature was 53.1 deg., it was slightly below the average of that day.

GRAND DINNER AT THE MANSION HOUSE.—On Wednesday the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress gave a splendid entertainment to the Surrey magistracy, the members for the county and the principal gentry, and a number of ladies.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—We are enabled to state, upon good authority, that the Rev. H. Meeres, whom the Dean and Chapter have declared that they have elected and duly appointed to be the head master of the King's School, is, notwithstanding, still the chaplain of the Bucks County Gaol. Leave of temporary absence from his duties in the prison was granted to Mr. Meeres by the county magistrates, on his representation that the interests of the whole school, as well as those of the boys in the Dean and Chapter, all that he believed the litigation of the subject would be shortly determined. Mr. Meeres further assured the magistrates that he should forthwith resign his chaplaincy in the event of his being confirmed in the head master-ship offered to him by the chapter. The result of this temporary absence from the prison is, that there are now two schools in the cathedral precincts, one [illegible] in the cathedral school-room, with a very large majority of the foundation and other scholars, and under the direction of a head master who has been [illegible] removed, deprived, and displaced," by the other over a green [illegible] the chaplain to a gaol. Last room is small, and has not room for [illegible] Mr. [illegible] in wine tavern the Court of Queen's-bench, has made the rule absolute for a mandamus, compelling the head master's place in the cathedral, and Mr. [illegible] res has been presented to a temporary stall near him. Maidstone Gazette.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

ROYAL COMMISSION.

Their Lordships assembled at a quarter after four, and the Royal Assent was given, by commission, to the County Cess (Ireland) Bill.

The Royal Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Minto, and Lord Campbell.

Their Lordships then adjourned during pleasure.

Their Lordships re-assembled at five o'clock.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT ABBREVIATION BILL.

On the motion of Lord BROUGHAM, this bill was read a third time and passed.

CRIMINAL LAW CONSOLIDATION BILL.

Lord BROUGHAM moved the second reading of this bill; and, in so doing, drew the attention of their Lordships to the report of the Commissioners on the propriety of a reform in criminal procedure. A good criminal code was rendered most faulty by a bad code of criminal procedure. The French criminal code was, perhaps, the best in the world; but its benefits were greatly lessened by the bad method of criminal procedure in that country.

The bill was then read a second time

BANKRUPTCY LAWS CONSOLIDATION BILL.

Lord BROUGHAM moved the second reading of this bill, and gave notice of the committee for the day fortnight.—Agreed to.

PRESBYTERIAN AGITATION IN THE NORTH OF IRELAND.

The Marquis of LONDONDERRY, in explaining a statement alleged to have been made on the subject of the agitation of certain Presbyterian ministers in the north of Ireland for a reduction of rents, took occasion to state that, in his opinion, the Earl of Clarendon was the best Lord-Lieutenant that had ever exercised authority in Ireland. Recently, several outrages had been committed in the north of Ireland which had been excited by the Presbyterian ministers, and he wished to know whether the Government could not intimate to the Synod of Ulster, that if this course of conduct were continued the Royal bounty would be withheld from these agitating Presbyterian ministers. He had received a letter from a Presbyterian minister, calling him to account for what he had stated in the House, which was a high breach of privilege.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE thought that it would not be politically expedient to draw the attention of the law officers of the Crown to the conduct of these ministers, and he knew of no method of punishing such conduct as that complained of by the noble Marquis, except by a criminal prosecution.

RIVER PLATE.

The Earl of HARROWBY asked what was the state of our relations with Buenos Ayres?

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said that a treaty had been signed with General Rosas, the President of the Argentine Republic; but he could not at present lay it on the table, as it had not yet arrived in this country.

The Earl of ABERDEEN considered that we should have done nothing by signing a treaty with General Rosas, unless by that treaty we secured the independence of the Oriental Republic.

After a few words from Lord HOWDEN and Lord COLCHESTER, the subject dropped.

The Sunday Trading Bill was postponed to Friday next.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

Lord J. RUSSELL said that the Australian Colonies Bill stood for committal on Monday next; but, as the question of whether there should be one house or two for the government of the colony was likely to be raised, he wished to postpone it until the House should be in possession of all the information bearing upon the point. (Hear, hear.) A dispatch had been received that morning, which it was highly important the House should be in possession of before it debated the question. The hon. and learned gentleman had given notice of his intenen to move in committee that there should be two houses, instead of the proposal of the Government conta ned in this bill; but the notice did not state how the Houses were to be elected—by the Crown or by any other body—and he, therefore, hoped the honourable and learned gentleman would specify the details of his plan. (Hear, hear.) He should, therefore, move that the order of the day be now read for the purpose of being postponed till that day fortnight, when he should be in a position to state the reason the bill had been prepared in its present shape.—Agreed to.

ABUSES ON BOARD EMIGRANT SHIPS.

In answer to Mr. Grattan and Lord Ashley, Mr. HAWES said the officers of the Sobraon had been guilty of their misconduct; and the coroner called, by the Emigration Commissioners, to forfeit £500 of the amount which he was to have been paid for the conveyance of the emigrants; and, with respect to the ship herself, the Commissioners having been informed by the emigrants, so nothing was known of the matter until some notices of it appeared in the local papers, after the officers had received their gratuities. It was then ascertained that four females had been ravished, though not in the ordinary way.

On the motion of Sir W. SOMERVILLE, the Party Processions (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS (IRELAND) BILL.

Sir W. SOMERVILLE moved that this bill be read a second time.

Mr. NAPIER objected to this bill, because it created so low a class of voters, so as almost to restore the old 40s. freehold.

Mr. HOWE thought, on the contrary, that the qualification was, if anything, too high.

Mr. REYNOLDS supported the bill.

The bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Monday next. Adjourned.

CHANGES IN THE INLAND REVENUE DEPARTMENT.—Mr. Thornton, late Deputy-Chairman of the Board of Stamps and Taxes, has succeeded to the office of Deputy-Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue, in the room of Hart Dyke, Esq., who has resigned.

THE DEAN OF WESTMINSTER.—We regret to learn that the Rev. Dr. Buckland, the Dean of Westminster, is suffering from severe indisposition, arising, it is supposed, from intense application to his geological and other studies.

THE WATER BILLS.—It is said, on "good authority," that the Water Bills introduced by private companies and corporations during the present session will not be proceeded with for some time at least, as it is the intention of the Government to introduce a general measure upon that important sanitary subject. One of the reasons assigned for the postponement of such a measure by the Government is, to discourage, and if possible prevent, the evil consequences which the late years resulted from reckless speculation in the shares of public and private companies.

NORTHAMPTON AND BANBURY RAILWAY.—The half-yearly meeting of this company was held yesterday (Friday), when a report was adopted which stated, that, if the dissidents will not take part in the proceedings, the proprietors would have to consider the propriety of acting under its powers and dissolving the company.

NEWRY, WARRENPOINT, AND ROSTREVOR RAILWAY.—Yesterday (Friday) the half-yearly meeting of this company took place at the offices, Moorgate-street; Lord Viscount Newry and Morne in the chair. It appeared that a certain number of the shareholders objected to an agreement which had been entered into with a Mr. Dargan, and a circular had been addressed to the shareholders, containing some very offensive remarks towards the directors. The directors according, tendered their resignations, and the meeting was adjourned until March 1.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

Accounts from Paris, dated yesterday (Friday), state that the differences between M. Thiers and other leading Moderates and the Government have been amicably arranged, which circumstance has given general satisfaction and confidence.

The Minister of the Interior has issued a circular to the prefects, desiring that they will act in concert with the religious and military authorities, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] with just, the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible].

The editor of the Temps was tried on Wednesday, and acquitted, on the charge of publishing an article in November last, with the view of bringing the Government into contempt.

A partial review of troops took place on Wednesday, in the Bois de Boulogne, by Gen. Changarnier. The spectacle was particularly animating, and great numbers of persons were present to witness the evolutions of the military.

The President of the Republic passed the artillery in review on Thursday morning at the Champs de Mars. The President was attended by a splendid military escort, and was repeatedly cheered in the most enthusiastic manner.

The Minister of the Interior gave a brilliant fête on Wednesday. After dinner, at which the President of the Republic was present, a grand concert took place, for which 850 cards were issued, which included the elite of Paris and its neighbourhood. Never, since the Revolution, did a more gorgeous scene present itself. Madame Barrot, now in her 54th year, and the mother of the Minister, remained to the close, and did the honours of the occasion with grace and affability.

WEST INDIES.

The West India mail arrived yesterda. (Friday), bringing dates from Jamaica to the 22nd ult. Trade was excessingly dull, and crime was on the increase. The Lower House had passed several bills, which were afterwards rejected by the Council. Cotton was in course of cultivation, and with the best results. The crops in Demerara were unfavourable, arising from heavy falls of rain. The advices from Trinidad, St. Lucia, and Tobago represent the crops as promising.

BEGGING LETTER IMPOSTURES.—In a paragraph which appeared in the supplement of the 9th inst., relative to begging letter impostures, and which stated that a party had endeavoured to obtain sums of money by offering for [illegible] ance a little religious book called a "Picture of Grace," we are requested by the author to state that he does not believe that there was any imposture practised, [illegible] attended to be practised, by the person alluded to; and that he had given her the fullest permission to dispose of as many of his little work as she could, for the case in which she was interested.

RECEPTION OF LORD GOUGH AT CALCUTTA.

LORD GOUGH'S RETURN TO CALCUTTA.

Lord Gough arrived at Calcutta on the 29th of December, in the State yacht Soonamooky; his Lordship having entered the Hoogly by the Sounderbuns. It had been intimated that the ex-chief wished to be received as quietly as possible; accordingly no public demonstration was made, beyond having the garrison out on his Lordship's landing, besides a pretty mark of welcome at the Peninsula and Oriental Company's Dépôt, and on board the Haddington, Captain Field, in which ship his Lordship was to leave India. A Sketch of this point, taken on the spot, we are enabled to present to our readers. It represents the State yacht passing the Dépôt, under a salute of seventeen guns; with the Haddington, and the fine ship Agincourt, lying at one of the Peninsula and Oriental Company's wharves discharging stores.

His Lordship, we are informed, was much pleased with this greeting, and acknowledged it by standing on the deck of the yacht uncovered, and bowing repeatedly to the three hearty cheers of the Haddington's sailors. We are happy to add that Lord Gough appeared in excellent health. On landing he was escorted by the principal garrison officers along a street, formed by troops, to the Government House, where a cordial reception by Sir John Littler awaited him, and of whose hospitality his Lordship partook, until the departure of the steamer. On the morning of the 8th his Excellency embarked at Garden Reach; the band of the 70th were in attendance, and played, while a salute of seventeen guns was firing from the Peninsula Company's grounds, and until the ship cast off.

French and English Screw Ships.—The French Government has ordered the line-of-battle ship L'Ulm, 100 guns, now building at Rochefort, to be fitted with a screw propeller, with engines of 300 horse power. The French have another ship of 120 guns, named Le Vingt-quatre Février (the 24th of February), now fitting with a screw and engines of 900 horse power. The only ship in the English navy approximating to these powerful screw line-of-battle ships is the Agamemnon, 80, now building in Woolwich dockyard, to have engines of 400 horse power, and which will not be ready for sea for several years.

A notice has been issued at the Post-office, that mails will be made up on the evening of February 23 for Madeira, to be conveyed by her Majesty's sloop Sphynx, which will sail from Devonport after the arrival of the London post on the morning of February 24. Letters from Madeira will be liable to a postage of 1s. 10d. the half-ounce, and so on; and newspapers to the charge of 2d each. All letters and newspapers intended to be sent by this vessel must be specially addressed, "By her Majesty's sloop Sphynx."

RURAL SPORTS—FEBRUARY.

RABBIT SHOOTING.

More difficult than hares to hit,
They frequently appear to flit
Like shadows past one —proof, indeed,
Is then the aim that hits them bleed
If you would see them nicely stopped
In the thick wood, you must adopt
Snap shooting, for you'll seldom there
Have time to take them full and fair
E'en lost to view, advance your gun
Quickly to where you think they run;
Regard not grass, nor bush, nor briar,
Through each and all that instant fire.
Bang! it is well—you saw him not,
And yet you've killed him on the spot.
Watt's Remarks on Shooting.

England, in spite of the vast strides it has made in commerce and manufactures, and its consequent increase of population, still claims her pre-eminence as a sporting country, far surpassing any other either in ancient or modern times. We have our sports for summer and winter, and for almost every day in the year. The character of its people, we are inclined to think, is benefitted by the out-door exercise, which a devotion to rural sports necessarily imposes. The subject of our Illustration is one of the sports peculiarly welcome this month, now that bird shooting is over; and it has been asserted that Rabbit shooting is superior to any other. In the "Book of Rural Sports" we find the following spirited description of this sport:—

"The spaniels are questing for rabbits within the close tangling of an extensive wood: their merry cry bespeaks them on the scent; the sporting attendants spread here and there, all eye and all ear, to see the quick dart of the rabbit across the path, or to hear the leaves rattle, and the small boughs give place to his dashing forward. See! there he crosses the path—a shot is fired; the nimble spaniel is seen racing over the same tract in his wake, scenting the stain as he goes. A squeak is heard, and the nearest sportsman flies to the spot, crying 'Dead! dead!' and presently returns with the prize This entertaining scene is enacted again and again; and when the copse has failed, the neighbouring hedgerows are tried, which, if they have much furze, are sure to make excellent hides for these nimble animals. Rabbit-shooting in such cover is very pleasant and lively sport, and with such hardy terriers or spaniels as will not only follow them in all their tortuities, however thick or tangled, as the wire-coated will do, the sport is gratifying in the extreme. The sportsman in this shooting must be on the alert, and must place himself as the cry of the dogs directs him, to look sharply for the darting out of the rabbit, which, be it remembered, is very unlike that of the hare; and hence so many hare-shooters fall in rabbit-shooting practice. The dart of the rabbit is quick in the extreme; that of the hare, except the dog be close to her, is more quiet; indeed, she often steals out rather than flies, and pausing a moment to look around them, decamps. The gliding of the rabbit is so rapid that it is necessary either that the gunner have his gun on the cock, or at least that his thumb be on it, as not a moment should be lost; thus it is that snap shooters succeed best in rabbit-shooting; the smallest hesitation on the part of the shooter loses this nimble animal, who crosses a path with incredible speed. Indeed, if a fair portion of practice of rabbit shooting will not make a quick shot, the case is hopeless. The fences and coverts likewise near a wood are often the resort of rabbits, particularly if showers have made the levels of the wood in a dripping state Here, leaving the wood and its drippings, they locate themselves amongst the thickest cover of the hedge-rows, and, if furze be planted there, it is a sure hide for them. Here two, three, or even more sportsmen, judiciously placed, having with them rather small dogs used to the sport, and touch-hided, with a moderate portion of tongue, who will follow up the game with their merry cry, while ever and anon a rabbit is forced out and driven across the path, may find ample employment for their guns"

The locality of the Sketch is near Tunbridge; but Hertfordshire is esteemed the finest country for the sport.

Port of London Shipowners' Loan and Assurance Company—On Monday the Master in Chancery Tinney appointed Mr. Hutton official manager to investigate and wind up the affairs of this undertaking, started by one Augustus Collingridge, in 1847, to insure against "the perils of the sea, fire, rovers, reprisals, and other marine risks," the ships and vessels of the shareholders, with a capital of £50,000, in 500 shares of £100 each. The preliminary deposit was 2s. 6d. per share. Various policies, the claims in respect of which are matters in dispute, were granted; and in 1849, the directors, finding it inexpedient, from non-payment by the shareholders, to continue the undertaking, transferred the same to the Sea Fire and Life Assurance Company, who undertook to indemnify the Port of London Company from all risk and loss in respect of policies representing contingent claims against the company.

At the eleventh general meeting last week of the contributors to the General Theatrical Fund, held at the Lyceum Theatre, Mr. Backstone in the chair, it appeared that the receipts for the past year amounted to £896 1s. 3d., and the expenditure, consisting nearly altogether of payments to annuitants, to £435 19s. 8d., leaving a balance of £460 1s 7d.

Twenty race-horses, the private property of the ex-King Louis Philippe, forming the Royal stud at Meudon, were sold by auction at the park of Maisseaux, in Paris, last week. The sale was well attended. The highest price obtained was 3220f. for an English chesnut mare, 11 years old. A yearling colt, bred at Meudon, was purchased for the President of the Republic at the price of 1525f. A two-year-old bay filly was likewise purchased for the President of the Republic at 1870f. The sale produced 25,000f.

A WESTMORELAND TROUT-STREAM.—PAINTED BY H. JUTSUM.

We have this week Engraved one of Mr. Jutsum's three contributions to the Exhibition, 314. "A Westmoreland Trout Stream," in the South Room. The size of the painting, 3 feet 2 inches in height, by 4 feet 7 inches in width. This is a charming scene of glorious mountain, picturesque wood, and sparkling water. It is painted in the artist's best manner.

Mr. O'Neil's "Myrrha" (No. 311) hangs in the Middle Room; and its dimensions are 2 feet 6 inches by 2 feet 2 inches. This picture we have already commended, for its delicacy of touch, and the tranquil thoughtfulness and winning beauty of the face. Perchance, our Artist's portrait of the Ionian Female Slave, the favourite of Sardanapalus, has been embodied from the beautiful opening to the fifth act of Lord Byron's gorgeous tragedy:—

"The day at last has broken. What a night
Hath usher'd it! How beautiful in heaven!
Though varied with a transitory storm,
How beautiful in that variety!
How hideous upon earth! where peace and hope,
And love and revel, in an hour were trampled
By human passions to a human chaos,
Not yet resolved to separate elements—
'Tis warring still! And can the sun so rise
So bright, so rolling back the clouds into
Vapours more lovely than the unclouded sky,
With golden pinnacles, and snowy mountains,
And billows purpler than the ocean's, making
In heaven a glorious mockery of the earth,
So like we almost deem it permanent;
So fleeting, we can scarcely call it aught
Beyond a vision, 'tis so transiently
Scatter'd along the eternal vault: and yet
It dwells upon the soul, and soothes the soul,
And blends itself into the soul, until
Sunrise and sunset form the haunted epoch
Of sorrow and of love; which they who mark not.
Know not the realms where those twin genii
(Who chasten and who purify the heart,
So that we would not change their sweet rebukes
For all the boisterous joys that ever shook
The air with clamour) build the palaces
Where their fond votaries repose and breathe
Briefly; but in that brief cool calm inhale
Enough of Heaven to enable them to bear
The rest of common, heavy, human hours,
And dream them through in placid sufferance,
Though seemingly employed like all the rest
Stealing breathers in allotted tasks
Of pain or pleasure, two names for one ice ing,
Which our infernal, restless agony
Would vary in the sound, although the sense
Escapes our highest efforts to be happy.
Balaca. You muse right calmly; and can you watch
The sunrise which may be our last
Myr. It is
Therefore that I so watch it, and reproach
Those eyes, which never may behold it more.
For having look'd upon it oft, too oft,
Without the reverence and the rapture due
To that which keeps all earth from being nought
As I am now, this form."

A lady has transmitted, through the bishop of London, to the committee for the building of a new church and schools in the Trinity district of St. Pancras, the munificent sum of £1000 in aid of the funds now raising for their completion. Miss Burdett Coutts has given £100, and a lady has placed £100 in the hands of the Rev. Mr. Laing to meet nine similar gifts, four of which have been already received.

MUSIC.

LONDON SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

Handel's oratorio "Deborah" was performed last Monday night, at Exeter Hall, under the direction of Mr. Surman, with Misses Birch, Holroyd, Kenneth, Messrs. Gange, Walker, W. H. Seguin, and Lawler, as principal singers.

"Deborah" stands second in the list of Handel's oratorios; it was finished in Feb., 1733, and produced at the King's Theatre on the 17th of March following, by command of King George II., and the prices of admission were a guinea and half-guinea, the number of executants being about 100: now it is heard for three shillings at Exeter Hall, with nearly 800 players and singers. It was revived by the Sacred Harmonic Society in 1843. Like many of the great sacred productions of Handel, "Deborah" suffers from the weakness of the poem, which was written by Mr. Samuel Humphreys. The subject is taken from the 4th and 5th chapters of the Book of Judges, embodying the rising of the people of Israel at the instigation of Deborah, the prophetess, against the power of Jabin, King of Canaan, their cruel oppressor. Barak is nominated leader of the Israelite army, In the second part, Deborah is menaced with the vengeance of Sisera, the Canaanite commander-in-chief; but she defies his power, and the Israelites advance to battle. In the third part, there are the lamentations of the Priests of Baal or Sisera's defeat and decease, and the honours paid to Jael for the General's death, concluding with a general thanksgiving of the people of Israel.

The dramatic elements in "Deborah" are like those in "Samson;" the Baal worship is in juxtaposition with the worship of the true faith, and this religious antagonism is finely treated by Handel. Some of his grandest choruses are in "Deborah;" the "Immortal Lord" is stupendous, as is the "O blast, with thy tremendous brow." The "See the proud chief," opening the second part, is sublime. The "O Baal! Monarch of the skies" reminding the hearer of the "Oh, the pleasures," by the same composer, with all his wondrous accompaniments The fugue writing in the two choruses, the "Hallelujah" of the first, and the "God, King of Kings" of the second part, is admirable; the latter recalls the theme of one of the Coronation Anthems, "The King shall rejoice." Amongst the well-known airs in "Deborah" are the "How lovely is the blooming fair, and "All danger disdaining," for contralto; the "Choirs of Angels," for the soprano; the "Awake the ardour," and the pastoral air, "Tears such as tender fathers shed," for bass. There is also a charming duo, "Where do thy ardours raise me." The oratorio was on the whole creditably executed, although the conductor might amend his besetting sin of dragging the time.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH MUSICIANS.

The fourth chamber concert took place on Saturday, directed by Mr. W. L. Phillips, who also accompanied the vocal music. The scheme comprised Haydn's quartet in G, No. 81, played by Messrs. Thirlwall, J. Banister, Trust, and Hatton; Dussek's pianoforte quartet in E flat, executed by Miss R. M. S. Read, Messrs. Thirlwall, Trust, and Hatton; H. Westrop's pianoforte quintet, played by Messrs. Westrop, Banister, T. Westrop, Trust, and Hatton; and Hummel's septuor in D minor, Op. 74, for pianoforte (Brinley Richards), flute (R. S. Pratten), horn (Calcott), oboe (Horton), tenor (Trust), violoncello (Hatton), and contra-basso (F. S. Pratten). The concert went off pretty well, but the old complaint of insufficient rehearsals must be reiterated. The septuor of Hummel is rarely heard, but it is a clever work, and the pianoforte part was ably sustained by Mr. Richards. Mendelssohn's trio from "Elijah," "Lift thine eyes," sweetly sung by Miss Mira Griesbach, Miss Fyne, and Miss C. Panchaud, was encored.

PIANOFORTE CONCERTS.

Mr. W. Sterndale Bennett, the composer, commenced, on Tuesday evening, at the Hanover-square Rooms, his annual series of pianoforte concerts. It is from the classical stores of the great masters that this eminent pianist makes up his programmes, which are full of interest. Two sonatas, one by Beethoven, in C, Op. 96; and the other by Bach, in C minor, for pianoforte and violin, were executed by Mr Bennett and Herr Ernst; in such hands the performance was a treat of the highest order. It is no matter in what school Ernst plays; the antiquated style of Bach was rendered with the utmost finish and elegance. Mr. Bennett's touch has a peculiar charm—his execution is unerring in precision, no intricacies dismay him, but he is not a showy player; and his great skill, to the admirers of the modern romantic school, is not so apparent, from the absence of an impassioned intensity; but this want of warmth is more in manner than in feeling, and if Mr. Bennett, who is a conscientious musician, thought proper, he could establish himself as an exponent of the first force in the fantasia style. Besides Mozart's

On Saturday morning last, an explosion of fire-damp took place on the Gib Field colliery, Chowbent, the property of G. Fletcher Esq., of Laburnham House. One man was killed on the spot, and four others were injured in the most shocking manner.

M. Jules Cloquet, an eminent surgeon of Paris, whose reputation has long become European, has just received from his Highness the Sultan the order of Nichan Iftar.

On Tuesday night last a dreadful explosion of fire-damp took place at the Ince Hall Coal and Cannel Companies' Works, at Wigan, by which four men were killed and two others severely injured. The four that were killed were working on a scaffold, about fifty yards from the top; they were blown up and fell into the dib hole at the bottom. The pit is upwards of 400 yards deep. One man escaped by running through the fire, and, singular as it may appear, his dog followed him and escaped also.

The total amount received by the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, during the year ending on the 31st of December, 1849, was £183,384 4s. 1d. The disbursements within the same period were £178,767 14s.

Humphrey Fountney, Esq., of Moneyhull Hall, King's Norton, has liberally offered a piece of land as a site for the intended church at Balsall-heath.

Sir William Hartopp, bart. of Stanton Coldfield, has recently, at his own expense, placed three beautiful stained glass windows in the chancel of Wiggett Church, of which he is the patron. These, with the great improvements made during the incumbency of the present vicar, render it one of the neatest village churches in the county of Suffolk.

It is proposed to erect a church at Embsay, near Skipton. In this distant township a church was erected in 1154, and near the old foundation (now marked by only a few tombstones), a site has been given by the gentleman who recently purchased the property. The population of the township is about 1000.

At Gravesend, the Ship and Lobster Tavern, kept by Mr. Penryn, on the Sea Wall, was totally consumed by fire on Friday night week. The house and adjoining buildings being constructed chiefly of wood, the flames spread very rapidly, so that none of the property in the house could be saved, the inmates having barely time to escape. The fire was discovered by the landlord's son about ten o'clock, but its cause is unknown. The landlord is said to be insured.

The St. Petersburgh Zeitung, of the 5th February, publishes an Imperial ukase commanding that a medal shall be struck in commemoration of the Hungarian campaign, which is to be presented to all and each of the officers, subalterns, and privates, as well as chaplains, medical men, &c., either in active service or in the hospitals.

(b) White appear to have overlooked here the consequences of their adversaries taking the Kt with their K's Bishop.

(c) Much better play than "forking" the two pieces by P to Q R 4th.

(d) From the point White's game appears to us quite indefensible.

(e) Taking the Pawn would evidently have been fatal

(f) Ingenious; threatening to play the Rook to Q B 6th (ch) next move.

(g) We have not "by" and fight this move strong enough.

(h) Well intended; but Black have a "horse in the stable," and can afford an exchange.

(i) To prevent the dreaded exchange of Queens.

(j) This servile retreat is their last forlorn resource

CARTHAGENIAN ANTIQUITIES.—On Monday, a sale of a portion of the late Sir Thomas Reade's collection of antiquities, excavated under his auspices from the ruins of ancient Carthage, took place at the sale-rooms of the Messrs. Winstanley, the well-known auctioneers, in Liverpool. There was a very large attendance of local antiquarians, as well as Mr. Doubleday, of London, who purchased extensively for the British Museum. The lots purchased by this gentleman were several curious busts, some Punic inscriptions, &c.; two fine bas-reliefs, representing a Roman galley in full sail, and a most spirited and well executed lion; two fine heads, viz. a Minerva, hemmed, and a Cupid; a winged head of Mercury, and a head in white marble, said to be that of Scipio Africanus, but which was, with better reason, supposed to be that of Titus, as it much resembled one of that Emperor in the Museum at Naples. The same gentleman was also the purchaser of a part of a marble sarcophagus, and several stone tablets taken from sepulchres, &c; they were rudely executed in the Byzantine style of art, and were evidently intended to represent the worship in the ancient temples. These latter excited great interest, and were purchased by Mr. Doubleday, after a severe competition. The other articles of interest were, a costly table, 3 feet 10 inches in diameter, the work of a Neapolitan artist, composed of numerous slabs of antique white marble, curiously arranged, from designs by Sir Thomas Reade. It was much admired, and, after a spirited competition, was knocked down for 28 guineas. The auctioneer said that the workmanship alone cost Sir Thomas Reade £73. There were several other articles of a similar description, viz. a jewel case, two chess tables, tumplices, stand, &c. A large valuable column of porphyry was bought in for £5.00, but we believe that Mr. Paxton intends purchasing it for the Duke of Devonshire. Some of the lots brought extremely good prices; but much regret was expressed that the collection was not purchased entire, and presented to one of the educational institutions of the town.

LITERATURE.

FREEHOLD ASSURANCE, AND THE FARMERS' ESTATE SOCIETY, &c. By WILLIAM BRIDGES. T. Saunders.

The title of this pamphlet is not happily chosen to give an idea of its object, which is to explain how a race of small freeholders may be brought into existence in Ireland, remedying probably many of the social evils of that country. Before the Encumbered Estates Act was passed, a project was entertained of forming a company to purchase land in Ireland, and sell it again, or let it in farms of a convenient size. In 1848 an act was, in fact, passed, called the Farmers' Estate Society Act, to enable a body of gentlemen to purchase land in that country, and re-sell it in portions; but the power which was asked, to be enabled to give a parliamentary title to all lands they might sell, was refused them, and the act was of no avail. The Encumbered Estates Act has supplied this deficiency, and will enable the company to give a parliamentary title to any portion of land they may purchase under the authority of that act. That there is a difficulty in giving a good title to land generally, is one of the miscuievous anomalies of our constitution which our posterity will be sure to get rid of. Being enabled to give a good title to the land, it is proposed that the company—which can only buy land as a commercial speculation, and can have no desire to found a family, or the it up in entail—shall entice people to purchase it by making the acquisition easy to the purchaser and advantageous to the company.

The land is to be divided into convenient lots of not less than 20 acres each; and when so divided, with or without suitable buildings, the lots are to be let for a term of years, at an adequate rent to pay good interest for the money invested in the purchase. At the same time the company will sell these lots out and out for an adequate sum; but the principal and most novel feature in the plan is that the company will, for an annual payment of a small sum per acre, sufficient to repay the value of the lease, or at the end of a fixed period, the capital invested in the land, guarantee to the tenant the possession of the land as freehold. Thus, suppose the company purchased land at the cost of £10 10s. an acre, including all the buildings on it, and the drainage necessary to many small farms; and suppose this land to be let for 20s. per acre; that would be an interest of 8 per cent. on the outlay of £12 10s. per acre. Then, suppose the tenant to pay in addition 10s. per acre per annum, that sum, invested by the company as it was annually paid, would, in 19 years, with its accumulated interest, amount to £12 10s., the original cost of the land. Then the company would be reimbursed, during that time, principal and interest for their outlay, and would give up the land, which would belong in freehold to the tenant. Such a plan, of which we state the principle, without affirming the correctness of Mr. Bridges' calculations, as they must depend on circumstances, seems to possess the germs of improvement. The company must, for their own sake, look after the character of the persons they accept as tenants. They will take precautions, probably, that the land shall not be subdivided during the lease, as that would be incompatible with the advantageous distribution into farms made by the company. But neither the company nor the legislature has any business to interfere with the freeholder after he has honestly purchased his land. Freeholders of one acre must, for protected in doing what they like with their own, as well as freeholders of 10,000 acres. The principle of property, of ownership, of what belongs to an individual, should be as sacred for a farthing as for a million sterling. It is a complete mistake to suppose that property, or what a man acquires by his own industry, is held for the good of the public. That principle makes him only a sharer in the produce of his own labour with all the idle and worthless classes. He holds it as he acquired it, for his own advantage. We are surprise that in the investigation before the committees on the Farmers' Society Bill, seconded by Mr. Bridges, the members of the House of Commons should have lost sight of this principle, and in their eagerness to prevent a division of land should have espoused principles that would have destroyed the ownership of every estate in the empire. The land will always be divided according to circumstances; for horticultural purposes near a large city, one or two acres may be enough for a man to hold; for the pasturage of sheep he requires many hundred acres. These, therefore, who lay down an arbitrary rule for the appropriation of the land, whether it be to divide into small farms as in France, or prevent it being divided, have really adopted a Socialist principle of the worst character, which substitutes the state for the individual and strikes at the root of all property. The plan suggested by Mr. Bridges, making no question as to what the freeholder may do when he has paid the company for the land, is founded on a correct principle. It holds out a great inducement to a multitude of persons of small means and agricultural skill, to save money, invest it gradually in land, and become owners of the spots they cultivate and improve. It is, rather than a assurance society, a savings-bank of the very best description, with no possibility of a fraudulent actuary. It is well known that in Ireland there is a considerable number of persons possessed of small capital, who will be ready to take advantage of such a plan. It has the merit of inviting the Irish, as it were, to become respectable freeholders; and does not look exclusively, like too many of the plans of the present day, to the introduction of English or Scotch capitalists for the improvement of Ireland. It seems adapted to the circumstances of the Irish, and is intended to enable them to live happily in their own country. The scheme appears feasible in principle, as far as it goes; but the details require amplification, and it does not seem to obviate the charges for poor-rates and other legal incumbrances, that are fastened on the land, and must be as great impediments to the success of small as of great proprietors. The great recommendation of the scheme is that it is founded on the private interest and ordinary motives of men, and does not rely on an affection for the public welfare, which is, too generally, a mere cloak for jobbing.

MUNIFICENT FOUNDATION OF A RAGGED SCHOOL.—Some short time back, the friends of a ragged school, who had fitted up one of the arches of the South-Western Railway, near Lambeth-walk, as a place of instruction to the poor ragged children, applied to Mr. Beasley, the eminent distiller of south Lambeth, to subscribe towards a fund to erect a suitable edifice. Mr. Beasley so far complied with their request that, at his sole expense, he has erected, in Dougty-street, Lambeth, as a sort of memorial of £2000, a magnificent building, covering the space of 1230 square yards, calculated to afford ample room for the instruction of 1000 children.

At a Court of Sewers, held on Tuesday in the City, the salary of the medical officer was fixed, by a majority of 27 to 20, at £500 per annum.

STATE OF NEWGATE.

THE Rev. J. Davis, the Ordinary of Newgate, has just presented to the City authorities the report of the State of the Prison from Sept. 30, 1848, to Sept. 29, 1849. From this interesting document we learn that, during the above period, there were in the Gaol: Unconvicted prisoners, 588; convicted, 1111, convicted of very grave offences, 938; making a total of 2367: of which number there have been previously in Newgate, 345; in other prisons, 384; total, 730. The returns for the previous year, to September 29, 1848, were: Unconvicted prisoners, 645; convicted, 1418; very grave offences, 1070. Decrease under Unconvicted, 57, convicted, 307; very grave offences, 132: total, 496. Making a general diminution of nearly 500, or nearly one-sixth of the whole number committed.

The reverend Ordinary observes: "The goal of Newgate, beyond all doubt, has great defects compared with more modern erections; but humble from these more perfect prisons do not surpass the metropolitan gaol in this respect, that seven out of eight do not return to us again."

Another satisfactory point is the great decrease in the number of boys committed, and great change in committers.

"It is greatly to be desired (continues the Report) that no sentences (except for very short periods) should be passed in Newgate, for the moral excitement, the ever-fluctuating character of the inmates, the assemblage of criminals of the most flagrant nature, the constant recurrence of the sessions, make Newgate a very undesirable prison for purposes of enlightened confinement."

The great corruption of Newgate still appears to be most fearful in the transport wards. The condition of the transports, confined for months in perfect idleness, makes them spend their leisure time in awfully corrupting one another. The language, acts, and habits of those confined for long periods, their filthiness, falsehood, and pernicious animosities; are too foul to be described. The magistrates want these men removed to their proper place of confinement. The government are unable to comply with these reasonable desires, because every place is full. The rev. Ordinary then suggests the fitting up of wards as workshops, as in Millbank prison, and the keeping of the offenders constantly at labour; and that money is pressed the more earnestly, because it has been the cause of all the calamities that have found their way into many public documents as to the corruption inside of Newgate.

There is another part of the report that demands attention—the separate cells, which the Report states are so intensely cold in inclement weather, that the pain which the prisoners suffer is almost to the full extent of human endurance.

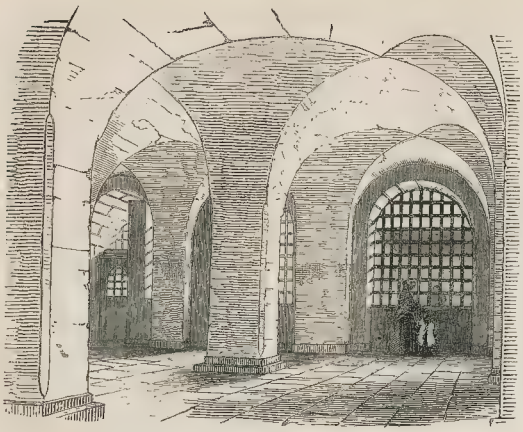
We annex a series of Views of the interior of the metropolitan gaol.

Up the narrow steps, into the turnkey's room, and along a darkish passage, we come into a small open court, surrounded by high walls, between which a scanty supply of air and light finds its way downwards as into a well. Facing us stands a massive building, three of which, and more strong, greet us as we enter the women's wing of the prison. As soon as the ponderous locks are turned, and the heavy bars removed, we enter the doorway, and ascend the stone staircase: suite of chambers branch off on either side, and these are occupied by the prisoners who are awaiting trial. An attempt is made to classify them according to their degrees of guiltiness, but practically that is of little use.

Pass we now through several rooms and corridors to the quadrangle occupied by the males. As we traverse these passages we note the iron character of the building. It is dark, close, confined; and in despite of the scrupulous cleanliness preserved in every part, foul smells are not unfrequently met in the lobbies. The total fault is the want of room, the plight of the walls, and the narrowness of the courts, giving them the appearance of wells rather than open spaces. Air and light are in consequence less plentiful than they should be.

Formerly the wards or part of the prison were occupied by debtors. This practice has been discontinued, and it has now very few inmates, except such as are awaiting trial or punishment; the exceptions being persons convicted of assaults or offences on the high seas. Just after the termination of the session of the Central Criminal Court it is nearly empty, but it gradually begins to fill again. The men's cells are 8 feet high; each its inmate's name or number affixed. After trial the convicts are sent off to prisons at present unknown to which they are committed—the short terms to the Houses of Correction, the transports to Millbank. Those sentenced capitally are taken to the condemned cells, not to leave them again until the last moment, except for chapel. These cells are built in the old portion of the building at the back. The narrow port-holes in the dark wall looking into Newgate-street let light into the galleries into which they open. There are five of them on each of the three floors. The culprit in the furthest cell on the ground-floor is within a yard of the passers-by. All the cells are vaulted, and about nine feet high, nine deep, and six broad. High up in each is a small window, double-grated. The doors are four inches thick. The strong stone wall is lined; and, altogether, they present to the eye of the culprit an overwhelming appearance of strength. In a small ante-room, near the entrance of the prison, is a collection of casts, taken from the heads of the principal malefactors who have been recently executed in front of it—very interesting to the student of phrenological science.

N E W G A T E.



CORRIDOR.

THE CHAPEL-YARD.

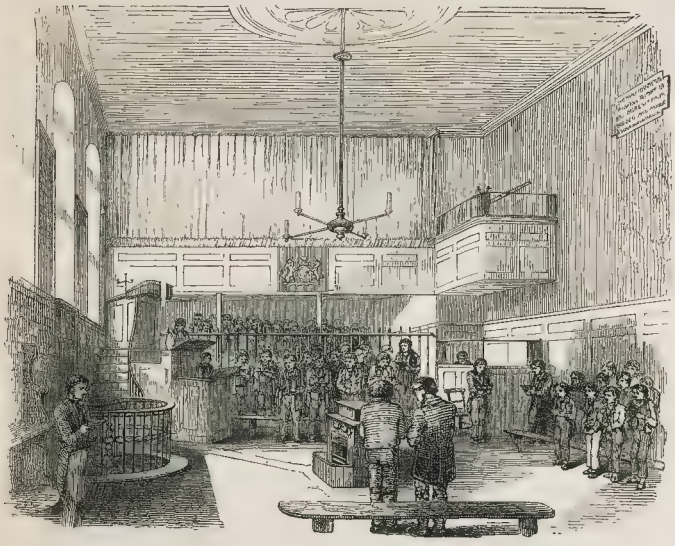
The quadrangle for the men is much like the women's, but larger. It consists of two or three yards, and the building surrounding them. No separation of the men is made other than as the law requires—namely, into felons and misdemeanants.

Some little instruction is afforded by humane and philanthropic visitors at the prison, especially of ladies. Dear Elizabeth Fry used to make the female wards the scene of her pious labours. She found helpers and successors in the work. Lady Firle is a constant visitor and teacher here now—so is Miss Sturgiss. They read, converse, and pray with their poor sisters.

The chapel, as well befits such a place, is neat and plain. There are galleries for male and female prisoners. Below and in the centre of the floor, a chair is placed conspicuously, and marked for the use of the condemned culprit. On this he is required to sit the day before his execution in face of the congregation.



THE CHAPEL.

PUNISHMENT CELL.

Leaving the chapel we repass the yards, one of which is notable as the scene of a very curious escape—that of the "sweep." The walls are of the same height as the lofty houses in Newgate-street, and present a bar to escape which would daunt the most inveterate prison-breaker. But the sweep surmounted them. Pacing his back in the angle of the wall, he worked himself up by his hands and feet, pressing them against the rough masonry, until he reached the giddy height. He then crept along the top of the walls to the houses, got on to the roofs, entered at a balcony—almost frightening a woman to death—and made his way into the streets, where, as the Newgate prisoners wear no regular costume, he passed unnoticed. He was, however, captured soon after—as almost invariably happens with escaped criminals. Now the wall is smoothed and spiked, there can be no escapes in that way.

We have selected these descriptive details from Mr. Dixon's recently published work on the Great Prisons of London.

Of the accompanying illustrations, the first shows one of the corridors, in which prisoners are allowed to see their friends; next are the Chapel-yard, and the Chapel; then a Punishment Cell, formerly the condemned cell; next a Dining Ward; and, lastly, the present ward for Condemned Male Prisoners.

BURFORD'S PANORAMA OF THE POLAR REGIONS.—THE "INVESTIGATOR" SNOW-WALLED IN FOR THE WINTER.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL JAMES CHARLES CHATTERTON, K.H., M.P.

Lieutenant-Colonel James Charles Chatterton, K.H., M.P. for the city of Cork, Deputy-Lieutenant and magistrate for the county, and Provincial Grand Master of Munster, is a Knight of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order, Colonel in the Army, and Lieutenant-Colonel of the 4th Royal Irish Dragoon Guards. He is the second son (by Rebecca, daughter of Abraham Lane, Esq., of Cork) of the late Sir James Chatterton, Second Serjeant-at-Law, Keeper of the State Papers in Ireland, and created a Baronet on the 3rd of August, 1801; and is brother and heir presumptive of the present Baronet, Sir William Abraham, who succeeded to the Baronetcy in 1806.

COL. CHATTERTON, M.P. FOR CORK.

The subject of our memoir was born in 1794, and married, in 1829, Annette, youngest daughter of James Atkinson, Esq., of Lendall, Yorkshire, and had by her one son, James William Acheson, born in 1826, died in 1827; and three daughters, one of whom, Anne, married to the Rev. Richard Dickson, of Vermont, county Limerick, died in 1838; Martha, married to Abraham Orpen, M.D., of the city of Cork; and Rebecca, married, in 1836, to C. Wedderburn Webster, Esq., of the 12th Lancers, are still living, and the latter has issue.

The gallant Colonel entered the army on the 23d of November, 1809; obtained his commission of Lieutenant on the 6th of June, 1811; Captain, the 26th of March, 1818; Major, 22d July, 1824; Lieutenant-Colonel, the 18th of December, 1827; Colonel, the 23d of November, 1841; and was placed on half-pay after a continuous and active service of forty years, on the 3d of October, 1846.

From Hart's "Annual Army List," which has rescued from oblivion the arduous services of so many brave men, we learn that from 1811 to 1818 Colonel Chatterton served with no small distinction in Portugal, Spain, Flanders, and France. He was engaged in the affairs of Fuente, Guinaldos, and Aldea de Ponte; was at the sieges of Ciudad Rodrigo and Badajoz; the battles of Castro, Llerna, Salamanca Heights, San Christoval, Rueda, and Castrajon; in the affairs of Tudela, Valladolid, Celada de Camino; the investment and siege of Burgos; the actions at Monasterio Fuintana Palla, Venta del Pose, and Cabason; and at the passage of the Hoshra to Ciudad Rodrigo. Upon the advance of the army from Portugal he was engaged in the battles of Osma, Vittoria, Villa Franca, Tolosa, the siege and capture of San Sebastian, and the actions on crossing the Bodos and carrying the fortified entrenchments of the enemy, at the battle of the Nivelle, at St. Jean de Luz, at Angle and in front of Bayonne, at the occupation of Bordeaux, the passage of the Garonne, the affair at Eamhers, the passage of the Dordogne, the battles of Quatre Bras and Waterloo, and the advance to, and capture of, Paris; and continued with the army of occupation in France. He has received the war medal with four clasps for Salamanca, Vittoria, Nivelle, and Nive.

The gallant Colonel is a Conservative, and in favour of agricultural protection. He was first returned to Parliament for the city of Cork in Feb., 1835; was unseated on petition in May of the same year; was an unsuccessful candidate for the same city in 1837 and 1841, and was returned in November, 1849.

The family of the Chattertons settled in Ireland in the time of Elizabeth; and one of them, Thomas Chatterton, obtained a grant of lands in the barony of Arders, in 1573.

BURFORD'S PANORAMA OF THE POLAR REGIONS.

In our notice of this new picture, last week, we explained that it is divided into Summer and Winter. In the latter—the ships' quarters in Port Leopold—the two ships are shown "in a position nearly north and south; the housings of the decks and all upon them white with snow; the masts, tops, shrouds, stays, and every portion of the rigging that was left standing, on which a particle of snow could lodge, encrusted with a fleecy covering, presenting, if not a very cheerful, at least a most picturesque and beautiful appearance. The ice here is a perfectly flat surface, being covered several feet in depth with snow, the harbour being only distinguishable from the land by the line of rocks with which it is surrounded, which, towards its entrance, rise to an immense height, forming two noble capes, the bare and precipitous sides of which present strata of primitive limestone, mostly horizontal, sometimes piled with great regularity, at others so confused as to make it evident that they mark some great convulsion of nature; their dark frowning masses singularly contrasting with the dazzling whiteness of the snow. Around in every direction the distance is one interminable waste, and desolate region of eternal winter."

Our Artist has selected for illustration "the Investigator" protected for the winter. A wall of snow was built between the two vessels, for the purpose of facilitating the communication, by affording shelter from the frequent gales of wind, and the blinding drifts of snow which always accompany them, and which were as fine as sand, and so thick, that the vessels, although only 200 yards apart, were imperceptible from each other. The building of the wall was commenced from the bow of each ship at the same time, and progressed so as to meet half-way; it was constructed of blocks of snow, which were cut and shaped by cutlasses and shovels; they were cut of a size, so as to enable two men to lift and place them in a proper position. Walls of a similar kind were also constructed round each of the ships, the non-conducting power of which prevented the abstraction of heat, which was considerable in windy weather.

Towards the centre of our picture is the Investigator, with her snow-wall; the point in the distance is North-east Cape and its beacon; the right-hand horizon glows with the splendour of an Aurora Borealis; in contrast with which is the pale moon, with her "ineffectual fires;" whilst the still life of the scene is broken by parties of the voyagers in the foreground, who are trapping white foxes.

The picture is painted throughout with wonderful power and intensity of effect, characteristic of the supernatural aspects of the Polar Regions. Mr. Burford has been assisted in his work by Mr. H. C. Selous; the drawings, taken by Lieutenant Browne, of her Majesty's ship Enterprise, having been presented by the Admiralty.

Mr. Burford, in a note, reminds us that his establishment was first opened about sixty years since. During this long period scores of exhibitions illustrative of his panoramas have appeared, with various pretensions. It may not, however, be so extensively known as it deserves to be, that Mr. Burford's Panoramic Views are painted in the finest oil-colour and varnish, and in the same manner as a gallery picture.

UNIVERSITY HALL, GORDON-SQUARE.

It is not only the working-man who is to reap the benefits of the progress of combination and association, but the very numerous classes of bachelors in all grades of society. There can be no reason why, for example, the banker's, the merchant's, the brewer's, the auctioneer's, and an immense number of other clerks, should not have the opportunity of the same comfort, economy, and safety which the Model Lodging-Houses for the labouring classes extend to their occupiers. The young artist, author, surgeon, lawyer, and, in fine, all those members of society who look forward to the day when they shall belong to a club, might at once have all, and more than the advantages of those institutions. This is a theme on which much more might be said than our present space will allow, but it must be continually urged; and perhaps no more favourable proof of its practicability can be given than the recent establishment of University Hall, here illustrated. This edifice forms the centre of the west side of Gordon-square, in the rear of University College; and is intended for the reception of young men who are studying in different professions, as law, medicine, the belles lettres, &c.

With Halls, in the old days of the old Universities, as with Inns in the old days of Law, every one was familiar. Our most ancient English College, claiming Alfred for its founder, still calls itself "the Great Hall of the University." And in various such buildings, great or small, the various and numerous students of the old times ate and lived together; with the aid of the superintending Master of Arts, perfecting themselves in the quantities of Latin prose and in rhetoric which they studied under University professors. But such things are obsolete. Long ago, at Oxford and Cambridge, the colleges and college tutors have subjugated the halls and professors—have silenced the latter, and extorminated the former. Only some few voices of titular professors are still heard in small exceptional conventicles; and only a few institutions—colleges all but in name—still retain the style and title of Halls.

Meantime, in the new London University, the Professor has recovered some-lung of his old vitality. Gower-street and the Strand, in this respect, take up the tale of Athens and Cam. And here, it seems, an despite of the modern and ephemeral phenomenon of "Apartments to let," we now find, in somewhat of mediæval costume, reviving, or wishing to revive, the veritable mediæval Hall.

The building, of which we give an Illustration, presents an imposing façade to form the west centre of Gordon-square. It is strictly tenanted, we are informed, by a Principal and Vice-Principal, and a moderate number of students of University College. To University College, through its Gothic back-door (for there is, in the rear, a private communication), students, by old days, knew book in hand to professorial classes. Instruction there received they have opportunity of re-considering and digesting, under the care of superintending seniors here. And to its well-proportioned and capacious hall they breakfast and dine, as did the young men of old.

The institution in question certainly shows the way for supplying an obvious deficiency in the new University, in affording a means of living, without many evils—some of the attractions, free from some of the mischiefs—of the College system of Oxford and Cambridge. It is not, however, simply as a student's club-house or model lodging-house that University Hall has been erected. It is to be, we are told, subsidiary to University College in more ways than one. To instruction in theology and moral philosophy (which are excluded by the rules of the older institution), a local habitation will be offered in the new. Public lectures will be delivered, and assistance of its council, its lecture-rooms will be available for these purposes.

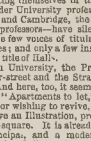
The edifice, beyond its internal claims of expanse, decoration, and apt arrangement of rooms, demands attention for its external, which is of the latest period of our Collegiate Gothic architecture, such as may be seen at Hampton Court; and is a very happy adaptation of the leading features of the style to one of the greatest puzzles in architecture of our day, namely, the proper form of uniform windows in numerous stories. Another good feature is, that all the furniture of the establishment is uniform and symmetrous with the design.

The cost of the works, designed by Professor Donaldson, and executed by Mr. John Jay, did not exceed £10,000, exclusive of the two houses intended to appear as wings, and so shown in the Engraving, one of which is intended for the dwelling of the Principal.

Mention must be made, too, of the Duke of Bedford, who, with unexampled generosity, has, to promote the purposes of liberal education, granted permission to the founders to purchase, within a given period, the fee-simple of the property, that the building may always remain appropriated to its present intentions.

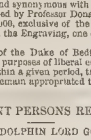
OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

FRANCIS-GODOLPHIN LORD GODOLPHIN.



His Lordship, whose death is just announced, was second son of the fifth Duke of Leeds, by Amelia his wife, only daughter and heir of Robert D'Arcy, Earl of Holdernesse, and grandson of Thomas, fourth Duke of Leeds, K.G., by Mary his wife, daughter and sole heir of Francis Earl of Godolphin. He was born, 18th October, 1777, and married, 31st March, 1800, Elizabeth Charlotte, daughter of William, first Lord Auckland, by whom he leaves issue George Godolphin, present and second Lord Godolphin; William Godolphin; Sydney-Godolphin, B.A., Rector of Danwerton, county Dover; and Miss Godolphin. There was also one daughter, Miss Godolphin, who married Sir Theodore Brückman, Baronet, and died in 1838.

REAR-ADMIRAL SIR JAMES JOHN GORDON BREMER, K.C.B., F.C.H.



THIS gallant and highly distinguished naval officer died at his residence, the Priory, Compton, near Plymouth, on the 14th inst. Sir Gordon, who was educated at the Royal Naval College of Portsmouth, joined the Endymion frigate, 3rd April, 1804; was made Lieutenant of the Captain, 74 guns, in 1805, obtained the rank of Commander in 1807; was appointed Post Captain and C.B. in 1814; and became Rear-Admiral in 1849. Sir Gordon's war services extended over a considerable period from his first entrance into the navy, in 1802, to the fall of Genoa, in 1814. In the former year, he sailed, under Captain Durham; in 1805, was in the partial action with the French fleet off Brest; in 1812, commanding the Bermuda, of 10 guns, he captured Le Bon Cesar, of much superior force, and subsequently, in command of the Regulus, 18 guns, was very actively employed on the coasts of Spain, particularly in the destruction of the forts of Castro Undules, in Biscay. In 1813, in company with the Scylla, he took the French frigate Le Weser; and in 1814 was engaged in the operations in the Gironde, which ended in the occupation of Bordeaux. He subsequently commanded the Lee and Conus frigate, in which latter vessel he was wrecked off Newfoundland in 1816. In 1823, Captain Bremer was selected to take possession of the north coast of Arabia and to found a settlement there. This service completed, he sailed for India, and was present in the latter part of the Burmese war. In 1838, he returned to England, and in 1837 was again sent to Australia, where he founded the settlement of Victoria, in Port Essington. Circumstances having induced him immediately after to proceed to India, he became, by the death of Sir Frederick Maitland, Commander-in-Chief of the fleet in those seas; and, in concert with the Governor General, completely organized the expedition which sailed from Singapore in 1840, and was the first to hoist a flag in a conquered portion of the Chinese Empire. In requital of these gallant services, as well as of his discretion as Plenipotentiary, her Majesty conferred on Sir Gordon the Dignity of a K.C.B. Subsequently he became Commodore Superintendent of Woolwich Dockyard, and continued to hold that important post until forced by sinking health to retire.

Sir Gordon was only son of the late Lieutenant-Gen. Sir Bremer, R.N., by Ann his wife, daughter and co-heir of Captain James Norman, R.N., and grandson of Captain James Bremer, R.N., a distinguished naval officer under Lords Howe and Hawke. The family of Bremer was originally German. Sir Gordon was born 26th September, 1786, and was unmarried. By his first wife, Harriet, relict of the Rev. George Henry Glasse, he leaves several children.

CHARLES THOMAS CONOLLY, ESQ., OF MIDFORD CASTLE, COUNTY OF SOMERSET.

THE death of this gentleman occurred on the 13th inst., at his seat of Midford Castle. He was son of the late Charles Conolly, Esq., and derived his descent from a branch of the Conolly family settled in Ireland in the reign of Henry VIII., and was twice married—first, in 1814, to Elizabeth, daughter of John Clifton, Esq., of Lytham Hall, county Lancaster, and, secondly, in 1828, to Jane, daughter of Philip Lawless, Esq., of Dublin. By the former he had issue, one son, Charles John, who married, in 1840, Louisa de Branscombe, only daughter of the late Prince de Ruffano, of Naples.

JAMES BARNWELL TATTNALL, ESQ., COMMANDER, ROYAL NAVY.

THE eventful life of this officer terminated on the 7th inst., at his residence, 9, Woodside Crescent, Glasgow. He entered the navy in 1803, and was soon after employed in the Pallas, under Lord Cochrane, wherein he gained distinction by his gallantry and conduct. In December, 1806, shortly after he had been removed with Lord Cochrane to the Imperieuse, he was placed in charge of a prize in the Bay of Biscay, and sent to England. On his passage, however, he was driven by bad weather under the island of Belleisle, and captured by a force sent for that purpose from the shore. His detention at Verdun continued for three years, until he succeeded at length in effecting his escape in the dress of a woman, and reaching England in safety, whence he was conveyed, by a smuggler, to the English fleet. Subsequently, in 1810, he was nominated Acting Lieutenant of the St. Pierre; and in the following year, while in the Racehorse, participated in the capture of the Renommée and the Aréthuse. In 1813, he commanded the boats of the President, at the taking of the island of Santa Clara; and, in 1814, having proceeded to America, headed the Tenant's boats at the destruction of Commodore Barney's flotilla up the Patuxent. Not long after, Lieutenant Tattnall was most gallantly distinguished in the capture of five American gun-boats, and was highly commended by his superior officer. His rank as Commander bore date in 181[illegible].

JOHN CALDECOTT, THE ASTRONOMER.

THE death of this accomplished gentleman, astronomer to the Rajah of Travancore, occurred at Trevandrum, in India, on the 16th of December. His loss will be severely felt, and completes the desolation accomplished, in little more than a single year, in the Indian Observatories, by the deaths of Taylor of Madras, Mr. Carnac of Bombay, and Colonel Wilcox of Oude.

The architect, Mr. Caldecott, was an astronomical and meteorologist, was an engineer. About the year 1832 he appears to have become known to the Rajah of Travancore one of the most enlightened Princes in the East, and was entrusted with the planning, erection, furnishing, and charge of the Astronomical and Meteorological Observatory at Travancore. The difficult task of arranging and setting to work, single-handed, so large an establishment, was accomplished in an admirable manner; and the results were commensurate with the character of the task. His subsequent labours tended in an essential degree to the advance of scientific research, and soon made his name known throughout Europe. At the period of his decease he was engaged in passing through the press the results of his researches of the preceding ten years.

JULIAN BUSBY, ESQ.

THIS gentleman, the member of a highly respectable family, was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple, in 1832. He practised for some years, with fair success and repute, in town and on the Oxford Circuit, but latterly ill-health prevented his further advancement. Mr. Busby died recently, in his 67th year, much and deservedly regretted.

IRELAND.

The report that Mr. Murphy has been appointed Commissioner of National Education, in the room of Mr. Corballis, is contradicted.

The bull for the consecration of the Right Rev. Dr. Murphy Roman Catholic Bishop of Cork has arrived from Rome.

CHOLERA.—The Carlow Sentinel states that the cholera has broken out in the workhouse at Gorey, and already swept away a large number of the inmates. It is also stated that the disease has appeared in the town, and proved fatal to several.

The Most Rev. Archbishop Slattery, of Cashel, has addressed a letter to his flock, urging them not to frequent or encourage the new colleges, on the ground that they have been condemned in the proscripts of the Roman Propaganda.

PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS (IRELAND) BILL.—The bill which Sir William Somerville has introduced to amend the laws which regulate the qualification and registration of Parliamentary voters in Ireland provides that occupiers of land and tenements rated to the Poor-rate at a net value of £8 or upwards, and being registered under the act, are to be entitled to vote at county elections. Persons entitled to estates for life or tail, or for life, of the rated value of £5, are also to be entitled to vote. No one is to be allowed on a qualification requiring occupation after the time when the first registry of county voters shall be in force, unless qualified and registered under the act. No persons are to have votes for counties at large within 7 miles within the boundaries of cities and boroughs; but occupiers of land or premises rated at a net annual value of £5 or upwards, and being registered under the act, are to be entitled to vote at elections for cities or towns.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

NORTHERN AND EASTERN: February 21: half-yearly meeting:—London: R. Paterson, Esq. A report declaring the dividends of five and six per cent., respectively, as guaranteed by the Eastern Counties, on the different descriptions of guaranteed stock, was unanimously adopted.

SOUTH-WESTERN.—It is understood to be the intention of the directors of this company, after the half-yearly meeting on the 26th, when the shareholders will have had an opportunity of considering the report of their own committees on the charges affecting the property of the directors, to call a special general meeting, and "to place at the disposal of the proprietors a certain number of seats in the direction, to fill up or not as they please and how they please."

LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE.—At a meeting of the railway carrying interest, just held at Halifax, and of the members of the Bolton Town Council, petitions to Parliament were adopted against this company's bill for increasing their rates and charges in respect of goods and passengers.

NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.—The committee of inquiry just appointed by the directors consists of Mr. W. C. Rowe, barrister; Mr. H. Blair, solicitor; and Mr. Barwise, accountant.

OXFORD AND BIRMINGHAM JUNCTION, AND OXFORD, WOLVERHAMPTON, AND DUDLEY. At the half-yearly meeting of these companies, held in Birmingham on Saturday, Mr. Barlow, the chairman, in answer to questions, said that the subject of completing these lines was under consideration, and he hoped another week would be settled.

EASTERN COUNTIES.—THE DIVIDEND.—The dividend announced upon the consolidated stock of this company, and of the Norfolk company, is 3s. per share, or £150 on

OXFORD, WORCESTER, AND WOLVERHAMPTON RAILWAY.—Yesterday (Friday), the half-yearly meeting of the company was held at the London Tavern, F. Rufford, Esq., M.P., in the chair. A list of defaulters in payment of calls was read on the motion of the chairman, and it appears that the number amounted to 111 shareholders, representing 2884 shares, and a capital of £111,000. The report was adopted, and a committee appointed for the selection of four new directors, vice the four who retire by the 27th of March next, to report upon the selection. After a vote of thanks to the chairman the meeting separated, after a sitting of five hours.

LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.—Yesterday (Friday), the half-yearly meeting of this company was held at the Euston Station—George Carr Glyn, Esq., in the chair—when a report was read, which states that the decrease in the receipts (amounting to £5805) is not confined to the localities subjected to competition, but extends over the whole line. This is, in a great degree, attributed to the cholera, as the increase on the merchandise traffic for the half year amounts to £16,779. Excluding the disbursements on the Yorkshire lines (recently opened up), the saving on the main line and branches, as compared with last year, is £12,650, the percentage of disbursements on receipts being 38 5 per cent. During the half-year, lines and extensions have been opened up, amounting to 111 miles and 40 chains, and the directors, in order to avoid creative to traffic, and to save expense, have been entered into with other companies, and negotiations are proceeding with the Great Western Company on the subject. It is expected arrangements will be made with the lines under Shrewsbury and Birmingham and North Staffordshire companies, Chancery proceedings pending on the subject. Difficulties have arisen relative to the Scottish Central agreement, in consequence of disputes with the Caledonian Company, the amount of further expenditure required on the lines remained at £1,0.9,0.0 s. 3d. During the present year, 143 miles of additional railway will be opened, for which further stock will be required. The directors have been enabled to renew many debentures at 3½ per cent. In conclusion, the directors recommend the payment of a dividend of £2 15s. per cent for the half-year, amounting to £489,1,2 7s 3d., and leaving £43,637 4s. 2d. to be carried to the next account. After considerable discussion, and various amendments proposed, the report was adopted, and the dividend reduced from 3½ per cent. to 5 per cent., by a majority of 106 to 84. The auditors having been re-elected, the meeting was made special, and several bills relative to deviations, &c. of other lines, were brought before the proprietors and approved. A committee was also appointed to approve an audit bill, and the meeting separated.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

A marked improvement in the English Funds has to be recorded this week Steady purchases on behalf of the public advanced Consols on Monday from the opening quotation of 95¾ to 95¾ ⅞; and, after a temporary movement contrary on Tuesday, Consols opening at 95¾ ⅞, and closing at 95¾ ⅞. On Wednesday there was less business doing, but prices again improved, the last quotation being 95¾ ⅞, which was the prevailing quotation on Thursday morning. Bills have receded a trifle, as we shall notice in Bonds, in consequence of a slight improvement in the value of money, arising from an increased demand. There has been about the average amount of business done in Reduced, New Three-and-a-Quarters, Consols, Bank Stock, India Bonds, Exchequer Bills, and Long Annuities.

Although the Foreign Market was buoyant on Monday, a gradual decline and absence of transactions has marked the remainder of the week. Peruvian, which last week advanced daily, has undergone a serious reverse. On Monday it opened at 82, and fluctuated between 81¾ and 82¼; but on Tuesday the opening quotation was 80, and it gradually receded to 78¾: it has, however, since rallied. Portuguese Four per Cents have been flat, declining from 34 to 33½. Russian Scrip, although rather in advance of last week's closing price, now only quotes 2¾ pm. Spanish has been but little dealt in, and is, consequently, flatter, the Five per Cents having receded from 19, and the Three per Cents from 36½. When the market closed, prices were—For Brazilian Bonds, 89; Buenos Ayres Bonds, 86 per Cent., 99; Dutch Bonds, 1825, Three per Cent., 72; Ditto, Five per Cent., 99¾; Equador Bonds, 3¼; Mexican Five per Cent., Account, 30¾; Peruvian Bonds, Four per Cent., Account, 79; Ditto, Deferred, 23¾; Portuguese Four per Cents, Russian Scrip, 2¾ pm.; Spanish, Five per Cents, Account, 1840, 18¾; Ditto, Account, 18½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent, 55¾; Ditto, Four per Cent. Certificates, 86¾.

The Railway Market continues heavy. South-Western and Great Western will pay the same dividend as last half-year; London and North Western will, it is understood, pay at the rate of five and a half per cent. per annum; and Eastern Counties, three shillings per share. In London and Blackwall pay one shilling and sixpence. Closing prices were—Birmingham, Wolverhampton, and Dudley, calls duly paid, without guarantee, 20; Bristol and Exeter, 64; Caledonian, 11¼; Ditto, New £10 Preference, 7¾; Chester and Holyhead, Preference, 9¼; Eastern Counties, Six per Cent. Stock, 5¾; Ditto, New, 11¼; Ditto, Extension, Five per Cent., No. 2, 4¾; Eastern Union, Class A (late E. U. Shares), Scrip (Six per Cent.), 15¼; Great Northern, 6¾; Great Western, 62½; Ditto, Half Shares, 31¼; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 15½; Ditto, New, 17¼; Lancashire and Yorkshire (West Riding Union), 3¾; London and Blackwall, 6¼; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 81¼; London and North-Western, 105¾; Ditto, £10 (Am. and B.), C, 12; London and South-Western, 65¾; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, new, £10, Pref., 7½; Midland, Consol. Bristol and Birmingham, 9 per Cent., 124; Ditto, ditto, 5 per Cent., North British, Pref., 5¾; North Staffordshire, 6¾; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 10; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 15¾; Royston and Hitchin, 14; S. E. R.; Scottish Central, 14¾; Shropshire Union, 3; South Devon, Pref., 9; South-Eastern, Pref., 5¾; Ditto, Registered, No. 4, 2¾; South Yorkshire, Doncaster, and Goole, 9¼; York, Newcastle and Berwick, 15¾; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, 10; Ditto, G.N.E., Preference, 5; York and North Midland, 18¾ Boulogne and Amiens, 6¾; Luxembourg, 2¾; Northern of France, 14; Orleans and Bordeaux, 3¾; Paris and Strasbourg, 6; Sambre and Meuse, 2¼; West Flanders, 1¾.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols were again rather heavy yesterday, quoting 95¾ ⅝ for Money, and 95¾ ⅞ for the next Account. Shares were without any material change in value; and the Foreign Funds quoted about the previous day's rates.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday). Notwithstanding that the arrivals of [illegible] extended to seven good sized cargoes, [illegible] as the cargoes had been chiefly disposed of prior to being reported; wheat sold [illegible] mixed at mostly, at to-day Monday's quotations. In the middling and inferior kinds no little was doing that prices were almost nominal. Upwards of 7200 quarters of foreign wheat have [illegible] ports, [illegible] ourselves. Fine and [illegible] currencies. Fine seed [illegible] were firm, and quite as dear. Grinding and distilling sorts ruled dull. A large supply of malt was on offer. That article moved off heavily, at barely late rates. The show of oats was trifling. Fine parcels sold freely, at full prices. Damp qualities were neg sated. In beans and peas, as well as flour, no change took place. Indian corn, afloat, was offering on easier terms.

ARRIVALS [illegible] wheat, 1660 [illegible] barley, 3190 malt, 3710 oats, 2360 flour, 4960, [illegible] beans, [illegible] peas, [illegible] foreign: wheat, [illegible] barley, [illegible] oats, [illegible] flour, [illegible] beans, [illegible] peas.

[illegible] to 25s; grinding barley, 18 to 23s; distilling ditto, 22s to 25s; malting ditto, 22s to 27s. Norfolk and Lincolnshire malt, 52s to 56s; brown ditto, 45s to 48s; Kingston and Ware, 54s to 57s; Chevalier, [illegible] Yorkshire, and Lincolnshire ditto, 54s to 56s; potato ditto, 47s to 49s; English and Cork, black, 24s to 25s; ditto, white, 24s to 26s; Irish beans, new, 24s to 26s; ditto, old, 28s to 30s; grey peas, 24s to 25s; maple, 25s to 26s; white, 27s to 28s per quarter. Town made flour, 35s to 40s. Suffolk, 30s to 32s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 32s to 33s per 280 lbs. Foreign: Dantzig and wheat, [illegible] to [illegible]; barley, [illegible] to [illegible]; oats, [illegible] to [illegible]; peas, [illegible] to [illegible]; beans, [illegible] to [illegible]; flour, 21s to 26s per barrel. Indian corn, afloat, was offering on easier terms, 21s to 24s per barrel.

THE Mark Lane Express says—"So little business is passing in our market, that last week's quotations rule almost to nullity."

[illegible] Monday.—Since our last report the arrivals of wheat into the metropolis are moderate, viz., 1,600 quarters by land carriage, 2,000 by coastwise, and 1,000 by inland navigation. The trade was very inactive during the whole of the week, and prices have given way to [illegible] to 1s per quarter. [illegible] of which is still on the increase—have set in slowly, on lower terms. Brown lumps, 65s to 68s 6d; and fair grocery, 56s to 59s per cwt. No change is related to [illegible].

Coffee.—The present extensive [illegible] in native Ceylon continue small, at 69s 6d to 81s per cwt. Plantation kinds are tolerably steady. In the value of other descriptions of coffee we have no change to notice.

Provisions.—We have to report a steady demand for all kinds of Dutch butter, the prices of which have an upward tendency. Fine bay Friesland is selling at 82s to 86s; fine Holstein and Kiel, 80s to 84s; and inferior, 46s per cwt. In Irish butter rather a large business is doing, the fly for the Liverpool and Manchester markets, at to-day per cwt more choicey Carlow, [illegible] Limerick, [illegible] Cork, 70s to 74s; Limerick, 62s to 68s; Waterford, [illegible] 70s, ordinary, 54s to 70s; Sligo, 60s to 64s per cwt. Further parcels of new milk Dorset have arrived, and sold at 80s to 84s per cwt. Fine old Dorset is quoted at 86s to 88s per cwt, fresh, 72s to 78s per dozen lbs. The market for bacon is heavy, and prices have declined 1s per cwt. Fine small Waterford, landed, 42s to 47s; heavy, 42s to 45s; and Limerick saleable, 42s to 44s per cwt. In other kinds of provisions only a moderate business is doing.

Tallow.—This article is very dull, and the turn [illegible] Y O on the spot and [illegible] 6d to 37s 3d per cwt; and for next [illegible] ordinary candles [illegible] dozen.

Oils.—Fish oils are in fair request, at fully late rates. Linseed steady, and quite as dear. In other oils were little [illegible] doing.

Seeds.—Since [illegible] Monday last, £2 8s to £3 10s; clover ditto, £3 0s to £4 10s; and straw £1 1s to £1 8s per load.

Hops (Friday).—Our market is very bare of fine samples of hops, yet the demand for them is to a limited extent, at each week's prices. In all other kinds next to nothing is doing, and we have sellers on rather lower terms.

New Kent and East Kent pockets, £4 to £7 11s; new Weald of Kent ditto, £3 3s to £3 3s; new Sussex ditto, £3 5s to £6 12s; [illegible] £12 5s to £13 5s. Yearling Kents, [illegible] to [illegible]. Sussex ditto, [illegible] to [illegible].

Goods.—Carr's Harsley, 15s 6d; [illegible] Ord's Redhough, 14s 6d; Sidney Allen's Redhough, 14s 6d; Haswell, [illegible] A cull crade, with a large quality at manner.

Smithfield (Friday).—I reported with that exhibited on Friday last the supply of beasts on offer to-day was rather extensive, but the general sale was by no means free-some. As the attendance of buyers was small, the beef trade ruled exceedingly heavy, and Monday's quotations were barely supported. The primest Scots for the best sold being 3s 4d per 8 lbs. The numbers of foreign stock, especially calves, were considerably on the increase, and the trade in them was ruled by a most dull tone, at a decline in value of 2s per head. Considerable [illegible] there was a second increase in the arrivals of sheep from the same quarters. On the whole, the demand for sheep was heavy, at the extreme rates of Monday last, and the top figure was barely maintained. Calves ruled heavy, at a fall in top quotations of 2s per 8lbs. In pigs very little business was transacted. Milch cows sold slowly, at from £4 to £18 each, including their calves.

Per 8lb to sink the offals.—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 10d to 3s 8d; second quality, ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime large oxen, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; prime Scots, 4s 3d to 4s 10d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 8d to 3s 4d; second quality ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; prime South Downs, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; large coarse calves, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; large hogs, 3s 4d to 3s 6d [illegible] porkers, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; suckling calves, 18s to 24s each. Total supplies [illegible] beasts, 820; sheep, 22,0 0; calves, 241; pigs, 360. Foreign supplies—beasts, 1810; sheep, 5640; calves, 70; Scotch beasts, 190; sheep, 600.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—These markets ruled heavy to-day at barely stationary prices [illegible] per 8lbs by the carcass:—[illegible] 3d to 4s 2d; middling ditto, [illegible] to [illegible]; prime ditto, [illegible] to [illegible]; large pork, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; small ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; large pork [illegible] to 3s 4d; inferior ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 10d [illegible] to 3s 8d; small pork, 3s 6d to 4s 0d.

THE KNELLER HALL TRAINING SCHOOL, WHITTON.

KNELLER HALL TRAINING SCHOOL.

This handsome new edifice has just been completed, and opened for the training of male teachers, under the superintendence of the Committee of Privy Council on Education.

The new School is situated at Whitton, a small village between Hounslow and Twickenham. The estate, consisting of about forty-five acres of land, with the mansion originally known as Kneller Hall, was formerly in the possession of Sir Godfrey Kneller, the celebrated State painter to Charles II., James II. William III., Queen Anne, and George I. Sir Godfrey, it appears, pulled down the manor-house, and erected a new house (Kneller Hall) on the same site, as stated on a stone in the north-east corner of the structure, which bore an inscription stating it to have been begun in 1709. It was a plain square brick dwelling-house, two stories in height, with red brick arches over the external openings. The property was purchased a short time since by the Committee of Privy Council on Education, when the walls and timbers were found dilapidated, and the house was taken down.

About twenty years since, when the estate was occupied by Mr. Calvert (the brewer), there were added to the premises a spacious drawing-room, at the south-east end of the house, and dining-room, with other accommodation, at the south-west end. The walls of these apartments have been preserved, re-faced, and raised to carry two stories of dormitories on them, and form the two wing-buildings of the present edifice. The servants' offices have likewise been repaired, modified and enlarged to suit the requirements of the new establishment.

The space formerly occupied by the house, at the ground-floor level, is now covered by the Principal's residence, the library, and class-rooms, &c.

Kneller Hall School, as now arranged, will afford accommodation for about one hundred pupils, with apartments for three masters, and a separate residence for the principal master.

The chapel is placed over the school library, and occupies the entire remaining height of the building: this is not yet finished. The rooms adjoining it, and above the ground-floor, are appropriated to apartments for the masters, and as dormitories for the pupils.

The interior accommodation is very complete. From the Builder (whence also we are indebted for the substance of the above details) we learn that a steam-engine of 3-horse power (erected by Messrs. Easton and Amos) is provided for pumping the water to supply the several tanks and cisterns required for the establishment; and steam power is applied to work the machinery for washing, and in the laundry department; also for cooking, and heating water for the baths, &c. The mangle is turned by steam. There is a drying closet over the boiler. The cooking apparatus, which seems very complete, grates, baths, &c. have been supplied by Messrs. Benham, of Wigmore-street. The building is lighted by gas, supplied through a main laid down from Twickenham by the Brentford Gas-light Company. The gas-fittings have been furnished by Messrs. Huxley and Heriot. The ground-floor and staircases are warmed by Mr. Perkins's apparatus, the furnaces being placed in the basement, which is vaulted throughout the central portion of the building. The ventilation introduced into the school department is in accordance with the system adopted by the Committee of Council on Education. Fire-mains have been provided both within and around the building.

The building has been erected from the designs and under the superintendence of Mr. George Mair, architect, who has studied, for the principal façades of the building, Wollaton Hall, with other examples of the architecture of that period; and the effect of the front is very satisfactory. The cornices, parapets quoins, dressings to the windows, and other enrichments (except a small portion of the arcade, which is worked in cement), are executed in Bath stone. The plinth round the building is of Portland stone, and the external walls are faced with red bricks. Mr. John Kelk is the builder.

Our Artist has selected for illustration the principal façade of the edifice, with a group of the fine trees with which it is fronted. In the grounds are some magnificent cedars, of patriarchal growth.

The School has already been opened, and is intended to be filled gradually.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

THE GREAT SEAL OF OREGON TERRITORY.

(From a New York Correspondent.)

The design represents the mouth of the Columbia river, and beyond is the Pacific Ocean; in the foreground is a man ploughing, indicating that agriculture has already commenced in the Territory. The steam-boat on the river denotes the extension of commerce. To the right is an Indian retiring before the advance of civilisation, his bow and arrows in his hand, and his blanket drawn around him; the setting sun is emblematical of his last day. Still further to the right are the Rocky Mountains, which, with the river, are the principal geographical characteristics of the territory.

THE GREAT SEAL OF OREGON.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

At no period since the French Revolution have balls been so numerous and so brilliant in Paris as this last month. Attempts are making to change the shape of the gowns; but these alterations are not generally adopted by ladies of fashion, and they are no improvement to the figure. These new bodies are quite tight, rather high on the chest, and trimmed with a square pelerine, two inches wide, ornamented with a pièce à la vielle: the sleeves are short, and without bows on the shoulders. The skirts are very full, and quite plain; and the richest silks, brilliant silver damasks, or satins, are selected for these toilets, with which no additional ornaments—either in ribbon, flowers, or lace—are worn (as our Engraving shows). These toilets attract attention by their extreme simplicity, in the midst of the gorgeous evening dresses, ornamented with flounces, double skirts, flowers, and jewels.

Terry velvets will be much worn next month (March) as visiting dresses; the shades rather dark; the trimmings on the front of the skirts very light. The barège moiré will be preferred; and very pretty patterns are prepared for these new materials. Irish poplins are still very fashionable and much prized in Paris where they are very difficult to procure. Taffetas glacé are about to be worn again; they are still better suited for small evening parties, but the season will soon make them fashionable for evening dresses.

The mantles so much worn with fur trimmings last month are now made in plain velvet, without any ornament. Very new and attractive shapes are in preparation for next month, but these novelties are still kept secret. The capotes are well suited to the season: their shape continues open; they are made of light-coloured satin, such as very light green, pale blue, lavender, or amber. One feather is placed on the side, and a wreath of small flowers, such as violettes de Parme, small nacelles, are worn under the front, on the hair. The ribbons forming the bow under the chin are extremely long and wide.

The caps are more and more coquettish. Lace caps are preferred for the negligés, and blonde for evening or dinner parties. Coloured blonde is not, however, so much the fashion as in previous years; but magnificent white and black blondes are in high favour.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 415.—Vol. xvi.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 2, 1850. [Sixpence.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION OF 1851.

The meeting of the City of Westminster, which took place last week, to consider the best means of furthering the objects proposed by the Great Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations, to be held in London in 1851, was in all respects too remarkable to be passed over in silence by any Journal claiming to reproduce and expound the public opinion of its day. Whether we consider the grand and comprehensive nature of the Exhibition itself; the friendly rivalry and peaceful intercourse among civilised nations which it will encourage; the illustrious patronage under which it has commenced; or the functions, character, and attainments of the various gentlemen who, upon the occasion alluded to, stepped forward to give it their approbation and their aid, we must admit that no event of our time is more interesting in itself, or more likely, even before it takes place, to extend kindly feelings in every part of the world.

Two points were casually touched upon by some of the speakers as pre-eminently distinguishing the forthcoming Exhibition from all previous exhibitions in England: its tendency, by an indirect but most powerful agency, to promote the peace and amity of the world; and the high testimony which it bears to the beauty, the worth, and the dignity of labour. Independently of all purely commercial considerations, which we by no means desire to underrate, the moral grounds of the proposal render it peculiarly worthy of the sympathy and support of all who love peace, and who rejoice in the social elevation of the ingenious, industrious, and wealth-producing classes.

Its tendency to promote the good-understanding of nations is evident to every man who knows the regular sequence of cause and effect. There are four different kinds of peacemakers in the world, with very different claims upon its attention and gratitude. The first kind scarcely deserve the name: "Solitudinem faciunt, pacem appellant." They are the destroyers and conquerors of the world, and create peace by the extermination of all who would make war against them. The second class is represented in our age by the Duke of Wellington, and by the other illustrious and honest men who put an end to devastating wars by brilliant victories, and who achieve Waterloos, to give Europe peace for thirty-five or a hundred years afterwards. The third is composed of the amiable, but somewhat over-zealous body of men, who deny the Christianity of war in any shape, and who oppose in one common condemnation both the aggressive war of the guilty against the innocent, and the defensive war of the oppressed against the oppressor. The fourth class are the preachers and teachers of the people, and that great body of intelligent, enterprising, and wealth-creating labourers who cover the seas with their ships, who lay down railroads, who invent electric telegraphs, who enlist science in all its multifarious developments in the cause of civilisation—who send messengers, as has been said, over one half of the globe to bring home the washerwoman's tea, and over the other half to bring her home sugar to sweeten it. These men, without talking about peace, pass their lives in promoting it, by rendering the welfare of every one nation essential to the welfare and happiness of every other nation, and by linking mankind together in the chain of a mutual dependence. Of this last class or peace-makers, the most valuable of all, because their work never ends, are those who have originated the idea of the great industrial gathering of next year; those who by word or deed have given it aid; and those who will contribute towards its splendour, utility, and success, by sending to it the productions of their ingenuity. "We shall for the future," as Lord Carlisle said, "have a confirmed repugnance to establish hostile and anti-social relations with those foreign nations and races from whence shall issue the happy applications of industry, the glorious discoveries of science, and the bright emanations of genius," which shall be then exhibited. The Bishop of London truly said, that the association formed for carrying out the objects of the exhibition was, "in the highest sense of the term, a peace society." "What," he inquired, "could be better calculated to diffuse Christian principles, and to lead men to regard themselves as friends and brothers, than their being engaged in a common pursuit like this, assisting and encouraging each other. The times in which we lived were favourable to it; distant lands were by the discoveries of science daily brought nearer to one another; international prejudice and feelings balanced and neutralised each other; and the capacity for evil of a man was every day more circumscribed, while the means of his doing good were every day enlarged." And this great step in the onward career of humanity, the right reverend Prelate might have added, has been made in consequence of the peace acquired for us at Waterloo, and could not have been made otherwise. Had the wars of the French Empire continued until the present day, these wonderful discoveries and applications of science would not have occurred, and we should still have been in the infancy of our civilisation, instead of the more vigorous youthfulness at which it has now arrived.

The great moral basis of the Exhibition was noticed by the American Minister. "He was not over sanguine as to results, but he was much mistaken if it would not prove that the world was more than ever disposed to recognize the dignity of labour." The dignity of labour was long a phrase that men did not understand. Labour was neither considered dignified nor beautiful, nor one of the most sacred of all human duties. To serve God by our honest labour, was considered no part of true religion. The world is growing somewhat wiser in this respect, and manifests a disposition to honour every earnest labourer who does his work like a man, and preserves intact the precious gift of an independent spirit. It is most undoubtedly the tendency of the proposed Exhibition to increase this feeling, and to show to all men that the honest labourer is at the same time his own best friend and the best benefactor of his species.

We trust that the display of 1851 will prove but the first of a long series; that the brilliant example set by Great Britain will be imitated in due time in all the capitals of Europe and of America; and that such practical "Peace Conventions" will operate largely to the growth and permanence of mutual good-will among all the nations of the earth.

RETURN OF LORD GOUGH.

THE gallant hero of Gwalior and Chillianwallah, accompanied by Lady Gough and suite, arrived at Southampton on Sunday last, by the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's ship Indus, from Alexandria. The arrival of the ship having become generally known some time before she got into dock, a very large number of spectators assembled to give the noble and gallant Lord a welcome; and when the steamer arrived alongside the platform, his Lordship was very loudly cheered by the populace, an ovation which was courteously acknowledged by the gallant veteran from the paddle-box. On landing, his Lord-ship proceeded to his hotel, and subsequently attended divine service in one of the churches.

The gallant Major Edwardes was a passenger by the same ship, and was also very warmly received by the spectators. On the following morning an address was presented to the noble Lord from the naval and military residents and other inhabitants of Southampton, to which his Lordship returned a courteous reply.

The noble Lord arrived in town at five o'clock on Monday afternoon. The directors of the railway placed a special train at his Lordship's disposal, but the noble Lord preferred travelling by the ordinary train. A considerable number of persons had assembled at the station; and when the train drew up alongside the platform, and his Lordship was discovered seated in one of the carriages with Lady Gough, the people gave the gallant General a right hearty cheer of welcome, which his Lordship very courteously acknowledged. The gallant Major Edwardes arrived in town by the same train. Lord Gough, before leaving the station, shook hands very heartily with the Major, and then, entering a carriage which was in attendance, drove off to his son's residence, No. 24, Upper Brook-street. Lord Gough is looking remarkably well, and, with the exception that his hair and whiskers have become quite white, he looks little the worse for the thirteen years' hard service he has undergone in the East. Lady Gough is also looking very well. Major Edwardes, by his own request, has acted as principal aide-de-camp to Lord Gough throughout the journey from the Punjaub. It is a mistake to suppose that the gallant Major is the bearer of the celebrated diamond, won by his valour, and presented by the Queen. The diamond is the Lion's jewel is still in India. Major Edwardes is staying with his family at No. 37, Upper Seymour-street, Portman-square.

The Honourable Directors of the East India Company have invited Lord Gough to a grand banquet at the London Tavern, at which all the Cabinet Ministers and a distinguished circle of guests will be present. The 23rd of March is the day fixed for this entertainment.

The United Service Club have announced their intention of entertaining the noble and gallant Lord upon an early day, and the list of guests is already more than full.

The Goldsmiths' Company intend to confer the freedom of their ancient guild upon his Lordship; and a magnificent entertainment will be given to the gallant veteran at their hall, on the occasion of its presentation.

A great many members of the nobility and gentry have made complimentary calls on Lord Gough, and entered their names in his Lordship's visiting-book.

In announcing the arrival of Lord Gough in London on Wednesday, it was stated in the daily newspapers that he was attended by Major Edwardes, the latter being accompanied by his wife and two children. This was a great mistake. Major Edwardes is not married. The lady in question was Lady Edwardes, aunt of the gallant Major, who had gone to Southampton to meet him; and the children were the daughters of a brother officer, Mr. John Lawrance, of the Lahore Board of Administration, by whom they had been placed under Major Edwardes' charge to bring to England.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE ORDNANCE ESTIMATES FOR THE YEAR 1850-51.—The total sum which will be required to defray the expenses which will be incurred in the Ordnance Department, at home and come stations abroad, during the year ending the 31st of March, 1851, is estimated at £2,632,501, being a reduction, as compared with the estimates of last year, of £.98,184. The following are the items of increase and decrease as compared with the preceding year:—Pay allowances, &c., £8000; Ordnance Office, £1080; scientific branches, £3345. The following are the items of decrease:—Commissariat and barrack supplies, £27,813; establishments at home, £11,547; wages, £.3,327; ordnance stores for land and sea services, £111,747, works, buildings, and repairs, £46,472; total, £209,846. The total strength of the service is proposed to be 14,069 men. The total charge for this non-effective service included in the above is £171,659.

ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY, WOOLWICH.—It appears that the system of bullying and punishing one another has again been revived amongst the cadets of the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich. The system seems to have been to admonish an offender in the most unmerciful manner, to tell who inflicted the punishment. One young gentleman, however, who had been pretty severely handled, recently ran away; and, although he adhered to his oath, and did not tell who the parties were who had punished him, he still showed his lacerated back in confirmation of the treatment he had received. His friends very properly waited upon the auti rities at the Ordnance-office, when a committee, or court of officers, was assembled to investigate the affair, the result of which has been the dismissal of three of the young men from the academy on Saturday last, and the confinement in close arrest of six others. Two out of three of the cadets who have been dismissed are the orphan sons of old officers.

THE NAVY ESTIMATES FOR 1850-51.—The sum which will be required to meet the expenses which may be incurred in the naval department in the year 1850-51, is estimated at £5,849,423. The vote for the financial year of 1849-50 amounted to £5,374,498; consequently, the gross decrease in the vote next required will be £928,664. From this, however, there is to be deducted several items of increase, amounting in the whole to £104,539; thereby making the net decrease £824,005. The items of increase, as compared with the same voted last year, are—Miscellaneous services, including the Admiralty agency for pirates, £98 330; and civil pensions and allowances, £9729. The following are the items of decrease:—Wages to seamen and marines, £36 481; victuals for ditto, £17 453; Admiralty Office, £1114; scientific branch, £10,833; Her Majesty's establishments at home, £1461; ditto abroad, £1160; wages to artificers at home, £74,792; ditto abroad, £3759; naval stores, &c., for the building and repair of ships, &c., £280,370; new works, improvements, and repairs in the yards, &c., £67,095; medicines, £415; half-pay to officers in the Navy and Royal Marines, £1046; military pensions and allowances, £10,216; army and ordnance department (conveyance of troops), £11,800. It is proposed that the service afloat shall consist of 26,000 seamen, to be employed in her Majesty's fleet; 888 men for the packet service; 2000 boys, and 5700 Royal Marines, to be employed in the fleet. The total service is to consist of 8300 Royal Marines.

SAD CATASTROPHE.—A very melancholy accident occurred on the 7th u.t., off the Greek coast, by which twelve lives were lost. Lieut. Michael Breen, a young man who had but recently received his lieutenancy, and at the same time an appointment to the Ganges, 84, Captain Smith, had been sent with the pinnace, containing nineteen hands, from the Bay of Salamis to the Piræus, for water. Having accomplished his duty he set sail on his return, and when near the island of Lepsina, the wind being contrary, the pinnace was capsized. By this accident six men were drowned. The lieutenant, with the remainder of the crew, struck manfully out, and succeeded in reaching Pigeon Island; but here, owing to the intense cold, he, with more, were frozen to death before assistance was sent. The names of those who are known to have perished, and those who are reported missing, but about whose fate there is no doubt, are as follows: — Michael Breen, lieutenant (1849) in command, buried on the island of Lypso; Peter Maxwell, able seaman, ditto; William Thomas, able seaman, ditto; Henry Morney, able seaman, ditto; Richard White, ordinary seaman, ditto; William Morgan, captain of maintop, supposed to be drowned; Alfred Elwood, able seaman, ditto; John Brown, able seaman, ditto; Samuel Lyon, ordinary seaman, ditto; Edward Vile, ordinary seaman, ditto; Henry Daulls, ordinary seaman, ditto. One of the latter was found and buried at the island; but he could not be identified in consequence of his features being so much disfigured. The death of that promising young officer, Lieut. Breen, who is the son of Dr. Breen, R.N., of Dublin, and has a brother assistant surgeon of the Ganges, is most sincerely deplored. He was a fine, high-spirited, and clever 2nd officer, and set an example to his suffering companions of enduring fortitude, devoted courage, and genuine unselfish zeal, worthy of a better fate, and deserving to be recorded amongst the splendid deeds that have ever distinguished the naval officer. Lieut Breen swam from the island, where his body was discovered after the boat was upset. He was found dead under a bush, and without a coat; and it transpired that the lives of one of the surviving seamen that Lieut. Breen, deeming that the man's sufferings from the intense cold were greater than his own, actually took off his coat and nobly gave it to the perishing seaman. This generous act of self-devotion preserved the man's life at the sacrifice of his own; but the noble act will live as long in remembrance as the most gallant action recorded.

BRITANNIA BRIDGE.—MENAI STRAITS.—(From our own Correspondent.) This magnificent structure is complete as regards one line of railway, and will be opened on Tuesday the 5th of March, by Mr. Robert Stephenson. Those who have visited the works during their progress, and witnessed the arduous character of the detail, can alone form any conception of the general effect, which is most imposing. The terrific gales of the 5th of February, unprecedented in violence since the year 1839, when the Menai Suspension Bridge severely damaged, caused no obvious vibration even in the Carnarvon Tube, which was then not in position for resisting the wind, as it was temporarily resting on the piers, and was subsequently lowered, at an elevation of upwards of 100 feet, and unconnected either with the neighbouring tubes or the masonry of the Tower. The tube presented a full broadside to the wind, which, impinging upon the latter below, ploughed it up in furrows of spray. It was impossible to pass the ear of the tubes during the gale, which, however, were free from all serious motion even during the most violent blows struck by the hurricane. The greatest lateral deflection of the Anglesey Tube, which was determined by Mr. Edwin Clark, did not exceed three-eighths of an inch. A train containing 200 tons of coal will first pass through the tubes, with two or three engines, but nothing that can be practically adapted can bear any proportion to the strength of this structure, of which some idea may be formed from the fact that a single completely equipped mast be sa suspended from the centre of each span.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The topic almost wholly engrossing public attention at Paris, is the approaching election of members to fill the vacancies in the Legislative Chamber, caused by the flight of those accused of participation in the alleged conspiracy of June last. The Socialists are marshalling tooth and nail to secure the return of their friends.

On Tuesday there were apprehensions of disturbances in consequence of a piece of over zeal on the part of the police. A considerable number of the friends of the victims of the revolutions of July, 1830, and February, 1848, on Monday deposited immortelles, or crowns of everlasting, at the foot of the Column of July, on the Place de la Bastille, where the victims are interred. During the night the wheels of these tributes of regard and affection disappeared, and it was soon discovered that this had been effected by the police. On Tuesday, at an early hour, crowds began to assemble round the column, and in the course of the morning a procession of about 1000 persons arrived, carrying wreaths and crowns, to replace those which had been carried away. The procession was dispersed, and from time to time strong parties of sergens de ville cleared the Place de la Bastille. Ultimately the crowd separated of themselves, happily without any collision.

The clearing away of the crowns of immortelles has been disavowed both by the Government and the Prefect of Police, as will be seen by the following official paragraph, which appears in the Moniteur of Tuesday evening:—"This morning the crowns which had been deposited at the foot of the Column of July in the Place de la Bastille had disappeared; they had been carried away during the night without any order. The Prefect of the Police, when informed this morning of this fact, gave immediate orders that they should be carried back, and replaced where they had been, and a commissary of police, in his scarf, presided at the operation. The Prefect of the Police has ordered the strictest inquiry, ascertaining who the authors are of an act so unjustifiable, and severe justice will be done."

The same journal contains also the following official paragraph:—"An officier de paix has caused the crowns which were deposited on the 24th of February round the Column of July to be carried off during the night. The Prefect of Police, after having taken the orders of the Minister of the Interior, has dismissed an officer of the municipal police from his duties and deprived him of his emoluments. The crowns have been restored in the course of the day by the authorities."

The Minister of Finance has declared to the Budget Committee that he will be able to provide for the service without the assistance of a loan. The deficiency in the revenue—about twenty millions of francs—is to be made up by an increase in the postage tax of five centimes.

The President has given orders for a further discharge of prisoners confined for taking part in the June insurrection.

The Minister of the Interior has issued a circular, addressed to the various prefects, recommending the establishment of banks of honour, to be supported by voluntary contributions, for the purpose of lending money to needy individuals, relying upon their probity for its return. The loan is not to exceed 300f.

The severity exhibited towards the press is not relaxed. M. Soquet, responsible editor of the Tocsin, was on Monday condemned by default to three years' imprisonment and 6000f. fine, for an article in that journal containing attacks against the Government. The Procureur de la République has ordered the seizure of a pamphlet, entitled "Le Roi Robin, ou les Vingt-quatre Février," as containing—], excitement to hatred and contempt against the Government of the Republic; 2, exciting citizens one against the other; and 3, insults against the person of the President of the Republic. The Procureur has also ordered proceedings to be commenced against such printers of placards relative to electoral meetings as have acted contrary to the laws on that subject, and directed that all such placards be taken down.

Troops are to be ordered immediately towards the Swiss frontier, in consequence of the menacing appearance of matters there.

On Sunday last, the anniversary of the proclamation of the Republic was celebrated in the churches of Paris by the performances of the service for the dead. The day passed over quietly, not only in Paris, but throughout the country generally. The Parisians, as the weather was very fine, promenaded the city in groups of merry holiday-makers.

ITALIAN STATES.

AUSTRIAN PROVINCES. The ports of Venice, Pola, and Lissa are declared ports of war, and no foreign vessel of war can cast anchor in them. The port and roadstead of Trieste, from the Valley of Muggia to Punta Grossa, remain open to the war-vessels of foreign powers.

ROME.—The latest accounts represent the Pope's arrival as problematical as ever, owing, it is said, to the menacing attitude of the lower classes during the Carnival, and the assassinations which then took place.

Fortunato Gatti, who assassinated the French soldier belonging to the 53d Regiment, was shot on the 17th inst. on the Piazza del Popolo. He made a confession of his crime, and died expressing sorrow for his guilt. 10,000 individuals attended his execution.

Gen. Baraguay d'Hilliers has informed his officers that some Austrian regiments will shortly enter Rome.

CENTRAL GERMANY.

Great preparations are being made at Erfurth for the assembling there of the new German Parliament. The Church of St. Augustine, which is to be the House of Assembly, has undergone quite a transformation for the purpose.

Adam Schneider, the man who mercilessly fired at the Prince of Prussia, in Mayence, has been acquitted by the jury in Mayence, and was set at once at liberty by the presiding Judge.

The number of acquittals which have been registered in favour of persons indicted for treasonable practices by the juries in Germany, has excited considerable surprise throughout Germany. The idea of acquittal of a charge of a political character is becoming as much a matter of course as being condemned in Germany.

In the event of Bavaria, Wurtemburg, Hanover, and Saxony promulgating a new constitution for Germany, in opposition to that of Prussia, the Parliament will, it is said, meet at Frankfort.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

The question of war or peace is not yet definitively settled, though, as far as regards Germany, it is pretty certain no hostile proceedings will be taken by any of the states. The chief obstacles to between the Duchies themselves and Denmark. The highly exaggerated reports of the Schleswig-Holstein successes are probable—perhaps inevitable. The Danes, however, seem, notwithstanding their high-pitched demands, by no means so anxious as last year to renew the combat. Hence it is hoped that even when the last efforts to compromise at mediation are withdrawn, chances will still remain of an accommodation.

PRUSSIA

The Prussian parliament was prorogued on the 26th ult., by Royal Commission, his Majesty having been prevented from being present in person in consequence of his attendance at the funeral of Prince Charles. He could not help remarking that this prorogation was the first instance that had occurred where the session had arrived at a regular and peaceable conclusion.

SWITZERLAND.

The report of hostile manifestations against Switzerland is not entirely untrue; but although some French troops have marched towards the frontier, and the armaments of the northern powers may have produced some disquietude, no serious results are apprehended.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Cape of Good Hope papers have arrived, bringing dates of the 29th December inclusive. The Neptune still lay in Table Bay waiting orders. All was peaceable, and the natives were looking with a ray of hope that the convicts would be ordered to another destination, which would be the best for that some English journals had been received, containing rumours that Lord Grey's dispatches decree had been revoked. This was viewed as a foreshadowing of good things to come, and that the original compensation for the loss of slave labour would be crowned with success.

WATER SUPPLY TO THE METROPOLIS. — MEETING OF THE OWNERS OF PROPERTY IN THE VALLEY OF THE COLNE.—A very numerous meeting was held on Wednesday afternoon, at the White Horse Hotel, Uxbridge, convened for the purpose of affording the landowners and millowners on the Colne and its banks an opportunity of determining upon the steps they should take to oppose the South Essex Water Company's scheme now before Parliament. The meeting excited considerable interest, and a large number of the most influential persons in the district attended; the Right Hon. the Earl of Verulam was unanimously voted to the chair. His Lordship addressed the meeting at some length in condemnation of the Watford scheme, which he contended was opposed to the interests of all who had property in the district. The company proposed to take away the water which drove their mills and supplied their land, without offering any adequate compensation for the loss inflicted. They had as much right to do so as they had to take the oats or other produce off the estate. It was a most impudent scheme. The company seemed to treat the inhabitants of the district with contempt, and in framing an utterly unmeaning clause in the question, while their scheme, if carried out, would destroy the value of water, and render the country hardly habitable. He would strenuously oppose that scheme, as he was sure all present and the country. Mr. Dickenson said that in opposing the project of 1840, he had very fully stated his views on the subject, and it was not necessary that he should now go at any length into it. It was a repetition of the project, except that the well was proposed to be at Watford, instead of Bushey. Contrary to experience had proved to him that although the greater part of the rain did not go down to the springs, yet those springs materially affected the body of the water in the Colne, and if the supply of them was diverted, the immediate loss of water-power must ensue. When the Grand Junction Canal Company wished to sink a well at the head of the Saloon River, Mr. Cubitt was appointed to try experiments as to the probable effect of such a step. A well was sunk, and property worked by an engine were kept going incessantly for ten days and nights. The effect was to dry up the source of the river, and to leave its bed dry for 330 yards. A second experiment of ten days and nights' pumping dried up the river for 570 yards more. In fact, a circle or 1200 yards was left as dry as a board. He thought this conclusive that the Watford well, with eight mill lots of gr...ns taken from it daily, would exercise a similarly injurious effect, but in a much more extended degree; and knowing the vast amount of property connected, he felt bound to oppose the measure. Mr. Clutterbuck corroborated the statement of Mr. Dickenson. Mr. Lovell moved, and Mr. Williams seconded, a resolution [illegible] Watford Water Bill, which was agreed to; and a committee was appointed to oppose the bill.—Thanks were voted to the chairman, and the meeting separated.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

LIEUTENANT GRAHAM AND MR. ELLIOTT

Lord BROUGHAM said, that circumstances had come to his knowledge since he had last mentioned the subject of the differences between Commander Pitman and Messrs. Graham and Elliot, which had induced him to alter his opinion with regard to Commander Pitman. He had before spoken upon the highest authority. He could only account for the discrepancies in the statements he had received in favour of and against Lieutenant Graham and Mr. Elliott, by supposing that they applied to different periods. He had heard from an admiral of high account of their conduct, and from other authorities a totally different account. He was of opinion that Mr. Pitman did not deserve the opprobrium heaped upon him. He had received many strong testimonies in his favour. He believed that if Commander Pitman had applied for a postponement of his trial, that, from the evidence which he had seen, and which there was not time to produce before the court-martial, he would have been acquitted.

The Earl of MINTO would be sorry to say anything which should add to the pain which Messrs. Graham and Elliott must feel, while suffering under a very severe and well-merited punishment; but he must say, that the officers serving on board that ship were of opinion that it was to be regretted Mr. Pitman had not called exculpatory evidence. It was to be regretted that the noble and learned Lord had drawn the attention of their Lordships to the subject. He believed that if Commander Pitman had applied for a postponement of his trial, that, from the evidence which he had seen, and which there was not time to produce before the court-martial, he would have been acquitted.

The Earl of MINTO would be sorry to say anything which should add to the pain which Messrs. Graham and Elliott must feel, while suffering under a very severe and well-merited punishment; but he must say, that the officers serving on board that ship were of opinion that it was to be regretted Mr. Pitman had not called exculpatory evidence. It was to be regretted that the noble and learned Lord had drawn the attention of their Lordships to the subject. He must say that the bringing of the proceedings of courts-martial before Parliament had a serious tendency to weaken their influence in the navy.

Lord BROUGHAM could not accept the reprimand of his noble friend, neither could he admit that he had fallen into error. He thought these subjects ought to be brought forward, and his noble friend would hear more of them if he lived longer.

The Earl of MINTO had regretted that these matters should be brought forward unnecessarily. His noble and learned friend could scarcely have learnt from the heads of the Admiralty what the real facts of the case were.

ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION.

The House having gone into committee on the Ecclesiastical Commission Bill, the first eleven clauses were agreed to.

Earl GREY opposed the 12th clause, consolidating the episcopal and common fund, on the ground that it would render nugatory the promise solemnly given that the surplus income of the episcopal fund should be expended in augmenting the smaller livings. The noble and learned Lord proposed an amendment reasserting the promise contained in the preamble of the act for erecting the Bishopric of Manchester.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE admitted that a promise of additional bishoprics had been given, nor did he see any reason why that promise should not be fulfilled, but the strongest obstacle to the creation of new sees was the desire of some persons to keep the two funds separate. If they were amalgamated, the united surplus would be applied in the way which seemed most conducive to the interests of the Church, either in increasing the number of bishoprics, or in augmenting small livings.

After a considerable discussion, in which the Bishop of LONDON, Lord STANLEY, and the Earl of HARROWBY took part for the amendment, and the Lord CHANCELLOR and Earl GREY against it, the Committee divided, when the numbers were—

For the amendment	31
Against it	20
Majority	11

The Bishop of SALISBURY opposed clause 15, and proposed an amendment, the object of which was to provide that the income should not, in the case of the Deanery of York, exceed £3000, nor, in the case of any of the Deaneries of Chichester, Ripon, Hereford, Lichfield, Salisbury, or Wells, exceed £1500, nor should in any case exceed the average annual income of the lands, tithes, and hereditaments heretofore annexed to the deanery, and which, by the provisions of the statute 7 William 4, have or may become vested in the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE opposed the amendment, which was carried by a majority of 2. The numbers being, for the amendment, 31; against it, 19.

The Bishop of OXFORD moved the insertion of three clauses: the first empowering the Ecclesiastical Commissioners to commute for any prebend annexed to the Deanery of Chichester, the annual value of the commuted lands, &c., should be subject to similar uses as the lands vested under former acts; and the third providing that certain benefices annexed to the sees of Bristol, Oxford, and Peterborough, and to certain canonries, and under act of Parliament, and therefore not liable to the operation of the act which severed such benefices, should be separated from those dioceses.

These clauses were agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be reported to the House. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

A new writ was ordered to be issued for Canterbury, in the room of Lord Albert Denison, who has accepted the office of Steward of Hundreds.

THE COINAGE.

In reply to a question,

Mr. SHELL stated that the issue of the new florin coin had been stopped in consequence of the objections which had been made to certain words usually adopted. He was himself inadvertently the cause of the omission, though he frankly admitted that it would have been more judicious to have followed the established precedent.

THE BUDGET.

Lord J. RUSSELL gave notice that, on Monday next, votes for the navy would be proposed; and, on Monday week, votes for the army; and that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would make his general financial statement (the Budget) on the 15th of March.

PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS (IRELAND) BILL.—EXTRAORDINARY OPPOSITION.

Sir W. SOMERVILLE moved the committee on the Parliamentary Voters, &c. (Ireland) Bill.

Mr. DISRAELI urged on the Government the propriety of postponing the committal of this bill. It had only been read a second time on Friday last; was a bill of the greatest importance to Ireland, and to the country at large; its details required the deepest consideration; the Irish members were just commencing, and many Irish members were either then absent or were about to leave for Ireland. On these grounds he pressed the Government to postpone the committal to 6 o'clock until after the Irish debate.

Mr. HERRIES, Lord Castlereagh, Lord J. Hamilton, Mr. Napier, and other hon. members also recommended a postponement.

Mr W. BROWNE declined to comply with the request.

Lord J. MANNERS then moved that the bill be committed that day three weeks, and the House divided:—

For going into committee	151
Against it	115
Majority	36

On the motion that the Speaker leave the chair,

Mr. DISRAELI said he could not allow such importance to be hurried through the House in the manner proposed. The hon. member opposed the motion.

Lord J. RUSSELL said he was afraid Mr. Disraeli had been told elsewhere that it was his duty to obstruct the bill, and, having been taught that lesson, he (Lord J. Russell) concluded that it was the hon. member's intention to obey his instructions. However, he should feel it to be his duty to persist in going into committee. The bill was introduced in 1848, and again in 1849, and therefore its principles and provisions were well known to hon. members.

Mr. SHAW considered all attention to obstruct the Government, though he had voted with the minority on the previous division.

Lord CASTLEREAGH, seeing the general opinion of the House, would not further oppose the going into committee.

The House divided on the question that the Speaker leave the chair

For	153
Against	53

The House having gone into committee,

Mr. DISRAELI condemned, as unconstitutional and uncourteous the taunt uttered by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, that Mr. Disraeli and his friends had received instructions elsewhere to obstruct. The noble Lord could not say that he (Mr. Disraeli) and his friends had received instructions how to conduct themselves in the House of Commons, except from the House. Factious proceedings! Such a charge was extraordinary, coming from that identical noble Lord who once moved the factious amendment of the Appropriation Clause, and who, having succeeded in carrying it and getting into office, had neither the courage nor the conscience to redeem it. The noble Lord opposite (Lord John Russell) was one of immense importance to the country, and should not be shouted through the House precipitately; and he (Mr. Disraeli) would not be deterred by the noble Lord's sneer from doing his duty. The hon. member moved that the chairman report progress.

The committee divided—

For reporting progress	81
Against it	191
Majority	110

Mr. FORBES moved that the Chairman leave the chair

Mr Henley, Mr. W. Miles, Lord C. Hamilton, and Mr. Newdegate insisted on the propriety of delaying more than from Friday to Monday to consider the many details of so important a bill.

Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL charged gentlemen opposite with having made a compact that day to oppose the bill.

Mr. S. HERBERT denied that Mr. Disraeli the leader of an organised hypocrisy with regard to the measure; and Mr. BARRY charged gentlemen opposite with having made a compact to obstruct the bill, but one to date at an early hour, in order to weary out the House.

Lord J. MANNERS denounced the determination to persevere in refusing to be forced into a premature discussion on so vital a bill merely to convenience the Government by allowing them to substitute for the Australian Government-bill, which originally stood first for debate that evening.

The committee divided—

For the chairman leaving the chair	70
Against it	[illegible]

Mr. GROGAN moved that the Chairman report progress.

MR. NAPIER suggested, that such portions of the bill as the House generally were agreed on might be allowed to pass through committee, reserving other parts for further consideration.

Lord J. RUSSELL could not consent to postpone the clauses relative to the franchise, if that was what was meant by the suggestion. He could not agree to the registration clauses taken from Lord Stanley's bill, without the clauses defining the franchise.

After a lengthened discussion, the committee divided

For reporting progress	.. ..	.. 63
Against it	.. ..	.. 155
Majority	.. ..	.. -92

Mr. ADDERLEY moved that the Chairman leave the chair.

After another long discussion,

Mr. DISRAELI remarked, that the question was, had the Government acted with candour and ingenuousness in respect to this bill. He maintained that they had not. It was described in the Speech from the Throne as a new measure, and therefore the argument that it was an old bill was completely confuted. He (Mr. Disraeli) and his friends were resolved to oppose its precipitate passing of the bill, contrary to all usual notice and form observed in Parliament; and they felt satisfied that all men of common sense and men of business—not, of course, trading agitators—would be convinced that they had acted with good temper and discretion.

Lord J. RUSSELL could not help suspecting that an aversion, amounting almost to antipathy, to any extension of the franchise in Ireland was at the bottom of the opposition to the bill. He saw clearly how gentlemen might delay the bill for a time, but he believed that would be their only consolation, for he felt satisfied the House would extend the franchise in Ireland, and he hoped a measure to carry such extension into operation would ultimately be carried.

The committee divided—

Capt. TAYLOR moved that the chairman report progress.

Lord J. RUSSELL, after this division, announced that, as it was then so late (half-past eleven), there was no chances of making any progress.

The CHAIRMAN then reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Friday.

The Elections (Ireland) Bill was also postponed to Friday.

The Common Lodgings Bill passed through committee.

Admiral Dundas obtained leave to bring in a bill to enable the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital to improve the said hospital; and also to enlarge and improve the Billingsgate Dock and widen Billingsgate-street in Greenwich, and for other purposes.

Mr. CORNEWALL LEWIS obtained leave to bring in a bill to consolidate the office of metropolitan public carriages with the office of commissioners of police of the metropolis.—Adjourned at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

ENCUMBERED ESTATES (IRELAND).

A petition presented by Lord BRABOURNE gave rise to a conversation on the subject of the Encumbered Estates (Ireland) Act, in which the operation of the act was described by the Earl of GLENGALL and the Earl of MOUNTCASHEL as most destructive. It was defended by Lord CAMPBELL, the Lord CHANCELLOR, and other noble Lords.

RAILWAY LEGISLATION.

On the motion of Lord MONTEAGLE, it was resolved that, before the second reading of any bill in this session, a balance sheet of the last year, and any scheme for dividends, should be previously laid on the table of the House.

ABUSES IN EMIGRANT SHIPS.

The Earl of MOUNTCASHEL moved for the testimonials on which Mr. Thomas Hammond had been appointed surgeon to the emigrant ship Dora, with minutes of the Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners on those testimonials. His object was to show that very improper characters were appointed surgeons to emigrant vessels, and that, in consequence, great abuses occurred on board.

Earl GREY had no objection to the motion, which was agreed to.

Earl NELSON laid on the table a bill to regulate the appointment of chaplains on foreign stations, which was read a first time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

GREECE.

Lord PALMERSTON stated (in reply to a question put by Mr. Anstey) that no blockade had been established in Greece; al. that had been done was the prevention of Greek vessels from leaving the ports, and the detention of Greek vessels as security.

MR. FEARGUS O'CONNOR'S LAND SCHEME.

A report from the Committee on Public Petitions was presented to the House, stating that a petition, presented by Mr. Henley, against the promoters of the National Land Company Scheme, had been taken from the table of the House by Mr. Feargus O'Connor, and retained by him for eleven days.

Mr. O'CONNOR excused his conduct on the ground of ignorance of the practice of the House; the petition in question contained grave abuses of him, and he had taken it from the table of the House, sent it to his office, and had it published in his newspaper. He had returned the petition to the clerk when asked for, and he did not think he was doing anything very wrong when he took it. The hon. member finished his excuse by asking pardon for his violation of the practice of the House.

Mr. HENLEY said the petition had come to him from parties resident in his own country, and was directed, as he conceived, against the scheme itself of the Land Company.

Mr. O'CONNOR.—Ay, but I'm the schemer. (Laughter.)

Mr. HENLEY.—I do not think the petition was directed against the hon. member personally; though afterwards I wished I had given him notice, and explained this to him the same evening. (Hear, hear.)

The matter was permitted to drop here.

SOLICITORS' CERTIFICATES DUTY.

Lord R GROSVENOR moved for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal the Attorneys' and Solicitors' Annual Certificate Duty. The noble Lord advocated his measure, on the ground that the tax he sought to repeal was one on the administration of justice.

Mr. HAYTER objected to a discussion on a tax until after the general financial statement had been made by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, which was fixed for the 15th of March. The hon. member moved, as an amendment, that the debate be adjourned to the 22nd of March.

Sir F. THESIGER recommended the noble Lord to agree to the proposed adjournment.

After a few remarks from Mr. COCKBURN,

Lord R. GROSVENOR acquiesced, and the debate was adjourned to the 22nd of March.

SECULAR EDUCATION.

Mr. W. J. FOX moved for leave to bring in a Bill to promote the secular Education of the people in England and Wales. The hon. member said that the advantages of education had been so impressed on the community, that the promotion of education was now a matter of zeal rather than indifference. Magnificent efforts had been made by the Established Church. The Dissenters had well proved themselves the friends of education. The Privy Council, with unquestionable honesty of purpose, had endeavoured to combine the efforts of all parties; but, as all parties were unfortunately in collision, comparatively little had been done. Owing to the deficiency of education given, it had not hitherto operated as a barrier to crime; but he believed that the religious education afforded had failed as a preventive to crime, because it was not combined with secular education. It was not his intention to restrict religious instruction in the slightest degree, but to unite it with such secular education as would tend to river it in the minds and hearts of the pupils. Having referred to a variety of documents to prove the deficiency of education throughout the country, the hon. member explained the main provisions of his bill. He proposed not to supersede any existing education, but to render available all local exertions in connexion with a central superintendence. He proposed that the deficiencies in the means of education in parishes should be answered by her Majesty's inspectors. He would have them take into consideration every existing machinery—the National schools, the British and Foreign, &c., the public and private schools, and report upon the state of education in each locality. The amount of deficiency thus ascertained, the localities should be called on to elect educational committees to supply the deficiencies, and should have the power to levy rates on the inhabitants for supplying the educational wants. He proposed that secular education should be the peculiar province of the commissioners. In case the schools in the locality should be insufficient, he proposed that new schools should be established, and those should be properly free schools, to which all persons should have the right to send children between seven and thirteen years of age, without charge, and subject to no religious peculiarities; and that parents should have also the right to have their children instructed in religion where and by whom they chose. He proposed that the teachers should be made as independent as possible, and be selected principally for their qualities for understanding the tempers of children, and for their practice in teaching, rather than for any theological learning. He proposed that, in case any locality should neglect to provide for its educational deficiency, the Committee of Privy Council should have the power to compel them to do so, and not allow any such community to be a blot on the country. The hon. member would not undertake to estimate the cost of his scheme.

Mr. SLANEY supported the motion

Lord J. RUSSELL hoped that the House would not refuse permission to bring in the bill. No one could doubt the importance of the subject; no one could say that the state of education in England was such as that no future measures were required: no one could deny that good men had much to deplore in the existing state of education, and in the contests to which it had given rise, and in the absence of education for the great masses of the people. If that were so, the only question for the House then to consider was, whether the hon. member had approached the subject in a proper spirit, and if his object was to provide better education for all classes and sects without distinction. He (Lord J. Russell) thought the hon. member had approached the subject in a proper spirit, and had evinced a disposition to provide better education for the people; and, therefore, without giving any opinion as to the details or merits of the proposed measure, he readily gave his assent to the bringing in of the bill.

Sir R. INGLIS could not examine the principles on which the bill rested, or the objects which it sought to attain. It only proposed to give to the people a secular education, leaving religious opinion unprovided for, because leaving the religious education of children to the care of ignorant parents or tantamount to no provision whatever. Although he would not oppose the introduction of the bill, he hoped a measure based on such principles would never pass into a law.

Mr. M. MILNES, Mr. HUME, and Mr. B. OSBORNE expressed their warm approval of the bill.

Mr. Napier, Mr. Plumptre, Mr. W. Miles, Mr. Lawe, and Mr. Newdegate expressed their objections to the non-religious principle of the bill.

Mr. COCKBURN supported it.

Leave was then given to bring in a bill; and the hon. member gave notice that he would not move the second reading until after Easter.

COUNTY COURTS.

Mr. FITZROY moved for leave to bring in a Bill to extend the Jurisdiction of the County Courts to £50. The hon member said that the public approval of the County Courts had been authoritly demonstrated by the number of actions brought and determined in them; and that an extension of the jurisdiction to £50 would cheapen justice, and be a great advantage to the public. In the bill he had prepared he had provided for an appeal from the decision of the judge.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL would not oppose the introduction of the bill, but he could not conceal his great objection to the measure. £20 was the limit assigned to County Courts upon strong reasons; the experiment had been successful, and should not be hazarded by any rash attempt to extend the jurisdiction. If the sum adjudicated were large, there should be an appeal; if an appeal, then the way would be opened for costs and litigation—the wealthy debtor would be able to harass the suitor, and, in short, the public confidence in these courts would be shaken

After a short discussion, leave was given to bring in the bill.

DUTY ON BRICKS.

Mr. HUME moved a resolution to the effect that the House, taking into consideration the condition of the cottages of the labourers of the kingdom, and the want of adequate accommodation for their families, is of opinion that a drawback should in future be allowed on the brick and timber employed in the construction of cottages. He moved, by his motion, to extract an expression of opinion from the House that the duty on bricks and timber should be removed.

Mr. LABOUCHERE deprecated discussion on the taxes on bricks and timber before the Chancellor of the Exchequer had laid the views of the Government on the general finances of the country before the House. He opposed the motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

Mr. RICARDO obtained leave to bring in a Bill for the better regulation of Railway Traffic

Lord ESLYN obtained leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Laws relative to Highways, South Wales.

Mr. LACY moved for leave to bring in a Bill for promoting Extramural Interments, the object of which was to enable railway companies to establish cemeteries, under the control of the Railway Commissioners. He thought these cemeteries would be good commercial speculations.

Sir G. GREY opposed the introduction of the bill.

Lord ASHLEY said the report of the Board of Health would be in the hands of members immediately, and, pending the appearance of that report, he objected to the introduction of a bill on the subject of interments.

The motion was withdrawn.

The Commons Inclosure Bill was read a third time and passed.

Adjourned at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House met at noon.

MARRIAGES BILL.

The second reading of the Marriages Bill was moved by Mr. J. S. WORTLEY. The hon. and learned member stated that the bill was, in some respects, different from that introduced last year. In last year's bill he had proposed, not only to allow marriages with a deceased wife's sister, but also to legalise marriage with a deceased brother's widow; but, in consequence of the opposition threatened, and considering that there were two parts of the latter marriages, he thought it better to withdraw that portion of the bill relative to the niece, and to leave clergymen free to solemnise such marriages or not. The measure he now submitted to the House was thus simply a measure of relief, and would operate as no compulsion on the clergymen of the Established Church. He did not seek by this bill to alter any ancient law, for he contended that before 1835 these marriages were legal. Nor did he think that any valid national or moral objection could be urged against the measure he proposed.

Sir F. THESIGER, convinced that the bill would, if passed into law, lead to great imminent danger and much mischief, felt constrained to oppose it, and to move, as an amendment, that it be read a second time that day six months.

Colonel THOMPSON and Mr. HEADLAM supported the bill.

Mr. PAGE WOOD thought that the House should hesitate before they attempted to alter a law on which the affections and homes of England were based. It was no reason for legalising such prohibited marriages to adduce the practice of other nations. His opinion was, that the effect of such a legalisation would be to lower the tone of morals in this kingdom. The opinion of the great body of the women of England expressed in their memorial to the Queen, was decidedly against these prohibited marriages, and should have the utmost weight with the House.

The debate was then adjourned

Some returns were ordered, and the House adjourned at half-past four o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

Lord MONTEAGLE presented a petition signed by several of the influential inhabitants of the colony of Port Philip, complaining of the restrictions of the franchise, and praying for its extension. He wished to ask his noble friend if he was in possession of any despatches from the Australian colonies on the subject of the Australian Bill of last session.

Earl GREY said that he had received returns from the several governors, and from what he learned from the colonial newspapers, he believed that the plan had been very favourably received by the colonies, and he should before the bill came on for discussion be willing to lay that information on the table. The petitioners who had signed that petition were, he believed, persons of great respectability, and he believed that the grievance of which they complained was well-founded; but he believed it might be better dealt with by the colonial legislature than by the Parliament of this country, as minute local information was necessary to deal with the question, and he considered this furnished an additional argument in favour of the Government bill.

The report on the Ecclesiastical Commission Bill was brought up, and agreed to.

PARTY PROCESSIONS (IRELAND) BILL.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE moved the second reading of the Party Processions (Ireland) Bill. The bill did not differ from former bills, except in this case, that there was no period fixed for the expiration of the bill. The necessity for the enactment of such a bill was self-evident, and he would not detain their Lordships by making reference to recent occurrences.

Lord BROUGHAM considered that it was a great advantage that the bill was permanent. He considered the right of procession as the least valuable of the rights of the subject, and he should not be sorry to see all processions prohibited, except funeral processions.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH said the bill only prohibited armed processions, but did not prohibit processions generally, so that the Orangeman might assemble unarmed next year and march through Dolly's Brae. He thought that the papers which had been presented to the House on the subject of Dolly's Brae justified the introduction of this bill, although they might not justify the conduct that had been pursued by her Majesty's Government on that occasion, but on that point he would not now give any opinion.

After a few words from the Earl of ST. GERMANS and Lord CAMPBELL,

The Earl of RODEN was quite convinced that no measure with respect to those party processions could be too stringent. So far as Ireland was concerned, such a measure ought to be made to apply to every party. He trusted the Protestant party would see that they had now a fair measure of justice, and no reason to complain. He was certain they would be the first to give up those processions, which they had hitherto so much enjoyed and indulged in.

The bill was then read a second time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE FACTORY ACT.

Lord ASHLEY gave notice that, on an early day, he should move for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the Factory Act

PUNISHMENT OF DEATH.

Mr. EWART gave notice that, on an early day, he should move for leave to bring in a Bill to Repeal the Punishment of Death.

GREENWICH PARK.

Viscount DUNCAN asked Mr. Hayter if any part of Greenwich Park is about to be encroached on to provide residences for the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital, or for any other purpose?

Mr. HAYTER was very much obliged to his noble friend for putting this question, because he trusted the answer he had to give would allay any apprehension on the part of the inhabitants of Greenwich that there was any design or intention on the part of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, or of Greenwich Hospital, to interfere with Greenwich Park property. The circumstances were these:—The Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital had of late been carrying out certain improvements by which they believed that the beauty of the hospital and the comforts of its inmates would be very considerably increased. In the course of these improvements they designed to erect certain buildings on a portion of the property which belonged not to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, but to the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital themselves. It was at first represented that this alteration would be no detriment to the locality, but the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital, upon inquiry, having ascertained that such would be the case, determined not to interfere with the property, but to look to some other neighbourhood for making the improvement.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

Sir W. MOLESWORTH said that he had given notice of a question to the Government relative to Western Australia, and, as it was a legal question, perhaps the Attorney-General would answer it. The question was this:—Whether the Government of Western Australia was first founded, an act was passed to form a Legislative Assembly, which the Royal prerogative could not do of itself. That act, after having been renewed several times, had expired on the 1st of August last. The power of legislation had therefore expired, and the persons in the Legislative Assembly had no longer those legal duties to perform. He wished to know whether this act had been allowed to expire intentionally or not; and, if it had been done intentionally, whether these persons had had notice of it or not. Or, if it had been done unintentionally, he wished to know when any measure would be introduced to indemnify those parties? He also asked whether any provision had been made for the civil government of Western Australia, and, if so, by what authority?

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said he would simply confine himself to answering the legal part of the question. Unquestionably the act of the 10th of George 4, c. 22, expired at the end of last session; but, notwithstanding that expiry, there was now a legal Government existing in Western Australia, because that act gave authority to the Government, by an order in Council, to constitute a Government; and a Government having been legally constituted by that authority, it could continue, and did, in fact, now exist.

Sir W. MOLESWORTH, Mr. ADDERLEY, who wished to know what power the present Government had under that authority, and when that authority would expire,

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL facetiously replied that, according to his recollection, the authority given was for the preservation of peace, order, and good government in the colony, and he believed it had always been held that taxing was part of the duty of a good Government. (Laughter.)

PARLIAMENTARY REFORM.

Mr. HUME moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the national representation, by extending the elective franchise, so that every man of full age, and not subject to any mental or legal disability, who shall have been the resident occupier of a house, or part of a house as a lodger, for twelve months, and shall have been duly rated to the poor of that parish for that time, shall be registered as an elector, and be entitled to vote for a representative in Parliament; also, by enacting that votes shall be taken by ballot; that the duration of Parliaments shall not exceed three years; and that the proportion of representatives be made more consistent with the amount of population and property. He said it was admitted on all sides that some amendment was needed, but the difficulty was to decide to what length the reform should extend. (Hear, hear.) He wanted to improve the constitution of that House, so as to bring it back to its original principles. He wished to make no innovation; but his object was simply to restore the House and the government of the country to what it originally was, both in principle and operation. He was one who thought that every man who paid taxes ought to be represented. Then came the consideration how to obtain those returns from an unwilling power. He conceived he was obliged to lay down some rule, and draw some line of distinction. Our present acts of Parliament drew a line of distinction; they had been pointed to what should be the qualification to entitle a man to franchise. The constitution of Parliament had been, in his experience, what any and every Minister had chosen to call it; but, looking at the principle on which that House was constituted, he asked the House whether the present reformed Parliament was not established and the reform made a principle altogether at variance with the great principle on which his present motion was based, viz. that taxation and representation should be coexistent.

Sir J. WALMSLEY supported the motion.

Sir G. GREY opposed the motion, which he said, if carried, would introduce a change which would amount to a total subversion of the ancient constitution of England. They could then no longer expect to have a Government in the name of Queen, Lords and Commoners; for the democracy would overwhelm them. Such a sweeping measure the honourable gentleman himself could not expect to carry in a brief space of time, and he (Sir G. Grey) therefore, deprecated its introduction, as it could but lead to discussion, which would only have the effect of retarding the progress of many of the valuable measures before the House.

Mr. FEARGUS O'CONNOR supported the measure as an instalment of the reform which he considered requisite: but in doing so he would not give up the Charter.

Mr. P. WOOD was in favour of the motion, because he feared, unless some concession of the kind was made to the people, the principles of the Charter would become prevalent throughout the country.

Lord JOHN RUSSELL opposed the motion. He denied that it was the fundamental principle of the country that every one who paid taxes should have a vote. The principle of the constitution was, that the Sovereign should not have the power of imposing taxes without the consent of Parliament. He opposed the motion, also, because the hon. member's plan was not clear, definite, and tangible, and because of the inconvenience that would result from interposing the consideration of so important and extensive a measure at a time when the attention of the House was devoted to subjects of a wholly different character, such as the commercial policy of the country. He thought they had better let well alone, and not, by disturbing the present satisfactory state of things, put matters in the same deplorable state here that they were in on the Continent.

Mr. B. OSBORNE supported the motion.

The House then divided. The numbers were

For the motion	.. ..	.. 99

The motion was accordingly lost.—Adjourned.

THE DWELLINGS OF LONDON.—A diagram appended to the Registrar-General's report, this week, represents the relative position of the districts of London, and shows, in a condensed form, the results derived from the data in previous tables. The inhabitants of the north side of the Thames are, it will be seen, at an average elevation of 51 feet above the high-water mark, and as regards density in the proportion of 92 to an acre, 8 to a house; the houses averaging in annual value £45. Their water is supplied chiefly from the Thames above Battersea, from the New River, and the Lea. The inhabitants of the south south side of the Thames are, on an average, only 5 feet above Trinity high-water mark, and as regards density in the proportion of 14 to an acre, 7 to a house; the houses averaging £23 in annual value. The money expended on the relief of the poor by the inhabitants of the north side was 12*d.* in the £1; by those of the south side, 18*d.* in the £1 of house rent. The water is chiefly from the Thames below Battersea, and from the Ravensbourne. The general locality did not differ much on the north and south sides of the river: it was 261 annual p in 10,000 inhabitants of the north, 237 in 10,000 inhabitants of the south s de the Thames; the den ity in less [illegible] ... COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF SIR CHARLES NAPIER—FROM A RECENT SKETCH.

outrageous and criminal disorder. This order may be deemed severe—the Commander-in-Chief means it to be so, for he will not pass over without animadversion faults which, if tolerated, would, in the event of war, produce certain defeat to this army. The reviews which the Commander-in-Chief makes of the troops are not to be taken as so many 'chips in porridge.' They are made for the purpose of ascertaining what officers are fit to command battalions; and, there being no want of such in the Indian army, he will feel it to be his bounden duty to remove those who are not; and whenever he finds a regiment 'fire,' 'shout,' or 'charge,' without orders from its commander, he will, after this warning, remove the latter from his command.

"The Sepoy is both a brave and an obedient soldier: and whenever he behaves ill, it is in a great measure the fault of his commanding officer.

"The drill and discipline of all armies rest mainly with the commanders of regiments and of companies. They are in immediate contact with the officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers; and to them general officers must look for that perfect obedience, without which any army is an armed mob, dangerous to its friends, and contemptible to its enemies.

"The Commander-in-Chief does not hereby call on commanding officers to torment those under their orders by long and harassing drilling; but he does call upon them to instruct their officers, and to instruct themselves, and also their supernumerary ranks, that they are to seize any man in their front who dares to shout, or talk, or fire, or run, without orders. General officers commanding divisions and brigades in this army are called upon to see that commanders of regiments do their duty on those points.

"The Commander-in-Chief does not apply this order to all commanders"; he well knows that there are abundant first-rate soldiers and first-rate regiments in the Indian army, but he applies it to those whose regiments are in bad order.

"C. J. NAPIER, General, Commander-in-Chief."

The Mofussilite has the following trenchant remarks on the Meean Meer review:—

"The morning was cruelly cold when the troops were reviewed on the plain of Meean Meer, and we did not see the 'sham fight.' We contented ourselves with fancying it, from the picture in 'Hood's Comic Annual,' where the beholder is treated to large clouds of dust, a horse's tail, a lance, and a feather. But we heard it described by some as 'a precious mess,' by others as 'a regular Chillianwallah,' only with this difference (as we suggested at the time) that 'no guns were taken, none lost, no one killed, no running away, and no charging home.'

We did not see the necessity of making public this 'disappointment' which had caused the Chief so much annoyance, and induced the Adjutant-General to treat 'in most shameful wise—several people's limbs and eyes.' Sir Charles, however, has described the whole scene with his own pen, and admirably has he done it. It is impossible not to see that he laughed heartily, even in his anger, when he penned the fifth paragraph so graphically. No wonder our 'casualties' are great in actions, if the firing is so very promiscuous. The suffering of our troops under a most 'galling fire of the enemy' is a phrase to be met with in almost all Lord Gough's despatches—but query whether in many instances his Lordship was not misled. By the by, had Lord Gough been at the head of the troops at Meean Meer, who is there of the veteran's assailants who would not have exclaimed, 'What else was to be expected?'

When this review of the Review on Meean Meer, however, by Sir Charles Napier himself is read at home and abroad, it will not fail to give rise to many broad inferences, which will reflect favourably on the gallant old man, who doubtless in disgust, is about departing from those shores."

The following is from the Bengal Harkaru:—"The Lahore correspondents of the up-country papers have recorded how severely Sir Charles Napier wigged the commanding officers of the regiments which he reviewed at Meean Meer. It was even alleged that one of the rebuked warriors had fainted under the fiery glance and terrible tones of the great chief: and though, perhaps, this statement is to be regarded as nothing more than a mauvaise plaisanterie, it will serve to illustrate the stern and awful character of the lecture. We cannot without a smile picture to ourselves these idle truants from the school of Martinet—may we call them Betty Martinets,—trotting up to the flag with self-complacent looks, in the full expectation of receiving the customary allowance of butter indiscriminately distributed on such occasions, and then winking and shrinking under the infliction—heightened by all the terrors of look, voice, and gesture, with which the fiery old soldier would accompany his reproof—of such a withering rebuke as that which the speaker has himself recorded, perhaps we might say 'reported,' in the General Order which we published yesterday. It is hardly likely that such a scolding will be soon forgotten by those to whom it was administered; but we would suggest that, to keep it fresh in their minds, his Excellency should present to each of them a medal, bearing his likeness, encircled by the inscription 'Remember Me an Meer.'

"Sir Charles says he 'feels assured that no such scene' as the wild, volunteer charge which he has so vividly sketched, 'could have occurred in any other regiments in the army' than those by which it was exhibited. We suppose he here expresses a hope or a wish, rather than that assurance which his words import. For why should he assume that a number of regiments, garrisoning what was late an enemy's country, should be worse drilled and commanded than others in which a laxity of discipline may have been encouraged, if not produced, by a long abode at quiet stations in the provinces? We fear that his Excellency, unless his terrible denunciation should, as it probably will, rouse commanding officers out of their lethargy, might find all over India reasons for upbraidings as energetic as those extorted from him at Lahore. We hope, however, that the dread of such an infliction, in all cases where a more worthy and honourable feeling is wanting or is too weak to do good, will speedily work a change for the better in every corps where the necessity for it exists.

"The Commander-in-Chief observes, that the faults on which he has animadverted 'would, if tolerated, in the event of war, produce certain defeat to the army.' It is no reply to this to point out, that, with all its want of discipline, the army has ever been victorious. So far as its discipline is imperfect, in so far must its efficiency be impaired; and though the demoralising process has not yet gone so far as to degrade our troops below the level of the semi-barbarous hordes to which they have usually been opposed, it must, 'if tolerated .. soon have that effect. As it is, such laxity of discipline must render victory even over such enemies difficult and uncertain; while, with such a state of things prevailing, a contest with an European foe would be utterly hopeless."

OFFICERS JOINING THE ARMY ON SERVICE.

THE accompanying Sketch represents the new arrangement for dak travelling, which has superseded the palankeen, being neither more nor less than a palankeen on wheels. It has a well, so that the passengers may be able to sit as well as lie down. The bearers find it easier to drag this, than to carry the palankeen. With this contrivance, five miles an hour can be done easily. About 20 men are employed at a time—some carrying the banglies or boxes slung to a bamboo, and the remainder are at the carriage. In this way, travelling day and night, allowing a little rest at the various stage bungalows, one hundred miles in twenty-four hours can be got over. It carries two, and is sufficiently large to enable both to lie down. It is called an Equirotal. A servant is sometimes carried on the box.

TRAVELLING IN INDIA.—OFFICERS JOINING THE INDIAN ARMY ON SERVICE.

THE CARNIVAL AT ROME.—EXPLOSION OF A HAND-GRENADE IN THE CARRIAGE OF THE PRINCE OF MUSIGNANO.

THE CARNIVAL AT ROME.

POLITICAL feeling has this year eclipsed the gaiety of the great festival at Rome. Letters of the 5th ult., quoted by the Statuto of Florence, say that on the first day of the Carnival processions in the Corso, which are held during the last eight days of the season, the Corso was quite deserted, and not a carriage was to be seen; and that on the second day, about twelve or fifteen carriages only made their appearance the general feeling of the inhabitants being against festivity; as there is hardly a family that has not suffered from dismissal, exile, or imprisonment of one of its members.

Our Artist's letter, received with the accompanying Sketch, states:—"The Carnival has been very poor this year; the people would not make merry with their conquerors. It appears that Giuseppe Bonaparte, Prince of Musignano, had received several anonymous letters, threatening his death if he appeared in the Carnival. In defiance of these letters, however, the Prince went to the Carnival every day. On Saturday, the 9th, the anniversary of the Roman Republic, the Corso was crowded with people, dressed in their best, who saluted each other as they passed, saying significantly, 'Non capo danno.' ['Many happy returns of the day.'] As the hour for the Carnival arrived, these good people went away; and the Corso was deserted, except by the French, a few foreigners, and the myrmidons of the Government. Rather late in the evening a hand grenade was thrown into the Prince of Musignano's carriage. In exploding, it severely wounded Giuseppe and his sister, about seventeen years of age, who was in the carriage with him. This diabolical act was committed at the corner of the Café Nerona, close to the Piazza di San Lorenzo in Lucina. The person suspected has been arrested: he is a student of the Hospital of St. James, on the Corso.

"At night, the Corso was suddenly illuminated in various places with white, red, and green fires, in honour of the Republic, and the authorities could not find the perpetrators: the fire was in braziers on the ground up and down the Corso, and in the Piazza Colonna, on the fountain."

Another account states, with respect to the recent exhibition at the Carnival, that General Baraguay d'Hilliers would not permit the French troops to line the Corso, though he had, in all the neighbouring squares, sufficient men at hand to quell any disorder: the consequence was that gangs of ruffians, hired by the republican chiefs, insulted the respectable classes almost with impunity. Stones were placed in the bouquets and packets of bon-bons thrown on these occasions; and some of the rascals had the audacity to slap the faces of the Roman ladies, as the carriages passed. An English gentleman, who was thus insulted, jumped out of the carriage, and punished a la Anglaise, the cowardly bully; in other cases, the mob had everything their own way, till at last an attempt was made to assassinate the son and daughter of the Prince of Canino, by throwing a petard into the carriage. The assassination of half-a-dozen French soldiers followed, until at length the Commander-in-Chief published an order, by which all persons found with knives or concealed arms on them were liable to be shot on the spot. This act stopped the assassin's hand, it is true; but the spirit of disorder remained. The Prince of Canino, it will be recollected, was one of the leaders in the Revolution; it may appear, therefore, surprising to find his son and daughter the objects of popular vengeance; but the mob of Rome have no respect for name or person, and this gentleman has thus been punished because his carriage was one of the first to appear on the Corso, in defiance of the placards which the agents of the Secret Society in Switzerland found means so plentifully to distribute. The petard was contained in a bouquet, and numerous others, of the same fabric, were afterwards discovered; but the only one used is stated to have been that which fell to the lot of the Prince of Musignano, who is still suffering severely from the wounds inflicted by it.

Several persons were arrested on account of the attempt on the Prince of Musignano; among whom are MM. Titoni, Petracchi, and Mdme. Narducci, who, together with many others, were obliged to sign a paper at the police, declaring themselves responsible for any disorders that might take place during the Carnival.

"MR. BUNN ON THE STAGE."

THE ex-manager of the two patent theatres appeared last Tuesday "on the stage," according to announcement, and delivered a "monologue," in two parts, on things theatrical, on the great Shakspeare, and on his no less important self. What Mr. Bunn said on the second topic was not without merit: he cleverly exposed the absurdities of commentators, the misreadings of actors, and the falsehood of imagining any other to be the founder of the British stage than Shakspeare. The argument was relieved by jests old and new, by anecdotes ditto, and by recitations which showed considerable histrionic talent. In summing up the requisite qualities for the stage, Mr. Bunn ascribed the greatest importance to a brilliant and expressive eye. Mr. Bunn delivered his lecture with much ease and tact, though not without signs of weariness towards the conclusion—a result not to be wondered at, considering that he spoke altogether for more than three hours. In treating of the "genius and career of Shakspeare," Mr. Bunn illustrated his humble origin and great personal merits, by reference to the localities associated with his history—pictorial representations of which were given. These consisted of eight views: being the exterior and interior of Shakspeare's birth-place, Anne Hathaway's cottage, the "Blackfriars" and "Globe" theatres, the Poet's last dignified residence, the Church of Stratford-on-Avon, and his monument therein. Among the anecdotes told by Mr. Bunn, was one of a friend, who collected everything relating to Shakspeare that he could, and appropriated a room for the reception of his treasures. Over the bookcase containing the poet's works was this inscription:—"To Authors: Thou shalt not steal. To Critics: Thou shalt not bear false witness. To Actors: Thou shalt do no murder." In treating of the merits of actors, Mr. Bunn judiciously avoided reference to the living: Garrick, Kemble, Siddons, with the elder Kean and the elder Mathews, were the topics of his discourse. He dwelt much on the history of Drury-Lane Theatre for an entire century, namely, from 1747 to 1847—in other words, from the commencement of Garrick's management to the termination of his own. In doing this Mr. Bunn justified his own conduct in management by the example of his predecessors, who, whenever the drama failed temporarily to attract, uniformly resorted to spectacle and ballet. He showed, also, by reference to a bill of fare for a Royal entertainment before Henry VII., at Dunstable, that the ballet was even then better patronised than the legitimate drama. He contended that a manager's duty was limited to catering for the public taste, and that the public were the party to be blamed, not the theatrical conductor. To Sheridan's profligate career Mr. Bunn rightly attributed much of the ruin that fell upon the drama; until at last it passed into the condition of being, in general estimation, without actors, authors, or public. Nevertheless, Mr. Bunn condemned the free-trade in the drama lately granted by the Legislature, and altogether ignored the revival which has so signally taken place at the minor theatres. This was unjust and prejudiced on Mr. Bunn's part. Blinding himself to these facts, though now so patent, he turned accordingly from the public, and looked for the revival of the drama to Court patronage. For the inclination displayed on the part of her Majesty to encourage the reviving drama of this country, we are grateful; but, unlike Mr. Bunn, we look for its final establishment in the improved taste of the people. It is to education that we must trust for a popular estimate of our greatest poets.

Mr. Bunn's lecture was well attended and merits patronage both for the amusement and instruction it affords, though his opinions are to be taken with many grains of personal allowance.

EXCESSIVE AND FATAL COLD AT CONSTANTINOPLE.—Accounts dated Feb. 6 state that 198 persons have been frozen to death within the last few days, the greater number in their own houses, in Constantinople and its environs; at Gallipoli 23 persons, and at Smyrna 17 shared the same fate. Fifteen persons were found frozen to death on board a Turkish vessel, and eight fishermen were also found dead from the same cause in their boat on the Bosphorus. The temperature was 13 degrees (Reaumur), but these fatal occurrences are explained by the very slight construction of the houses, the want of warm covering, as well as bad food. In the interior provinces the misery has been very great. The cattle have been left uncared for, and the sufferings both of men and beasts have been very great.

REPRESENTATION OF CANTERBURY.—Colonel Romilly, brother of the Solicitor-General, in consequence of an invitation from the Liberal electors of Canterbury, has gone down to stand as a candidate for the representation of that city, in the room of Lord Albert Denison Conyngham, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. It is said Lord Conyngham will be raised to the peerage by the title of Lord Londesborough, the name of an estate which he has recently purchased.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

Their Lordships sat for a short time, but no business of importance was disposed of, the proceedings being confined to the presentation of a few petitions by the Marquis of DOWNSHIRE, from the counties of Down and Londonderry, praying for the passing of a law to ensure tenant-right to farmers and occupiers of land. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

THE CHARTIST LAND SCHEME.

Sir B. HALL presented two petitions from certain allottees of the National Land Company, complaining of the conduct of Mr. Feargus O'Connor in reference to that company.

Mr. F. O'CONNOR vindicated his conduct, and said the company was indebted to him to the extent of £8000, besides having occasioned him very heavy expenses, for which he never intended to prefer a claim against it. He was most anxious to wash the hands of the company, and would introduce a bill for the purpose of winding up its affairs, and vesting the property in the hands of trustees, for the purposes of distribution amongst the shareholders. The parties who complained against him had scarcely ever paid one farthing of rent. He had already proposed to make Lord Ashley and Mr. Sharman Crawford trustees; but the noble Lord had declined having anything to do with the matter.

PARLIAMLNTARY VOTERS (IRELAND).

The House then went into committee on this bill, and the discussion of the clauses occupied the rest of the evening.

Adjourned at a quarter past twelve o'clock.

INDISPOSITION OF MR. DISRAELI.—Mr. Disraeli is so indisposed as to be confined to his house, and unable to engage in public business of any kind.

The Marquis of Granby, M.P., is recovering from his recent indisposition, and will soon be able to resume his duties in the House of Commons.

REPRESENTATION OF TEWKESBURY.—Mr. Humphrey Brown, the member for Tewkesbury, has for some time past been suffering under very severe and debilitating illness; and, although he is now somewhat better than in the earlier stages of his illness, he is not likely to be sufficiently restored to take his seat in Parliament for some time.

The East Indian Railway Company paid about £80,000 into the treasury of the India House on Thursday, the produce of their last call, upon which interest at five per cent. will now run, as in the case of the former payments.

At a Court of Common Council held on Thursday, it was resolved, by a large majority, to subscribe the sum of £500 in favour of the proposed Exhibition of Industry of 1851.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

The accounts received yesterday (Friday) from Paris, say that M. Dupin, who has been lately indisposed from bronchitis, is recovering, and will shortly resume his duties as President of the Assembly.

The editor of the Democratie Pacifique has been sentenced to one year's imprisonment, and 5000fr. fine, for a libel on that journal on the President of the Republic. The editor of the Républicain de la Moselle has been also convicted of a similar offence, and sentenced to two months' imprisonment and a fine of 2000fr.

SWITZERLAND.

From this quarter we learn that Gen. Dufour had made formal application to the French Cabinet for its assistance against the demands of Prussia, with respect to the recovery of her ascendancy in the canton of Neufchatel; her troops were drawing closer to the frontier, and would no doubt enter Switzerland, if not prevented by a formidable demonstration.

GREECE.

Accounts from Athens of the 8th ult., and Syra of the 11th ult., mention that the blockade still continued, but not quite so rigidly as before, inasmuch as vessels with cargoes belonging to third parties were permitted to pass to and fro without interruption.

CALIFORNIA.

Further accounts of the same date as were published last week, state that a large bed of anthracite coal had been discovered between the Sacramento River and Spitting Creek.

Large bands of squatters were taking possession of the land in the Mission of Dolores, which had been held by the Mexicans under previous grants, and much excitement consequent had added considerably to the numbers.

The rebuilding of the burned district in San Francisco had commenced, and was progressing with unexampled rapidity.

General Riley had issued a proclamation in which he recognised the new constitution and government of California; but a portion of his views had been objected to, particularly that which whilst it advised the exclusion of black labour, would admit convicts from New South Wales.

By this arrival we are informed that disturbances had broken out at the mines between the Chilenos and Americans, and it was feared the disagreement would be of a serious nature.

Advices from Panama state that Panama had been made a free port. The steamer Oregon had reached that place on the 21st ult., with nearly 3,000,000 dollars' worth of gold dust.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The gathering at Liverpool, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday last, was truly a "field day," entering as Mr. Osbaldeston, who performs the triple duties of clerk of the course, handicapper, and lessee, must have reaped a rich reward for his meritorious and well-directed efforts to promote sport, and at the same time tickle the vanities of his patrons. An immense field started for the Steeple chase, on the result of which many hundreds had to change hands on settling day, the professionals having all the best of it. The winner was not mentioned. The coursing, as it always is in this quarter, was a red-letter day, the dogs of the highest class, and the hares abundant and stout.

The ensuing week, if it does not approach the cut out one in importance, will be a busy one, the steeple-chase fixtures embracing Bridgnorth, on Tuesday; the North of England, Ashbourne (Derbyshire), and Morcott-in-the-Marsh, on Thursday; and Wetherby (Yorkshire), on Friday. The "long-tail" appointments stand thus:—Croome (Worcestershire), on Monday; Raynham and Cockerham, on Tuesday; Lambourn, on Wednesday; and Ridgway (Lytham), on Thursday.

MONDAY. The transactions this afternoon were in the aggregate anything but heavy, but they had the effect of restoring Bolingbroke to his old place in the betting; he was backed for a good deal of money, and left off with an upward look.

SINGULAR DISSOLUTION OF A BAPTIST MEETING.—A serious catastrophe occurred on Tuesday night week, at Stephen's Ford, near Haverfordwest. Mr. Jones, Baptist minister, held a meeting in a room over a cow-house, which was crowded to excess. Just after he had given out the last hymn, and the choir were proceeding with its performance, the beams gave way, and the greater part of the congregation were precipitated headlong into the lower stall, amidst a mass of cows. The minister alighted on a cow's back, having, in his turn, been precipitated upon his members. Several received severe injuries, and the confusion may be better imagined than described.

The Belgian government is now occupied in the formation of a commission of delegates from the principal Belgian manufacturers, which is to act in concert with the central committee formed in London for the purpose of organising and directing the grand exhibition of the manufactures of all nations, which is to be opened in London in May, 1851.

At the Session of the Council of University College, on Saturday last Dr. James Henderson, late Medical Superintendent of the Edinburgh General Dispensary, was appointed Assistant-Physician to University College Hospital.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—On Thursday, the annual meeting of the charity took place at the Hospital, Portugal-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, Mr. C. [illegible]. The report stated that the number of outpatients that had been admitted during the past year amounted to 21,048, being an increase over last year of 1665. There had been 1,700 in-patients admitted, and 434 married women had been attended at their own houses; 123 cases of cholera had been admitted, out of which number 83 had been restored to health. The amount of subscriptions and donations had exceeded the preceding year by £107. From certain genuine donations they had received, amounting to £22,000, they fully expected to be enabled shortly to carry out the building of a new and more extensive hospital. The expenditure for the year had amounted to £4660 18s., and the receipts to £4619 9s. The report was adopted, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the meeting.

GERMAN CITY MISSIONS.—On Thursday, a meeting of this society took place at the Hall of Commerce, Threadneedle-street, City, the Rev. Doctor Tarks in the chair. The report stated that the Missionary had visited one hundred and eighty families during the last three months, and had provided them with bibles and tracts, besides a large number of other religious books. They had also established a Sunday-school where eighty children were instructed, and the teachers of whom were volunteers. Their accounts showed that their receipts had been for the last year £154, and their expenses £116, leaving a balance of £38. The report was adopted; and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the day.

ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY.—The seventy-sixth anniversary of this excellent institution was celebrated at the Freemasons' Tavern, on Thursday, the Right Hon. Fox Maule, M.P., presiding, supported by Sir Wm. Gomm, G.C.B.; Sir Edward Belcher, R.N.; Captain Wingrove, R.N.; Mr. Henry Kemble, Mr. Benjamin Hawes, Mr. William Hawes, and several other gentlemen long connected with the institution. The Chairman, in proposing the toast of the evening, "Success to the Royal Humane Society," stated, from the report of the society, that during the past year there had been 331,000 bathers in, he could say, the stream, but that pool of destruction, the Serpentine, on the bank that number there had been 26 casualties, but, owing to the zeal and exertions of the society's men, only one had proved fatal. During the past winter no less than 659,000 persons had gone upon the ice on the various sheets of water in and around London, amongst whom there had been 79 casualties, only one of which, in consequence of the zeal and activity of their officers, of which he had before spoken, had resulted in death. (Cheers.) The hon. gentleman concluded by making an eloquent appeal in behalf of the institution, and feelingly alluded to the loss which it had sustained by the lamented death of her late Majesty, the Queen Dowager, and one of the vice-presidents, the Earl of Fowis. The toast having been duly honoured, the parties who had been saved from death during the past year walked in procession round the room, the procession gaining additional interest from the fact of its being closed by Mr. Soyer, who, in the course of the evening, expressed his gratitude for being saved from drowning, in St. James's Park, during the late frost, when he fell through the ice. The Chairman then delivered medals to several persons who had saved the lives of parties during the year. A collection was made in behalf of the institution, which amounted to nearly £800.

WIDOWS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society took place on Wednesday evening, at the London Coffee-house, Ludgate-hill, Mr. Alderman Sidney, M.P., in the chair. The report stated that this society had been favoured with an increase of prosperity during the past year, so that a greater number of cases had been relieved and larger sums awarded to deserving cases. This is in some measure attributable to the generous bounty of their late treasurer, who gave a donation of £50; also to the kind assistance of Mr. John Lawrence and their present chairman, Mr. Alderman Sidney. The number relieved during the last year had amounted to 139. Out of the number relieved 42 were made widows by the cholera. The receipts during the past year had nearly doubled that of the preceding one, and there was a balance left of £14 7s. 8d. The report was adopted, and a committee elected for managing the affairs of the society for the ensuing year. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the evening.

MERCHANT SEAMEN'S ORPHAN ASYLUM.—On Monday, the twenty-second annual meeting of the friends and supporters of this asylum took place at the London Tavern. The chair was filled by the treasurer, Captain H. Nelson, of the Trinity House; and the election of four girls and six boys from a list of twenty-eight candidates, Mr. G. S. Clarke, the honorary secretary, read the report, which was unanimously adopted. It showed that the whole of the children in the asylum had providentially escaped the recent epidemic. The number of subscribers for the past year had materially increased, and the institution was generally progressing favourably. The number of orphans admitted had been about 110. The great mortality from cholera which had occurred amongst seamen had added considerably to the number under the asylum protection; and, in consequence, a special election would (if practicable) take place shortly, to meet the emergency. A legacy of £500, bequeathed by the late Robert Newman Hunt, Esq., had been received, as also a donation of £100 from

The Corporation of London, £100; the Trinity House, £50; and the East India Company, £50. At the late annual dinner, at which the Lord Mayor (Sir James Duke) presided, £687 18s. was collected. The charges amounted to £147 9s. 5d. had been received. The building fund had been considerably augmented, but was still inadequate for the purpose. Including a previous balance of £28 3s. 9d., the receipts of the past year had been £1 7s. 7d., and, after defraying the necessary expenses, and paying £595 17s. 4d. in the purchase of stock, there remained a balance of £174 13s., making a total funded stock of £655 1s. 4d.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF YOUNG FEMALES.—At a recent meeting of the society, held at 28, New Broad-street, after the ordinary business had been transacted, the secretary reported that a donation of £45 had been received from the Right Hon. the Earl of Mountcashell, and that the following gentlemen had been elected (&c.) of the Chelmondeley Charities. It was also unanimously resolved, "That the respectful thanks of this meeting be given to the Right Hon. the Earl of Mountcashell, and Messrs. Hodgson and Simpson, for their able advocacy in the House of Peers and of the country the atrocities committed by the officers [illegible] of the female emigrants on board the emigrant ship Indiana, on her passage to Port Adelaide, South Australia." After some routine business, the meeting broke up.

RAILWAY AUDIT ASSOCIATION.—On Tuesday a meeting of railway shareholders took place at the London Tavern, for the purpose of establishing an association to secure an efficient audit of railway accounts. The chair was taken by Major-General Briggs, who having gone into the various reasons which justified an application to Parliament for a general system of audit, submitted the first resolution: "That the present system of audit of railway accounts is neither efficient nor satisfactory." The motion was passed unanimously. Mr. Nash moved the second resolution:—"That it is on the highest degree desirable that this all-important object should be attained by the shareholders themselves." Mr. Bale then moved, "That it is the opinion of this meeting that no sectional measure on the subject of audit emanating from any individual body of the railway companies at present incorporated, as preserving the sanction of Parliament to the ground that any system of audit, to be efficient and independent, must be one of general application to all railway companies in the United Kingdom." This was seconded by Mr. Hutton, and passed unanimously. A resolution was also passed, "That a committee be formed to carry out the objects of this association;" and that they do prepare a bill for presentation in this session of Parliament, and that the same, with the proposed plan of audit, be submitted to the shareholders for their consideration and approval at a future meeting." The Chairman submitted a resolution, that shareholders agree to subscribe towards the expenses of the committee to be constituted. Mr. Sholes thought the expense would be a mere trifle, and yet give them a vast machinery: a shilling per share would probably realise £50,000. The resolution was passed, and the following gentlemen were appointed the committee, with power to complete the number of seven:—Lovejoy, Mr. Wooler, Mr. Castle, Mr. Preston, and Mr. Sholes.

A vote of thanks to the gallant chairman terminated the proceedings. The plan of the association is thus stated: "A railway council board to be formed by a committee of shareholders, from delegates of the several railways, chosen by ballot, no proxies being allowed, a certain number of the general committee forming a working board, one or more to retire every three months, and to be substituted by other members from the general board. The working board to be assisted by the several officers, viz. secretary, accountants, and clerks, &c. It is essential, however, that no director, chairman of board of directors, secretary, solicitor, or engineer of any railway be eligible for election or vote for the council or for the shareholders. From a board so constituted there must ensue a sound and efficient audit of accounts of every railway, securing all the efficiency of a Government audit, without its interference, and with a less expensive distinction—of emanating from the shareholders themselves, and themselves alone."

FEMALE EMIGRATION SOCIETY.—This society sent out their first party on Monday, by the ship Culloden, for Port Philip. The individuals selected for this first experiment were thirty-eight in number, and are described as young women of excellent character. The ship selected for them carries out a number of other emigrants, and it is said to be the determination of the society thus to draft off their protégés in the ordinary vessels sailing for Australia, rather than to charter ships specially to carry those only who receive the assistance of the society. There were collected several principal members of the committee on the occasion. The Right Hon. Mr. Sidney Herbert, the Hon. Mr. Arthur Kinnaird, the Hon. Mr. Littleton, and Sir H. Verney, were of the party.

WESTMINSTER IMPROVEMENTS.—The commissioners for the Westminster improvements have given notice of an intended application to Parliament to enlarge the powers of their act, and for extension of time in the compulsory purchase of land for the formation of the new Victoria-street, extending from Pimlico to the Broad Sanctuary, Westminster Abbey. The parishes of St. James, St. Margaret, Westminster, and [illegible] interests are much compromised by the length of time taken to complete the works, are strongly opposed to any further [illegible] about to petition Parliament to that effect.

[illegible]ENT OF TOTHILL-FIELDS PRISON.—An extensive piece of ground, generally known as Elliott's Lawn, hitherto a parade-ground, has been [illegible]ased, and the timber is being felled for the purpose of enlarging the [illegible]on at Westminster, in order to carry out the [illegible]tem of classification of prisoners.

SUPPRESSION OF GAMBLING.—The gambling-houses in the island of Jersey-street, Regent-street, and Leicester square have placed under close surveillance, by order of the commissioners of police, two constables are stationed at the entrance to each house, to note down and describe the persons entering therein. They will be relieved at stated intervals, the surveillance to continue, without intermission, night and day. It is anticipated that this step will have the effect of considerably diminishing the numbers of the frequenters of these social pesthouses.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Births registered in the week ending Saturday, Feb. 23:—Males, 781; females, 765: total, 1546. Deaths during the same period:—Males, 467; females, 444: total, 911. The mortality of the metropolitan districts, which in the last week of January amounted to 1094 deaths, has during the three subsequent weeks steadily declined. The number registered in it only ranged from 31 deg. 7 min. in 1845, to 45 deg. 4 min. in 1849. In the last four weeks the deaths from consumption have been successively 137, 135, 113, and 94; from bronchitis, 126, 84, 88, and 79; from asthma, 33, 19, 22, and 31; from pneumonia, or inflammation of the lungs, 75, 69, 76, and 61. Last week the deaths from the same diseases now mentioned were only 245, whilst the corrected average of the same week is 331. But though the mortality from particular causes has so much declined, the deaths in the epidemic class show a small increase on those of the previous week. There were 9 last week from small-pox, 11 from scarlatina, 21 from diarrhœa, 24 from measles, 32 from typhus, and 36 from hooping cough; but these are all less than the corrected usual, except measles and diarrhœa, of which the latter shows double the average (as derived from the corresponding weeks of 1840-49), though not more than in the same week of the last three years. On the 16th and 19th of February respectively, two infant children of a labourer died of "cyanche parotidæa," at 27, Dove-row, Haggerstone East, one after 10 days', another after a fortnight's illness. One person died of intemperance.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean daily reading of the barometer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was above 30 in. except on Tuesday and Wednesday. The mean of the week was 30 070 in. The mean daily temperature was above 48 deg. on Monday and Friday; and the lowest, which occurred on Saturday, was not less than 45 deg. 3 min.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

CAMBRIDGE.

MR. STUART WORTLEY'S MARRIAGE BILL.—At a special congregation, holden on Monday, the following grace was proposed for adoption by the Senate, to petition the Houses of Parliament against a bill now before the House of Commons, entitled 'A Bill to amend and alter the Act of the 5th and 6th years of King William IV., so far as relates to Marriages within certain of the Prohibited Degrees of Affinity.'" The grace was non-placeted in the White Hood House, but, contrary, there being thirty placets to seven non-placets; it passed the Black Hood House without opposition. The following is a draft of the petition:—"That your petitioners have learned with much concern that it is proposed to alter 'The Act of the 5th and 6th years of King William IV.' so far as relates to Marriages within certain of the Prohibited Degrees of Affinity. That it is the serious conviction of your petitioners that, if such alteration becomes law, whilst the sanction of the Legislature will thus be given to marriages which have been uniformly prohibited by the laws of the English Church and nation, the results will be highly injurious to society at large, and to the purity and happiness of some of the most intimate relationships of domestic life. Your petitioners, therefore, humbly pray that no such alteration may receive the sanction of your honourable House."

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.

On Tuesday evening a general meeting of the graduates of the University of London took place at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, for the purpose of considering the propriety of adopting measures for securing to themselves a charter of incorporation, and to receive a report upon that subject from a committee appointed at a previous meeting. Dr. Francis Sibson, F.R.S., took the chair. The Secretary read a report detailing the steps which had been taken by the committee in its endeavours to secure to the graduates the privilege they claimed, and stating that after two years' agitation they could not hope for any active promotion of their views on the part of the senate. A resolution was then proposed that the graduates approve of the course pursued by the committee in endeavouring to carry out the following principles agreed upon at the last general meeting:—

That the graduates shall in future form a part of the body corporate of the university; that the government of the university shall consist of a convocation, a senate, and a council, the last to be composed of all graduates of a certain standing; that eventually the senate shall be elected by convocation, present members, and admit such some constituencies as the university shall require the assent of convocation; that while the general executive management of the university shall be confided to the senate, it shall be subject, in certain cases, to the veto of convocation.

This resolution having been passed, it was proposed that the meeting should recommend that a declaration be signed by the graduates, to the following effect:—

That the graduates are the persons chiefly interested in the welfare and honourable reputation of the university, yet have no corporate existence, and are not admitted to any voice [illegible] Lord Although one great principle recognised by the Government of Sir Robert Peel, Spring Rice, when chancellor of the Exchequer, was to afford to the new university an equality in all respects with the ancient universities, freed from certain anomalous and invidious distinctions. That while they acknowledge with gratitude the services rendered to the university by its founder and present benefactor, and admit that some constitution like the present was necessary at its outset, they are convinced that such a constitution was not intended to be permanent, and that now when the number of the graduates would afford the means of [illegible] lists the university upon a wider and more permanent basis. That, as the number of graduates in arts and science, and of honorary degrees conferred, already including 112 [illegible] have passed the first examination for the degree of Bachelor of Medicine, is increasing and consider that the time has now come when they may justly claim to be no longer excluded from the only corporate of the university.

The motion having been adopted, the following resolutions were also passed:—

That the graduates, while they regret the indisposition of the [illegible] to assist them, pledge themselves to continue their exertions to obtain their proper position in the university, and authorise the committee to take such steps as they shall judge best calculated to accomplish this object, and preserve or to protect the interest of the graduates.

That the committee act be instructed to press the claims of the medical graduates upon the Legislature, in the event of any changes being contemplated in the existing constitution of the medical profession.

The accounts for the past year stated that the receipts amounted to £61 7s. 11d., and the disbursements to £10 16s. 1d., leaving a balance of £50 12s. 10d. in the hands of the treasurer. Several gentlemen, being members either of the legal or medical professions, addressed the meeting upon the subject of the various resolutions. The proceedings closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

On Wednesday afternoon the annual meeting of the proprietors, donors, and fellows of this institution was held in the Council-room of the college. Mr. Warburton presided, and was supported by the Baron de Goldsmid, Mr. Taylor, F.R.S., Mr. Gibson, Dr. Hutton, Mr. Bagehot, Dr. Mackenzie, and other gentlemen. The report, which, on the motion of the [illegible], stated that the number of students in the faculty of medicine was 284; faculty of arts 231, and in the junior school 265, making a total of 850. Compared with the previous year the number in the faculty of medicine was less by 31, in the faculty of arts more by 25, and in the junior school less by 25. The amount of fees was from the medical school £4964; from the faculty of arts £1402; and from the junior school, £1429, making a total of £7795. The sum of £1343 18s. had been received from the students in hospital practice, and contributed towards the support of the charity. The expenses of the college amounted to £7,143 8s. 4d., of which £7076 was for building, and £3401 6s. 6d. for ordinary expenses. As in previous years the former pupils of the school had acquitted themselves creditably at the University and college examinations. The number of University College students who took degrees at the London University were as follow:—LL.D. 1, three having taken from any other college; M.D. 7, out of a total of 7 from three colleges; B.L. 2, from none; B.A. 27, out of a total of 53 from 13 colleges; making a total of 45 from 84 pupils and 18 colleges. The prizes conferred by the Senate were for the degree of LL.D. the gold medal of £20 to Mr. B. Lewis, for classics, and a like medal to Mr. Hutton, for logic and general acquirements. The University College Law Scholarship to Mr. H. Matthews, for the degree of B.M., and a gold medal and the first place in honours to Mr. Statham. For the B.A. degree, the University Scholarship in mathematics to Mr. Roush, and the scholarship in classics to Mr. A. Mills. The report further stated, that, by the supplemental charter granted to them last year, the powers of the University in granting degrees had been considerably extended. On the motion that the report be received, a long and rather warm discussion ensued as to the necessity for the suppressory clause, which, it was contended, would have the effect of lowering the degrees granted by the University. It was at length decided that a general meeting of the proprietors should be held for the purpose of considering the question, and the report having been received, the proceedings terminated with the usual vote of thanks to the chairman.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. James Amiraux Jeremie, B.D. (B.A., 1824), one of the Senior Fellows and Preachers of Trinity College, Professor of Classics, and Dean of the East India College, Haileybury, and Sub-Dean and Canon of Lincoln, was on Saturday, Feb. 16, elected to the Anglus Professorship of Divinity in the Univer[illegible] annexed the Rectory of S[illegible]

THE LATE FIRE AT ASHWELL.—We have received a letter from the Pastor of the Congregational Church at Ashwell, explaining that the statement (from a provincial paper), of his being invited to make a temporary home of the residence of the Church of England Incumbent, is without foundation.

KANGAROO HUNTING IN AUSTRALIA.

FULL CRY.

THESE Sketches of what may now be considered the favourite colonial sport of Australia, have been derived from the Sketch-book of a Settler, who was so struck with the novelty of the chase, that he has attempted to portray a few of its oddities. Every one familiar with the writings of Sydney Smith will recollect his ludicrous portrait of the Kangaroo: "a monstrous animal, as tall as a grenadier, with the head of a rabbit, a tail as big as a bedpost, hopping along at the rate of five hops to a mile, with three or four young Kangaroos looking out of its false uterus, to see what is passing."

That extraordinary animal, the Kangaroo, discovered by Captain Cook, is now so well known, that a description of it, in addition to our Illustrations, would be superfluous. Our countrymen pursued it in New Holland with greyhounds, and the leaps which it took surprised those who beheld it clear obstacles seven or eight feet high. In size it equals a sheep, some of the largest weighing 140lb; and the flesh is represented by those who have tasted it as being a little like venison. The tail is said to make rich and savoury soup. The species breed pretty freely in England, and has been kept with success in our parks.

Of Kangaroos there exist a great variety of different species: among the larger ones is the common Kangaroo, called the "Forester" and "the Old Man" in New South Wales; and the red and woolly Kangaroos. They associate together in herds of greater or less extent upon the open downs and forests devoid of underwood, feed exclusively upon grass and vegetables; and, though never fat, are held in high estimation by colonial epicures.

The native name for the Kangaroo is "boomer;" hence the boomerang, the strange-looking, angular implement with which the Australians kill the animal; and the throwing of which has puzzled our mechanicians, and amused our boyhood.

The natives are very cunning in taking the kangaroo. They go forth to the chase armed only with a slender spear and a short stick; depending more on their own subtelty and acuteness, when in pursuit of wild animals than on the efficiency of their weapons. The scrub natives go out in large parties, and surrounding their game, drive them towards large nets, in which they become entangled. Mr. Angas, in his "Savage Life and Scenes in Australia and New Zealand," tells us that he has seen single nets of this kind forty feet in length, and curiously manufactured out of the fibres of bulrush root.

Mr. Angas relates the following interesting picture of the chase:

"In the hollow valleys bordering upon the scrub we frequently put up kangaroos. These timid creatures, which we disturbed while they were feeding, immediately took to the desert; and many a famous chase we had after them, over gum bushes and the rough surface of the loose limestone rocks. It is an extraordinary sight to see so large an animal clearing the bushes, and springing high into the air with such astonishing agility. To-day we put up a 'boomer' and a couple of does: we took after the former, the dogs following close upon his track. Down-hill our horses were the losers, the kangaroo gaining on us rapidly by his enormous flying leaps; but at two miles the dogs closed with him, and we came up as he stood at bay. He was a noble creature, and fought desperately with his fore-paws; a single kick with his hind-feet would have laid any one of the dogs dead. It was a cruel sight to see the poor beast struggling hard for life beneath the bright sky, in his own free deserts; his large and eloquent eyes filled with tears, and his head and shoulders covered with blood."

The same tourist next gives us the following animated description of a sporting excursion:

"About thirty miles to the north-west of Boston Bay is a range of mountains called the Marble Range, near which is a beautiful lake of fresh water, known as Waungarrie Lake. I started with two companions, on horseback, to visit this interesting tract of country, which was only known to a few of the settlers, and promised to afford good subjects for my pencil. At three miles from the settlement we reached 'the Swamp,' so called from a reedy lake adjoining the farm. Several other stations were passed, belonging to flock-owners and agricultural settlers and we then struck into a grassy country studded with casuarina and Banksia trees. Farther on, the aspect of the scene was very similar to that of the districts round Mount Benson and Lake Hawden, towards Rivoli Bay. Here also I observed the biscuit tufa, much of which was extremely small, being no larger than a water, and lying very thickly scattered over the ground. We met Smith and Hawson returning from hunting in the scrub, each with a large kangaroo slung across his saddle, and their stock-whips curled round their shoulders. They presented admirable examples of full bush costume, in their blue woollen shirts, with appendages of pannikins, leather-ropes, and rifles. We prevailed upon them to accompany us; and the kangaroo and an emu that we had killed were planted (to use a colonial term) in the boughs of a she-oak tree, to remain in safety until our return. Upon the open scrubby plains and the low grassy hills, we observed numerous kangaroos. They frequently appeared in flocks of eight or ten at a time, and gave constant sport to the dogs.

"The rain poured down heavily until near sunset, when it cleared off, and we were amply rewarded for our ride by the enchanting prospect before us. The mountains of the Marble Range, rising abruptly, and presenting their steep sides of quartz to the evening sun, sparkled in its rays as though inlaid with diamonds; and a richly verdant country stretched out all around, scattered with park-like trees, in the centre of which, surrounded by green banks of velvet turf, lay Waungarrie Lake. The calm surface of the water mirrored the sunset clouds, and was besprinkled with multitudes of black swans; while some kangaroo were quietly feeding near the water, undisturbed by dogs or savages for no traces of natives were discernible.

"My companions had already built a tolerably snug shelter of boughs for the night, and we sat down in front of it, with our pannikins of tea, around a blazing fire, busied in roasting kangaroo steaks upon the ashes. The heat of the fire brought out an unwelcome intruder in the form of a large scorpion, which I discovered on my bare foot just in time to prevent my being bitten. The night was mild, with thunder and lightning, and large moths flew into the fire by myriads, seeming as if wilfully destroying themselves in the red-hot embers: they would have furnished a dainty meal for the natives. This country, which is entirely uninhabited, would afford an excellent district for sheep or cattle, and I know of no situation more eligible for a settler's homestead, in the neighbourhood of Port Lincoln, than the banks of Waungarrie Lake.

"The next night we returned to the 'Swamp,' and there partook of the good cheer that awaited us; dining sumptuously upon roast geese, and other equally savoury productions of the farm. We had brought with us kangaroo, emu, and some ducks from the lake, as the result of our sport in the wild."

Our Illustrations show the full chase, with its adventurous character across a half-cleared country; in which the flying leaps of the kangaroo are by no means exaggerated. In the second Engraving, a party of men and dogs have come up with the kangaroo—or, as it is called, are "sticking up a boomer;" and in the third Illustration, the kangaroo is seized on by the dogs, whilst the horseman assists to "stick" him.

NAPLES: VESUVIUS IN THE DISTANCE.—FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.

ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

NAPLES, February 14.

THE present eruption of Vesuvius, which commenced on the 5th of the current month, and still continues, is one of the most devastating which has occurred in modern times. The stream, or rather streams, of lava, are crawling over the eastern flank of the mountain, possessed chiefly by the Prince Ottajano. The destructive flood is at least four miles wide, and the accompanying smaller streams which straggle from the great vein are larger than those produced by an ordinary eruption. The accompanying Sketch represents the verge of the grand stream of lava, destroying the gateway of a villa, and burning the trees, as it advanced in slow and terrific grandeur, entombing all it met. The scene which presented itself on the arrival of our little party about midnight, at the site whence the drawing was made, cannot be imagined by those who have never witnessed volcanic eruptions. The enormous streams of lava threw a red light over an endless extent of cloud, which rolled and writhed about like giants in agony. A continued growl, accompanied by occasional explosions that shook the earth, added to the terror of the scene. As the wind played with the flames of the molten lava, you occasionally caught a glimpse of the crater through the black curtains of smoke. A deep crimson flame, dotted with huge red-hot masses, was seen for an instant; and then the dusky cheek of a rosetinte i cloud shut out the grandeur of the scene, and directed the eye again to the burning river at our feet, the molten mass of which moved on with a metallic click. A shower of sand fell about us, and the effect on the eye was such that some of the party were obliged to retire. You could, however, approach the very verge of the stream of lava; and it was singular to watch its progress as it passed slowly over the trees, which lighted up as by magic, and produced silver flames amongst the red and black masses around. The lava soon crumbled before the advancing tide, and in a few minutes were entirely lost sight of.

The lava has already passed over many miles of highly cultivated land, a large portion of which was possessed by the Jesuits. The advancing stream, however, has given plenty of time for the peasants, whose houses were marked to clear off all moveable articles; and even the doors and windows have been taken away before the buildings were attacked. Several of the many thousands who visit the mountain day and night have, by venturing too near the crater, received serious injury from the falling stones. The chief loss it created is by lava covering so many miles of valuable land.

The sunset effect on the grand column of smoke, as seen from any point of the bay, is magnificent. The round masses of cloud expand from the mouth of the crater until reaching a height about that of the mountain from the sea, and then cover the sky with variegated forms, blazing with hot golden tints, which entirely obscure the belt of mountains surrounding the bay of Naples.

[We annex a View (from an original Sketch) of the magnificent Bay: the city of Naples lies on its northern coast, and partly on the foot and partly on the slope of a range of hills which runs obliquely to the shore. On the south-east is Vesuvius, from which it is divided by a fertile plain watered by the river Sebéto; and opposite to it, across the Bay, are the mountains of Castellamare, Vico, and Sorrento, with the island of Capri due south, at the entrance of the Bay, on the side of Sicily.]

MUSIC.

CONCERTS.

The Society of British Musicians gave their fifth concert, on Saturday evening, at St. Martin's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Nicholson, Mr. O. May being the accompanyist. The lecture-room was crowded. The scheme opened with Mr. Henry Leslie's well-written Quintet in D, for two violins (H. Blagrove and Watson), tenor (R. Blagrove), violoncello (Lucas), and contra-basso (Pratten); the quintuor was very well played. Mozart's Sonata in D minor, Op. 49, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, was finely given by Messrs. W. S. Bennett, Cooper, and Lucas. Mayseder's Quartet in G, Op. 23, for two violins, tenor, and violoncello, was done ample justice to by Messrs. Cooper, Watson, R. Blagrove, and W. L. Phillipps. Mr. W. S. Bennett's exquisite execution of some of his pianoforte pieces, in one of which he was encored, was a great treat. Spohr's Double Quartet in E, Op. 87, for four violins, two tenors, and two violoncellos, terminated the programme. The vocal selection began with Mr. G. A. Macfarren's duo, "The Thorn," of no great pretensions, but charmingly sung by the Misses A. and M. Williams. Mr. F. Bodda sang artistically Bishop Richards's well-known song, "Bonnie Dundee," and "Scottish sorrow," composed for and sung by Standigl. Miss A. Williams, in Bodda's song, "The Warrior," was admirably accompanied by Mr. T. Harper on the trumpet. After Mr. A. Mellon's song, "I dreamt I dwelt in marble halls," sung by Mr. Williams, came Mendelssohn's vocal quartet, "The Vale of Rest," sung by the Misses A. and M. Williams, Messrs. T. Williams and Bodda, which was encored. This was the best concert of the series. The concluding one will take place this evening (Saturday.)

The AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY gave their first concert for the season on Monday evening; Mr. L. Negri, conductor. The programme consisted of Haydn's B flat symphony, and Beethoven's in A, No. 7; Mendelssohn's MS. festival overture, composed for the opening of the Liverpool Philharmonic Hall); Mehul's overture, "Les Deux Aveugles;" Weber's "Oberon;" Meyerbeer's march, from the "Camp of Silesia;" and a selection from Donizetti's "Lucia:" Oswald's glee, "Lovely Night;" and Weber's "Untrown's wild Hunt," were also sung. The playing of the amateurs marked their increased confidence and improvement.

The CHORAL HARMONISTS gave their third concert on Monday, at the London Tavern. One of Hummel's Masses; Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion;" and Romberg's admirable cantata, the "Song of the Bell," were included in the scheme. The chief vocalists were Misses Birch and Dolby, Messrs. Lockey, Lawler, &c.

At CROSBY HALL, last Monday night, Miss Stuart "exemplified" the female characters of Shakspeare, with Mdlle Laurette, Mdlle. Adelaide, Miss G Emery, Miss Percy, and Miss L. Stuart as vocalists.

Mr. Willy gave an orchestral concert last Monday, at St. Martin's Hall; Mr. W. S. Bennett, conductor. In the programme were the "Nafades" overture of the latter; the "Jubilee" overture of Mendelssohn; Beethoven's eighth symphony; and Weber's "Jubilee" overture. Mr. H. Blagrove played Spohr's eighth violin concerto. The singers were Misses Lucombe and Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. W. H. Seguin, and Signor Marchesi (his first appearance in this country). We were unable to attend this concert: it is the commencement of a series, which will require some notice, which we must postpone until the second entertainment

On Tuesday evening, Mr. Richardson, the celebrated flautist, had a concert at the Hanover-square Rooms, conducted by Messrs. Benedict and Brinley Richards. There was a very full attendance. The orchestra, with Tolbecque as first violin, consisted of nearly 80 players, including the names of Deloffre, Case, N. Mori Mellon, Goffrie, Collins, Watkins, Loder, Blagrove, Sayton, Lyon, Trust, Weslake, Phillips, Hausmann, Lavenu, Guest, Howell, King, Casolani, Severn, Rabas, Barret, Nicholson, Lazarus, Baumann, Harper, C. and T. Handley, Chotl, Prospere, Goodwin, &c. Beethoven's Symphony in C, No. 1, and the "Oberon" and "Lauora" overtures of Weber and Beethoven, were, consequently, splendidly played. Mr. Richardson performed on Siccama's patent flutes the "National Russian Hymn," with variations; and with Mr. Lazarus, Boehm's grand duo for flute and clarionet. Mr. Richardson's remarkably finished execution was duly appreciated by the auditory. Parti played a violoncello fantasia on the themes in "Norma;" and Mr. Henry M Collins gave a concertina solo; M. Sainton, his popular violin fantasia on the "Lucrezia Borgia" themes; and Miss Kate Loder, a pianoforte piece. The singers were—the Hungarian vocalists, Mesdlles. Corbari and Marpi, Mr. Williams, Dolby, Messent, Mrs. C. Harper, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. W. H. Seguin, Mr. F. Bodda, and Signor Marras. This was a far superior entertainment to the ordinary quality of benefit concerts.

Signor F. Ronconi, brother of the celebrated Ronconi, commenced on Wednesday night, a series of concerts at the Beethoven Rooms. Miss Noble, a débutante of much promise, was encored in Verdi's air, "Tu al cui sguardo." Mdlle. St. Marc has a fine voice. The other vocalists were Mdlle. Rainoli, Miss S Howson, Miss Leslie, Miss Rooke; Signori Burdini, F. Ronconi (an agreeable tenor), Mr. Henry Malpeson, and Mr. C. Toulmin. Burdini was encored in Donizetti's air, "Pour tant d'amour." The solo instrumentalists were Thalberg and Brocciadi (flute).

MUSICAL EVENTS.—Miss Catherine Hayes appeared at the Dublin Theatre Royal on the 22nd ult., in Donizetti's "Linda," with brilliant success Miss Poole was the Pierotta; Mr. Truss, Carlo; Herr Menzies, estorno; and Polonini, the Marquis. Signor Vera was the conductor.——The second concert of the spring series of Lond in Wednesday entertainments took place on the 27th ult., in Exeter Hall, Ernst being still the principal attraction, with Mrs. Gardner gave a concert at the Beethoven Rooms last Monday.—— Mr. John Parry has been delivering his "Lights and Shadows" at Edinburgh and Glasgow this week.——The third and last classical chamber concert of Messrs. Cooper and Hancock took place on Monday, at the small room in Exeter Hall.——The first concert of the Philharmonic Society will be given next Monday.——On Tuesday, Mr. W. S. Bennett will hold his second pianoforte meeting.——On Wednesday, Herr Molique (at the Hanover Rooms) and Mr. Lucas (at his residence in Berners-street) will give their concerts of classical chamber music ——Haydn's oratorio, the "Creation," will be repeated next Friday, at Exeter-Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa. At the first performance, Mr. Machin sang the bass part, owing to Formes's illness; but the German basso will be able to appear next Friday, when Miss Birch and Mr. Sims Reeves.——Mr. Balfe resumes his duties at Her Majesty's Theatre, on Thursday, as musical director, having been re-engaged by Mr. Lumley, who has secured from Paris to prepare for the opening of the season.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

PARIS, Wednesday.

The débût of Sontag last Tuesday was [illegible] more Theatre, after an absence of twenty years. [illegible] The assemblage of diplomacy to hear the Countess [illegible] was triumphant, and [illegible] absence from public entertainments. Sontag [illegible] 19th of June, 1826, as Rosina in the "Barber [illegible] situated to sing that air she had retained her brilliant vocalisation, as was proved in Rode's variations. The florid style was always Sontag's forte; and the air in the scena from Gluck's "Iphigenia" was, therefore, not a happy selection for her at this concert. In the Polacca from Donizetti's "Linda," and in the variations of Rode, her triumph was overwhelming. Signori Calzolari and Bulletti were the other vocalists; and Mme. Wartel played Weber's pianoforte concerto, and Cossmann a violoncello solo.

The new two-act ballet, "Stella, ou les Contrebandeurs," by M. St. Leon, the music by Pugni, was produced on the 22nd inst. at the Grand Opera. To state that Stella is the daughter of Pierrotto the smuggler, and that she is beloved by Gennaro, a sailor in the revenue service, will indicate the plot of the ballet. The respective families are the Capulets and Montagues; the action passes at and near Naples. After divers adventures, the lovers are united by the abandonment of the smuggling trade by Pierrotto. It is Gerlo who gives animation to the story. A pas des lanternes, with the letters of the alphabet, and the last scene, the fête at Le de grotta, created much admiration. Pugni's music is noisy and coarsely scored, but it is lively and dance-like in style.

At a concert given at the hotel of the Minister of the Interior, a Mdlle Malnvielle, who is to make her début at the Grand Opéra, sang Pacini's "Niobe" in a style to produce a considerable sensation.

Madame Soutag sang last Sunday at a concert in Brussels; next Sunday she will again sing at the Conservatoire, at which Mdlle. Ida Bertrand, who is engaged for Her Majesty's Theatre, will also appear.

Letters from Cassel, in Germany, announce that the celebrated composer, Spohr, was not expected to survive the consequences of a fall on the ice, on the 15th instant.——Meyerbeer's "Prophète" has been produced at the Hague, as well as at Amsterdam, with the greatest success: it was done in French at the former place, and in German at the latter. The composer was at Vienna, directing the rehearsals of his new opera.——Herr Titl has been appointed chapelmaster of the Imperial Court Opera.——The following from Weimar announces that Liszt was actively engaged in mounting Gluck's "Iphigénie en Tauride," with additional accompaniments composed by Richard Wagner.

THE THEATRES.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The prospectus for the fourth season has just been issued. The directors announce that the season will begin next Saturday week (March 16th). The following list of 28 operas is by no means so comprehensive as that of last year, but is ready for representation at a few hours' notice:—"Semiramide," "La Donna del Lago," "L'Italiana in Algeri," "Il Barbière," "La Gazza Ladra," "Il Tancredi," "La Cenerentola," and "Guglielmo Tell," of Rossini; "Ernani" and "I Due Foscari," of Verdi; "Lucia," "L'Elisir," "Lucrezia," "Anna Bolena," "Maria di Rohan," "Linda," and "Favorita," of Donizetti; "Masaniello," of Auber; "Il Matrimonio Segreto," of Cimarosa;" "I Capuletti e Montecchi," "Puritani," "Sonnambula," "Norma" of Bellini;" "Nozze di Figaro" and "Don Giovanni," of Mozart; and "Robert le Diable," "Les Huguenots," and "Le Prophète" of Meyerbeer. The novelties for the campaign of 1850 will be at least five in number. The first will be "Der Freyschütz," of Weber; "La Juive," and "Guido and Ginevra," of Halévy; "Il Bravo," of Mercadante; "Parisina," of Donizetti; "Mose in Egitto," of Rossini, with new arrangements and additions by the composer; "Iphigenia in Taurida," of Glück; and "Fidelio," of Beethoven. The principal singers will be Grisi, Mdme. Castellan, who has been gaining glory at the Grand Opera in Paris; Mdlle. Vera (who has created such a favourable impression recently at the Italian Opera in Paris), and Viardot, for soprani; Mdlle. de Meric (who at St. Petersburg has created such a furore) and Mdlle. d'Okolski, as contralti; Signori Mario, Luigi Lablache, and Soldi, besides Signori Enrico Macatti and Tamberlik (who are new to this country), as tenori; Signori Tamberlik, Massol, Rommi, and Ronconi, as bassi-baritoni; and Signori Formes, Rovere, Tagliafico, Polonini, and Zelger, as bassi-profondi. Mr. Costa is the director of the music, composer, and conductor. The administrative department is vested in the hands of a committee of the artistes, and Mr. Frederick Gye is the acting manager and Mr. Roberson is treasurer—a post which he has occupied for the Covent Garden Theatre proprietary for many years. Messrs. Grieve and Telbin are the scenic artists. The orchestra will consist of 16 violins, 10 second ditto, 10 tenors, 10 violoncellos, 10 contra-bassi, and 21 wood, brass, and percussion instruments, with 2 harpists—85 in all. Mr Godfrey superintends the military bands, and Mr. Cusins is organist. The ballet-master is Sig. Cassil. The opening opera will be "Il Franco Arciero" ("Der Freyschütz"), with Barbieri restitutive—the Italian version recently produced with such success at Berlin. The cast here will be Madame Castellan as Agathe, and Mdlle. Vera as Anschen; Signor Enrico Maratti, as Max; Formes, as Caspar; Mason, as played by him at the Grand Opera in Paris; Zelger as Cuno; and Mol, Ottokar. The mise en scène will be on the grandest scale—the incantation scene will include some novel effects. The prospectus is one of considerable interest, and, as it does, so many new works of every school never before heard in this country.

HAYMARKET.

Mr. Douglas Jerrold's drama of "The Prisoner of War" was revived on Saturday. This piece was produced some years ago, in the first season of Mr. Macready's management at Drury-Lane, and is one of Mr. Jerrold's most successful productions. Beautiful life forms the basis of the interest; and the most touching character in the piece is that of the old sailor, Jack Chanock, originally played by Phelps, and now by Mr. Webster. Parental feeling is the sentiment expressed in it; and the scenes between the Captain and his daughter (Mrs Charles Kean), in which that feeling struggles with the seaman's duty, are affecting in themselves, and were, besides, well interpreted by Mr. Webster, although certainly not with that finish which distinguished his predecessor's admirable impersonation. Mr. Charles Kean was Lieutenant Fitzroy; and the Sailors were the two Pallmalls, Peter and Polly, on this as on the original representation of this charming drama. This powerfully cast, the revival of "The Prisoner of War" will, doubtless, meet with uncommon success.

OLYMPIC.

A new one-act afterpiece was produced on Monday; it is entitled "The Poet's Slave." The poet is none other than Cæsop, who, according to tradition, was supported by a Negro attendant in this new piece translated into a Grimalkin's, who sells public places every evening, and applies the produce of her talents to the replenishing of her larder. The King of Portugal, Don Sebastian (Mr. Belton), is attracted by her charms to the inn where they are lodging. He gains an interview with the girl, to whom he promises a pardon for her master—a criminal confined in the dungeons of the castle. The arrangement is effected, and the devoted maiden is free to love. She declares her affection to be in favour of the poet; whereupon the King magnanimously resigns his own claim. The piece was performed by Mrs. Seymour; that of the Poet by Mr. Conway. Both acted creditably. A subordinate character, Jose, the innkeeper, was supported most humorously by Mr. Meadows. The piece was entirely successful.

On Wednesday Mr. Lovell's play of "Love's Sacrifice" was revived. Mr. Davenport's performance of the Merchant, and Miss F. Vining's representation of his daughter, were both highly effective. Leghorl was confided to Mr. Johnstone, who supported the character in that unctuous style so peculiar to him.

MARYLEBONE.

Mr. Scriling has this week presented the audiences with his "Alms; or, the Rose of Killarney," the heroine being well played by Mrs. Gordon.

SURREY.

Mr Shepherd has resorted this week to melo-drama, and put up, as an afterpiece to Mr. Oberley's poetical comedy of "Old Love and New Fortune," the nautico-drama, by Mr. Pitt Cobbett, called "A Red Rover," with panoramic scenery of its voyages, painted by Mr. John Leslie, the American artist. We doubt whether the same audience can relish both pieces

DRURY-LANE.

On Wednesday "Ion" was revived with new scenery, and in altogether a rich and wordsy style. When it is mentioned that Mr. Vandenhoff was the Adrastus, it will be readily understood that the part was possible honourably to anybody: it is, indeed, a magnificent classical example of acting. Mr. Anderson, having recovered his voice, was exceedingly fine in Ion; and Mr Vandenhoff acted Clemantha with grace and feeling. The house was well attended, and the audience were well pleased. This performance, indeed, deserves special encouragement.

THE PICTURESQUE EXHIBITION.

This is the title of a new Pictorial Exhibition, of which a great part view was given on Wednesday evening, it being opened to the public next day. The idea of presenting a series of views of our own beautiful island, amidst the great competition of foreign parts, is very appropriate as well as real, is a good one; and this execution of it deserves to become attractive

The Picturesque Exhibition is located in the handsome new premises, No. 309, Regent-street, immediately adjoining the Polytechnic Institution. You ascend an haut to an elegant little theatre, capable of accommodating some 200 persons, in a large gallery; the area being a quasi pit. There is a prettily painted proscenium. As the scenes are shown by gaslight, the house is occasionally darkened, the only light it then receives being by three transparent medallions, of classic design, in the ceiling. This is a novel and convenient artistic contrivance.

The Exhibition consists of a scenic tour from Primrose-hill, by the North-Western Railway, and Holyhead Road, to the last wonders of our present scientific age—the Conway and Britannia Tubular Bridges (which have been so fully illustrated in this Journal). The scenes are what is termed flats; and during the change three thousands a drop-scene—not painted with the conventional mythological landscape, but a map of England, large enough for all purposes. Among the scenes are Wolverton, with its rising railway town; Coventry, bristled with spires; and Birmingham, strongly associated with our national greatness. Still more successful, as a picture, is the view of the city of Chester, with its walls of the Roman dominion; and its bridges, which are our own triumphs. This bridge-eye view, moonlit, is very effective. We next reach the first of the tube bridges, across [illegible] with the Menai Bridge on the left of the spec ator. The cro [illegible] over the Britannia Bridge, com [illegible] the distant coun ry seen through the bridge plate [illegible] though the Tubular bridge loses some of its colos [illegible] the bold sublimity of the neighbouring rock

The several scenes are very cleverly executed by Mr. J. W. Allen, with whose large landscapes at the Suffolk-street Gallery the public yearly become familiar. Mr. Marshall, the artistic scene-painter, has also contributed his efficient aid. The rapid passage of the scenes, by Mr. Lewis, is judiciously managed; and the entire Exhibition, with the accompanying vivid voice prêcis of the scenery and objects, will be very popular.

EXHIBITION OF INDUSTRY OF ALL NATIONS IN 1851.

It will be seen, by the subjoined official communication, that the Commissioners for promoting the Great Exhibition of 1851 have made another step towards the end proposed in the original prospectus. The day has been fixed, arrangements for the reception of articles to be exhibited have been made; a site for the Exhibition has been decided on, and its size approximated; the terms of exhibition have been propounded; some of the requirements that are deemed necessary have been determined; and a fiscal decree relating to customs duties upon foreign and colonial articles to be sent for exhibition has been issued.

"Her Majesty's Commissioners for promoting this Exhibition state, for the information of the public, the progress made in determining on the points referred to in their announcement of the 11th ult.

"The decisions have been necessarily limited by the present want of knowledge as to what means will be placed at the r disposal; and the shortness of the time for completing this vast organisation compels the Commissioners earnestly to appeal to the country to enable them as soon as possible to know on what amount of subscriptions they may ultimately rely.

"The scale on which this undertaking will be conducted must depend on the amount of pecuniary support received from the public; and the Commissioners confidently appeal to all classes to enable them to make such liberal arrangements as will ensure a success worthy of the character and position of this country, and to give an invitation given to the other nations of the world to compete in a spirit of friendly emulation.

"The 1st of May, 1851, has been fixed for opening the Exhibition. The Commissioners will, at their own expense, receive all articles sent to them, and delivered at a place to be named by the Commissioners in London on and after the 1st of January, 1851, and until the 1st of March inclusive, after which day no further goods will be received.

"Her Majesty has granted a site for this purpose on the south side of Hyde-park, between Kensington drive and Rotten-row. From an approximate estimate, the Commissioners believe that the building ought to cover from 16 to 20 acres, or about 1,000 000 of square feet.

"The productions of all nations will be exhibited together, under one general classification.

"The articles exhibited will be divided into four sections, and a classified list, with instructions, affecting each department, are appended.

"The building will be provided free from rent, and fireproof.

"Exhibitors will deliver their objects at their own charge and risk at the building in the Park, but no charges will be made while they remain there.

"Colonial and foreign productions will be admitted duty free for the Exhibition, but not for internal consumption. Such articles will be considered as bonded goods, and the Commissioners of the Exhibition will make suitable arrangements for their reception.

"The Commissioners desire a complete local organisation, and that local committees shall undertake to receive subscriptions within their districts, advertise all subscriptions received, and defray all local expenses, paying a suitable commission for collection.

"The Commissioners desire the extension of the same complete local organisation to the colonies.

"Subscriptions should be paid to the treasurers of the local committees, and by them transferred to the general fund at the Bank of England, in the names of Messrs. A. K. Barclay, W. Cotton, Esq., and J. W. Lubbock, Bart., S. M. Peto, Esq., M.P., and Baron L. de Rothschild, M.P.

"The Commissioners having undertaken the control over the expenditure of all money that may come into their treasurer's hands, have arranged for auditing accounts and ensuring the strictest economy.

"The Commissioners hope that the funds raised by voluntary contribution will enable them so to regulate the sums to be paid for entrance, that all classes may be enabled to visit the Exhibition.

"Any surplus left after giving every facility to the exhibitors, and increasing the privileges of the public as spectators, will be applied to purposes strictly connected with the ends of the Exhibition, or for the establishment of future similar exhibitions.

"However large the building may be, the articles sent may exceed any space that can be provided; the Commissioners, therefore, reserve ample powers of rejection and selection. The quantity of space to be allotted must necessarily depend on the number of articles contributed; but, under all circumstances, they will have to exercise a certain discretion.

"The Commissioners desire that the local committees will, as early as possible, promote the object by a specification of articles proposed to be exhibited from their districts, and of the space required for their reception, that the Commissioners may determine as soon as possible the proportions of the building.

"The Commissioners are in communication with the Foreign-office in Downing-street, as to the means of informing foreign governments of the arrangements in progress.

"The principles on which the prize fund of £20,000 shall be appropriated, and the best mode of adjudging, are under consideration.

The Commissioners will afford every information in their power on any points respecting which local committees may address inquiries to the secretaries of the commission.

(Signed) "J. SCOTT RUSSELL.
STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

"At the New Palace, Westminster, Feb. 21, 1850."

(From the Gazette of Tuesday last.)

The following are classified lists of objects which may be admitted to the Exhibition of the Works of Industry of all Nations, to be opened in London on the 1st of May, 1851. There are four sections, and 30 classes.

This division of the objects for exhibition into four sections will be generally preserved. Articles belonging to one section may, however, be admitted to another, where they may be considered necessary, but in such cases for illustration only.

SECTION I.—RAW MATERIALS AND PRODUCE.

Under raw materials in this section are to be included all products of the mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms, either in their entirely raw state, or in any stage of preparation previous to arriving at the state of a finished manufacture (as in section III). They are classified according to their uses to man, in their original state and in their first chemical transformations.

(A).—MINERAL KINGDOM.

1. USED IN METALLIC MANUFACTURES.

(a). Ores, and Modes of Dressing.—Native Metals, or Metallic Ores, the modes of dressing, such as crushing, stamping, &c.

(b). Metallurgical Processes.—The various methods of roasting and smelting the ores, so as to illustrate processes.

(c). Alloys.—Bronzes of various kinds, such as statuary, gun, bell, and figurine bronze, &c.

(d). Metals in Process of Adaptation to Finished Manufactures.—Rolled and drawn in sheets, wires, &c., and cast in pigs, bars, &c., plated and electrotyped medals, &c.

2. CHEMICAL PRODUCTS.

(a). Chemical Substances employed in Manufactures.

(a). Non-Metallic Substances.—Such as carbon in its various states for the purposes of fuel, charcoal, coke, lamp-black, animal charcoal, bituminous, artificial fuels, products of distillation of coals, mineral oils, and naphtha; phosphorus in its different states; sulphur, as in the manufacture of sulphuric acid, &c.; muriatic acid; nitric acid; nitre, saltpetre, &c.

(b). Alkalies, Earths, and their Compounds.—Such as potash and its salts, as carbonate, sulphate, and chlorate of potash; nitre, native and artificial, &c.

(c). Metallic Proper, and their Compounds.—Such as iron and its salts, iron pyrites for green vitriol, colcothar, ochre, Venetian red, or as used for calico printing and dyeing, sulphate of iron as used for making sulphuric acid, &c.; copper, as nitrate and sulphur of copper as used for colours and dyeing, for electrotyping, &c.

(d). Mixed Chemical Manufactures Such as soap, prussiate of potash and Prussian blue, ultra marine, &c.

(B). Chemical Substances used in Medicine.

(a). Non-Metallic Substances.—As iodine, bromine, chlorine, sulphur, phosphorus, carbonic acid, and their compounds, &c.

(b). Metallic Earths, and their Compounds.—As carbonates, chlorides, sulphates, nitrates, phosphates, &c.; and other compounds of potash, soda, lime, and magnesia, &c.

(C). Vegetable Preparations.—As calomel, corrosive sublimate, red oxide, and bi-sulphuret of mercury, and other compounds; salts of silver, copper, iron, antimony, zinc, &c.

3. USED IN THE MANUFACTURE OF GLASS, POTTERY, AND EARTHENWARE.

(a). Coarser Materials used in Glass-making.—As sand, chalk, carbonates of soda and potash, sulphate of soda, gypsum, common salt, rock salt, soaper's waste, gas lime, lime, clay, &c.

(c). Various kinds of Glass used for Manufactures.

(a). Materials used, and the modes of Dressing and Preparing them for Use.

(b). Finer Materials, as used for Making Pottery.

(c). Coarser kinds, as used for Manufacturing Purposes. Materials for bricks, house and field draining tiles and pipes, common jars, bottles, pans, &c.

4. STONES AND MINERAL SUBSTANCES FOR BUILDING IMPLEMENTS AND DECORATION.

(B).—VEGETABLE KINGDOM

1. SUBSTANCES USED CHIEFLY AS FOOD, OR IN ITS PREPARATION.

I. Agricultural produce—Cereals, pulses, oil-seeds, &c.; II. Dried fruits and roots; III. Substances used in the preparation of drinks; IV. Spices and condiments; V. Sweetening matter; VI. Farinaceous series; VII. Fermented liquors and distilled spirits from unusual sources.

2. MATERIALS USED CHIEFLY IN THE CHEMICAL ARTS, OR IN MEDICINE.

VIII. Gum series; IX. Resin series—resins and balsams, gum resin, gum-resin; X. Oil series—volatile oils, drying fat oils, non-drying fat oils, solid oil, wax; XI. Acids; XII. Dyes and colours; XIII. Tanning substances; XIV. Intoxicating drugs; XV. Medicinal substances.

3. MATERIALS FOR BUILDING, CLOTHING, ETC.

XVI. Fibrous substances—cordage and clothing materials; XVII. Cellular substances; XVIII. Timber and fancy woods, for construction and ornament, and prepared for dyeing, &c.

1 MISCELLANEOUS SUBSTANCES.

XIX. Miscellaneous substances not elsewhere enumerated.

(C)—ANIMAL KINGDOM.

1 SUBSTANCES USED AS FOOD.

2 SUBSTANCES USED FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES.

3. SUBSTANCES USED IN MANUFACTURES.

(a). For Textile Fabrics and for Clothing.—Wool, hair bands and ropes; bristles, whalebones. Silk from the silkworm, Bombyx mori, and from other species of India, as Bombyx cynthia and Attacus paphia; feathers, down, fur skins, leather; elytra or beetle wings (for ornaments of dress); byssus, from the pinna shell-fish (manufactured into gloves.)

(b). For Domestic or Ornamental Purposes, or for the Manufacture of Implements. Bone, horn, hoofs, ivory, tortoiseshell, &c.

SECTION II. MACHINERY.

DIVISION A. MACHINES FOR DIRECT USE.

1. Prime Movers.—As boilers and furnaces for generating steam, &c.
2. Separate Parts of Mechanisms and Gearing.—As toothed wheels, &c.
3. Machines for Raising and Moving Bodies.
4. Machines for Weighing, Measuring, and Registration.
5. Instruments and Miscellaneous Contrivances.
6. Cannon and Small Arms, Pistols, &c.
7. Agricultural Machinery.

DIVISION B.—MANUFACTURING MACHINES, OR SYSTEMS OF MACHINERY, TOOLS, AND IMPLEMENTS EMPLOYED FOR THE UNDERMENTIONED PURPOSES:

1 Manufactures of all Fabrics that are Spun, Woven, Felted, or Laid.
2. Manufactures of Metals
3. Manufactures of Mineral Substances.
4. Manufactures of Vegetable Substances.
5. Manufactures of Animal Substances.
6. Machinery and Apparatus for Bleaching, Distilling, and Manufacturing Chemistry.

DIVISION C.—MACHINES OF ENGINEERING STRUCTURES, EXHIBITING THE APPLICATION OF MECHANICAL CONTRIVANCES.

Models of bridges, viaducts, roofs of large span, in stone, wood, iron, &c. Models of docks, locks, lighthouses, breakwaters, harbours, landing piers, &c.

SECTION III. MANUFACTURES.

Manufactures to be exhibited in this Section must be in their finished state, as fit for use.

1. Fabrics.—Goods, plain and figured in the loom; also printed, coloured, or embossed, including linens, canvas, floor-cloths, calicoes, &c.
2. Manufactures in Metals.
3. Manufactures in Glass, Porcelain, Terra-cotta, and Earthenware of all kinds. &c.
4. Manufactures from Vegetable Substances. Wood, straw, hemp, grass, &c.
5. Manufactures from Animal Substances.—Ivory, bone, horn, parchment, &c.
6. Smallwares and Chemical Compounds; as umbrellas, garments, &c.

SECTION IV.—SCULPTURE, MODELS, AND THE PLASTIC ART.

Objects formed in any kind of Material, if they exhibit such a degree of taste and skill as to come under the denomination of Fine Art, may be admitted into this Section.

1. Sculpture as a Fine Art. a. In metals, whether simple, as gold, silver, copper, iron, zinc, lead; or compound, such as bronze, electrum, &c. b. In minerals, whether simple, as marble, stone, gems, clay, &c.; or in materials elaborated from them, as glass, porcelain, &c. c. In wood and other vegetable substances. d. In animal substances, such as ivory, bone, shells, shell-cameos.
2. Works in Die Sinking, Intaglios.
3. Architectural Decorations.—Whether integral or adventitious, as in relief, in colour, stained glass, tapestry.
4. Mosaics and Inlaid Work —In stone, tiles, vitrified materials, wood, and metal.
5. Enamels. On metals, china, and glass.
6. Materials and Processes applicable to the Fine Arts generally, including fine art printing, printing in colours, &c.
7. Models.—In architecture, typography, and anatomy.

CONDITIONS AND LIMITATIONS.

All spirits, wines, and fermented liquors, unless derived from unusual sources, are inadmissible, except in special cases and under special restrictions; and when oils, spirits, &c. are exhibited, to prevent accidents they must be shown in well-secured glass vessels.

All highly inflammable articles such as gunpowder, detonating-powders, lucifer-matches, &c., and all live stock, and articles perishable within the duration of the Exhibition are inadmissible, unless especially excepted.

SECTION I. RAW MATERIALS AND PRODUCE.

Division (a). Mineral Kingdom.—It is desirable that the raw materials should be shown in connexion with the produce of the mineral kingdom, so as to form a history and explanation of the processes employed to fit them for the useful and ornamental purposes of life. The Exhibition will thus comprehend (1) illustrations of the various modes of extracting and preparing the raw material for produce; (2) illustrations of methods of reducing, working, or combining raw materials, so as to obtain products which may afterwards receive applications to the useful or ornamental purposes of life. The specimens fitted for exhibition should include (1) only those remarkable for their excellence, for novelty in their occurrence or application, or economy of their extraction or preparation; or (2) those remarkable as illustrating some further processes or manufactures.

Division (b). Vegetable Kingdom. The objects which the Commission is most desirous of receiving among the products of the vegetable kingdom are such as from their utility, novelty, or practical interest may appear especially deserving public attention. Peculiarly fine samples of substances in common use; authenticated samples of substances having similar properties, but derived from different sources, such as arrowroot, sago, &c. Dyeing materials, accompanied by specimens exhibiting the effect of such materials. Fancy wood, both in the polished, rough, and manufactured state. All sorts of materials which are applicable to the manufacture of linen, cordage, wickerwork, paper, and the like. Nothing, however, appears suitable to the exhibition except such results of human industry as are capable of being preserved without injury through several months.

Division (c).—Animal Kingdom.—As illustrations in this division, the various processes of preparation may be exhibited in connexion with the raw materials; and in many cases a finished article may be introduced as the termination of a series of objects in preparatory stages. Nothing, however, appears suitable to this Exhibition except such results of human industry as are capable of being preserved without injury through several months.

SECTION II.—MACHINERY.

Division (a).—Machines for Direct Use. Machines will be exhibited in motion wherever practicable; and in such cases it may be found practicable to provide the necessary arrangements for that purpose.

Division (b).—Manufacturing Machines.—Although in arranging this class for exhibition it will be found advisable to separate products from the parts producing mechanism, yet the latter should always be accompanied with sufficient specimens of the raw material, in its several stages of manufacture, and of the finished product, to make the operation of the machinery intelligible. It is important that it be very desirable to obtain several such series for the proposed exhibition.

SECTION III. MANUFACTURES.

Manufactures to be exhibited in this section must be in their finished state, as fit for use. All articles to be admitted in this section must exhibit one or more of the following qualifications:—1. Increased usefulness, such as permanency in dyes, improved forms and arrangements in articles of utility, &c. 2. Superior skill in workmanship, as in block printing, chasing, &c. 3. New use of known materials. 4. Use of new materials. 5. New combinations of materials, as in metal and pottery. 6. Beauty of design, in form or colour, or both, with reference to utility. 7. Cheapness, relatively to excellence of production.

SECTION IV.—SCULPTURE, MODELS, AND THE PLASTIC ART.

Objects formed in any kind of material, if they exhibit such a degree of taste and skill as to come under the denomination of fine art, may be admitted into this section. The specimens exhibited shall be works of living artists. Oil paintings and water-colour paintings, drawings and engravings, are not to be admitted, except as illustrations or examples of materials and processes; and portrait busts are not to be admitted.

PEDESTRIANISM.—FEAT UNDER ARMS.—On Friday week came off this contest, undertaken by a young officer of the Guards, to walk, accoutred in every respect as a private soldier, in heavy marching order, from London to Windsor Barrack-, in seven hours. Five to one was subsequently betted against: his doing it in six hours —the distance being 21¼ miles; the weight about 30 lb., with grenadier cap, knapsack, haversack, mustard, &c.; and the difficulty of walking under such equipments, without previous training, was great The feat was accomplished in 5¾ hours, to the surprise of the natives and soldiery. Crowds were collected at the entrance of Windsor: the cheering was immense. The start from Hyde Park-corner was at eight A.M. The first ten miles was walked in 2 hours 9 minutes, and the remaining eleven in less than 2¾ hours, the time of halting was 40 minutes. The rate of walking, therefore, with such equipments, without previous training, was about four miles an hour for 21 miles.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MATE-MATICIAN.—The suppression is a good one, and shall not be forgotten

W J B, B W P, R D M, RUDIS.—It shall be reported on next week

PAX.—The awkward match between Mr. Staunton and the French Champion was fought in Paris during the winter of 1843 and lasted about six weeks

R V, JUVENTUS.—The Black Kings in Enigma No. 548 must stand at Q B 8th, not K B 8th

CASTALIA.—If Wh to had taken the Bishop at move 18 their adversaries might have checked with the Q, and then played P to Q B 4th, winning a piece. 2. B ask did not take the Rook at move 22, simply because the Bishop would have captured Bishop Q instead

J T C, Peterloo.—The new chess-men made in Carrara are not allowed to be sold without the label on the bottom of the box in which they are contained

ONICHON.—W.I. our unfatigable Correspondent obliges us, in confidence, with an address? It is impossible with so little space at command, that we can say all that is needful to secure the correct production of his Problems

YORK.—Country members are admissible at the St. George's Chess-club at a subscription of one guinea per annum

W G, York.—Will be in favour us with an address

G W R.—Unfortunately, the Mate may be given in your problem two ways, since White, at his 3rd move, instead of playing P to Q 3 4th, can move Q to her Kt 4th (ch), &c. Will you oblige us in future by sending more legible diagrams?

I S P Q R.—We are in daily expectation of the opening games in the great chess match at Washington

BRUTUS.—Blank diagrams for Problems, can be got, if we mistake not, at the office of the Chess-Player's Chronicle, King William-street, Charing-cross, or of Hastings, in Oxford-street

SIR G P, Isle of Man.—A private communication has been forwarded

FIX.—We mentioned last week that the "Chess-Player's Text-Book" may be got at Lonchar's, in Piccadilly

B.—Upon re-examination, we believe you will find that Black may retard the mate, in your solution, one move more, by playing—3. B to Q sq. Is it not so?

R W S, Oxford.; JUVENTUS, R P, P H R.—They are now under consideration

INTERPRETER.—It shall appear among the Chess Intelligence shortly

R D V, Enigma No. 544 appears to be correct. Very many solvers attempt

C F S, H E B.—The selection of games is highly interesting. We shall look forward with much pleasure for those promised

D V.—It is highly probable we may receive the first games of the grand match in time for our next Number; and if so they will be given, with copious notes by the Editor

GEORGE S, WILLY.—The "movements" or collection of games, problems, &c., contained in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, is only to be obtained by the purchase of the back Numbers. Apply to the publisher by letter

W R S, Cambridge.—Your opponent cannot place his King within the range of your Queen when the latter is occupied in covering your King from check, any more than he could if she were so fortify free

LEO.—We have not got the Number at hand to refer to, but are quite sure the position is correct

ETONIENSES.—The public should be on their guard against some villainous imitations of the NEW CHESS-MEN, which a few inferior shops are attempting to palm upon the unwary. None are genuine cannot be sold without the label which we have so often described on the top of the box.

SOLUTIONS by M E R, DERBYON, DRUID, R V, JUVENTUS, PETO, J L H, R D M, PHILOLUDES, HELLAIT, BRUTUS, OTHO, S A., A B C, ROSHER, PERE, D M D, VANTAM, COSMO, P, Bolton, are correct. Those by T W, VALIX, BARON DE R, are wrong.

14. Q takes B	Kt to K R 4th	29. P to K B 3d
15. Q Kt to K 2d	P to K B 4th

And Black resigned the Game and the Match.

(a) The precautionary advance of the K R Pawn early in the contest appears to be indispensable in this particular opening. (see the many beautiful examples of the Queen's Gambit in the Matches between Le Saint-Amant and Macdonnell.)

(b) At this first view, a powerful if not an irresistible attack seems obtainable at this point by taking the K R Pawn with the Bishop; but, on examination, it ends in Black's discomfiture.

(c) All this is exceedingly well played by the Reading amateurs, and serves to render the game highly interesting—a combination of qualities to which very few Games by Correspondence can make any pretensions.

(d) Is it possible that Black could have overlooked the danger menaced, or did they purposely, and with malice aforethought, give up their Queen? In either case, we are compelled to say, the result is not very creditable to their intelligence.

(e) Our young players will perceive that the Black Queen is entrapped beyond the chance of extrication now.

CHESS IN THE METROPOLIS.

		26. K to Q B 5th	Q to her R 4th (ch.)

Drawing the game, Black not daring to alter his moves.

(a) By Castling on this side, Black exposes his King unnecessarily to a violent attack.

(b) This looks doubly hazardous, but play as he might, White was sure to harass him by pressure on the Pawns of the Queen's wing.

(c) Instead of this, we should have preferred playing Q R to Q Kt 3d. For suppose—

BLACK.	WHITE.
14 Q to her R 4th (best)	Q R to Q Kt 3d
15. Kt takes Kt with his B. White retakes with a K. K. position with the Queen or forces the game in three or four moves	Kt to K 5th (ch)
15. P takes Kt (ch)	Queen to R 4th.
16. K to his sq. or a	Takes K P
	At 1 White must win easily.
* 16. P to K 3d	B takes K P

And Black cannot save his game.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

On Saturday last, the Lord Mayor, Alderman Humphery, and the Rev. Mr. Marshall, the chaplain to the chief magistrate, had an interview with his Royal Highness Prince Albert, who accepted an invitation to dine at the Mansion House on Thursday, the 21st of March, in honour of the occasion of the forthcoming great Arts Exhibition. The entertainment will be of the most magnificent description, and several of the most illustrious men will be invited to the hospitable chief magistrate to meet his Royal Highness.

At Histon, on Wednesday week, a bullock belonging to Mr. Papworth went into the yard of the lord of the manor, and from thence into the butler's pantry; he then turned round, and went into the servants' hall, alarming the whole family; having stayed there some time, he put his head out of the window, and finding the coast clear, jumped into the yard again, to the great joy of the servants, having done very little damage.

On the morning of the 6th instant, after the storm from the west, many of the windows at Lichfield were covered with salt, as were the evergreen shrubs in the gardens, some of which retained a saltness for several days.

At the rent audit of C. N. Newdegate, Esq., M.P., at Arbury, on Thursday se'nnight, ten per cent. was, by Mr. Newdegate's direction, returned to the tenantry, in consequence of the low price of grain.

In two days of the last week upwards of 500 persons sailed from the port of Waterford on passage as emigrants to America.

As an instance of the extent to which the London market is supplied with provisions from Scotland, it is mentioned in the local papers, that, within a period of some seventy-six or eighty days lately, no fewer than 290 tons weight of butcher meat were despatched from one rural station of the North-British Railway.

Mrs. Elizabeth Frank, an aged lady, died a short time ago at Middlethorpe Hall, near York. The bulk of her property, exceeding £10,000, is left to the Pastoral Aid and Church Missionary Societies. No other society is mentioned in her will, except the Clergy Daughters' School, at Casterton, to which a reversionary legacy is left exceeding £1000.

The King of Sweden, in a Council of State, held at Stockholm on the 12th ult., officially announced that the marriage of the Prince Royal with a Princess of Holland had been resolved on.

It is stated in a letter from Frankfort, of the 18th ult., that the Federal Commission has sent £10,000 to London as a payment on account for the vessels ordered by the ex-Central Government of Germany for the German fleet.

Lord Gough, Major Edwardes, and some other officers who were engaged in the late campaign in India, were presented with congratulatory address by the military authorities in Southampton on Monday, on the occasion of their arrival from the East.

At Madrid, on the 16th ult, cannon were fired, the national flag was displayed, and there was an illumination of the Ministerial hotels and public buildings, and also of many private houses, as a sign of rejoicing at her Majesty the Queen of Spain's interesting condition.

M. Mazzini, the ex-triumvir of the Roman Republic, has just left Switzerland, probably on the injunction of the authorities, to proceed to London, the place which he has chosen for refuge.

About 150 of the workmen employed at the Mendip Mines have struck for wages. This determination was made known by them in a body to the chairman of the company, Mr. E. H. Barwell. There has been no reduction made latterly, and the men were in the receipt of the full amount usually paid to labourers.

Mr. Fletcher Conyers Norton, unpaid Attaché to the British Embassy at Naples, is removed to a similar position at Brussels.

It is in contemplation to form a separate convict establishment in Western Australia, under the superintendence of Commander Henderson, R.N.

The Rev. J. Dobie is appointed chaplain to the Hulk Establishment at Woolwich, in the place of the Rev. Steward W. Hanna; and the Rev. George Dowell is appointed Chaplain to the British Embassy at Paris.

The want of surgeons in the Austrian army is so greatly felt, that, in order to induce civil surgeons to go into the army, the military council decreed that the usual fee of diplomacy is remitted, and a present given of from 100 to 150 florins.

A recent conflagration in the salt-works of Bohemia extended above two miles. The damage is immense, for, independently of the total destruction of a large mass of raw salt, a great quantity of distilled salt is mixed; and it will, besides, be impossible to recommence the works for more than a month.

A conspiracy, in which twelve Custom-house officers were concerned, has been discovered in the tobacco department of the Excise at Liverpool, by means of which large quantities of tobacco were stolen. This peculation has been carried on systematically ever since 1847.

We regret to state that the Earl of Lincoln's yacht, the Gitana, with the noble Earl and party on board, ran ashore off Tenedos, on her voyage to Egypt. Her Majesty's steamer Rosamond, Commander Foote, proceeded to her assistance, and she was got off in a leaky state, and arrived at Alexandria on the 27th Dec., where she will be repaired.

The imports of wheat, flour, Indian corn, &c., from foreign ports into Liverpool, for the two weeks ended the 16th ult., were 10,873 bushels wheat; 11,454 barrels flour; 73,680 bushels Indian corn; 14,993 bags ditto; 681 barrels ditto meal; 21 504 bushels beans; 1412 boxes cheese; 50 casks ditto.

Accounts from Copenhagen of the 14th inst. state that the King of Denmark was still confined to his bed, and had a violent fever. His state has caused some disquietude.

On Thursday night week, the corn windmill at Eccleston, near Croxton, Lancashire, was burnt down, the quantity of grain destroyed. The fire was caused by friction, we believe, the very high wind propelling the sails at so fast a rate as to cause some of the wood in connexion with the iron-work to ignite.

The Rev. R. W. Hippisley, Rector of Stow-on-the-Wold, has made a present to the parish of a most splendid church service and bible. In addition, Mrs. Hippisley has given a most elaborately worked communion table-cover, of the most costly materials; and what adds so much to the value of the gift, is that the work has been done by her own hands.

A petition to the Queen from the Bath Church of England Lay Association is now in course of signature for the due preservation of episcopal property, and the establishment of an increased number of the bishops of our Church." The petition expresses an acknowledgement of her Majesty's Royal prerogative as supreme governor "in all causes, ecclesiastical as well as civil."

The Vigie of Dieppe states that arrangements are likely to be made for organizing a regular service of steam-packets between France and England by Dieppe in the spring.

In an affray that ensued last week between the Protectionists and Free Traders at the Dorset County Protection meeting, a young man was struck down by a farmer, and so seriously injured, that he expired the same night.

The Commissioners of Woods and Forests have accorded a space of ground, near Victoria-park, for the site of an intended new hospital for the treatment of disease of the chest.

On Sunday, a new church, which has been temporarily erected at King's-cross, was opened by the Rev. T. Dale, M.A., the vicar, who preached in the morning and evening.

A few days since, some scoundrels introduced an infernal machine into the house of the curé of Vallars (Ain), France, from which a slow match communicated to the outside. Just as the curé was about to go to bed a dreadful explosion was heard, but fortunately the curé escaped with only a severe fright. The authors of the act have not yet been discovered.

A meeting was held on Monday, at Liverpool, when resolutions were passed in approval of Mr. Stuart Worley's Bill for legalising marriages with a deceased wife's sister.

The North Devon Freehold Land Society, at a meeting held at Torrington on Monday week, enrolled about thirty members, and before the next meeting double the number were expected to send their names.

The Lords of the Treasury having received a communication signifying that a Sikh gun, which was taken at the battle of Goojerat, has been presented to the Earl of Ellenborough by Captain Dickens, of the Irregular Cavalry, their Lordships have caused Mr. Hayter, one of the secretaries to the Treasury, to desire the proper authorities of the revenue to give directions for the free delivery of too said gun, which is now deposited at the Custom-house, to the illustrious nobleman mentioned.

Honours crowd upon Lord Gough. He is to be entertained at a grand banquet on the 23rd instant, by the directors of the East India Company, members of the United Service Club have also announced their intention of entertaining the noble and gallant Lord upon an early day; and the Goldsmiths' Company intended to confer the freedom of their ancient guild upon his Lordship at a banquet to be given in compliment to him.

The screw ships Eider and Free Trade, forming part of the Arctic expedition under Captain Austin, C.B., are to have their names changed to Endeavour and Perseverance. The two sailing-vessels, at present Rebee and Pioneer, will be named Succour and Intrepid. Sir John Ross's schooner is to be named the Felix, as a tribute to the memory of the late Sir Felix Booth, Bart.

The total sum granted by Parliament for naval services for the past year was £7,995,001 3s. 7d., and the total expenditure £7,743,842; leaving a balance in hand of £251,159 3s. 7d. There was an excess of £42,950 in the scientific branch, arising chiefly from the purchase of the two ships for the Arctic expedition (amounting to £24,582), in having been found expedient, under the recommendation of Sir James Ross, to fit out the vessels in a much more expensive way, and to make various costly additions thereto.

The total sum that will be required to defray the charge of the packet service on the part of the Post-Office department for the year 1850-5., is £764,236, being an increase, as compared with the vote of last year, of £36,140. The expenses of the contract packet service, it is estimated, will amount to £629,250; and of the Queen's vessels employed in the packet service to £134,986.

The favourite daughter of the Emperor of Russia, her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess of Leuchtenburg, will visit England very shortly, and reside in London for some time. Her Imperial Consort was ordered by the physicians to reside at Madeira, where he is at present. The Grand-Duchess, who has given him an heir since his departure, is coming over to meet her illustrious husband on his way back from Madeira.

BRIDGEWATER HOUSE.—ARCHITECT, CHARLES BARRY, ESQ., R.A.

BRIDGEWATER HOUSE.

THIS splendid pile, as far as the exterior is concerned, is rapidly approaching completion. It is one of the finest specimens of domestic architecture in the metropolis; and, in its general features, is dignified and noble in the extreme—the clusters of chimneys forming striking and effective peculiarities in the design. In plan, Bridgewater House is almost a square, the south front being 142 feet 6 inches from east to west, and the west front, 122 feet from north to south. The projection of the wings on the west front is very slight, and the windows in them, upon the principal story, have massive projecting balconies. The windows throughout the two fronts, on the principal floor, have arched pediments to them, filled in with small shields having a monogram of two "E's" intertwined, for "Ellesmere," and beautifully sculptured foliage: in the panel beneath the pediment is the motto of the Duke of Bridgewater, "Sic donec." The dressings of the windows have elegant festoons of foliage; and we should observe, that the string-course under the second floor windows, composed of a folded ribbon, is extremely picturesque. The balustrade surmounting the building is varied in its outline by vases upon the dies. The cornice, with its trusses and panels filled with flowers, is also very rich and picturesque; and the rusticated work at the angles of the wings, &c. is beautifully designed and executed. The south elevation has no projections on the front wall; the rusticated quoins at the angles, only, breaking the surface of the wall. The entrance porch is on this front of the building, and is of nice design, having clustered columns at the angles. Over the entablature is the inscription "Restauratum 1849;" and the keystone to the arched doorway is the lion rampant, the crest of the Earl of Ellesmere.

Of the interior of this house it is impossible to speak accurately, as it is in so unfinished a state; but there will be a magnificent hall, a series of state apartments of great extent and magnificence (these will occupy the front next the Green Park), and a picture-gallery of great height, and occupying the whole length of the northern front. On the east side of the building a mezzanine is introduced, appropriated to the lady's maids; and over this story are the washhouse and laundry.

We should observe, that it is understood the magnificent collection of pictures will be open to the inspection of the public, and a separate staircase is arranged at the north east corner; so that the freedom of access to the public will not interfere with the privacy of the noble Earl's establishment.

This elegant mansion is designed by Charles Barry, Esq., R.A., and is one of his most effective compositions. The details to the windows, &c. were modelled by Mr. John Thomas, in that usual tasteful style for which we have so often praised him; and the building is erected by the Messrs. Baker, in the very best manner.

This magnificent mansion is situated on the east side of the Green Park, near to Spencer House. Its south, or entrance front, is in Cleveland-row, named after Barbara, Duchess of Cleveland, who resided in Berkshire House, long since taken down. The windows of the state rooms of the new mansion command cheerful views across the park, and towards Buckingham Palace. It is near to Stafford House, the tasteful mansion of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland; and St. James's Palace, and Marlborough House.

PRESENT FROM HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT TO ETON COLLEGE.—The boys' library at this ancient seat of learning has just been enriched by the addition of a very valuable work, the gift of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, containing numerous and most curious examples of early cutting in wood, printing from ancient types, and other singular specimens of the state of the arts in the olden time. The book to which we refer is the large work of Grueber "On the Arts in the Mediæval Ages." The plates are most elaborately coloured, and the embellishments throughout are of the most costly and magnificent character. On the fly-leaf preceding the title-page is the Prince's autograph, as follows:—

Presented to the boys of Eton College, with a hope that this book may not be considered merely as an ornament to their library, but as a work freely to be used by them for recreation and the acquirement of taste.
ALBERT.
Windsor Castle, Feb 6, 1850.

A great number of works, written by the Archbishop of Canterbury, have also just been presented to the boys' library by his Grace. This library, which is a new building, recently erected in Weston's Yard, in the immediate contiguity of the provost's lodge, contains many rare and valuable works, the gifts of old Etonians and others who feel an interest in the welfare of this establishment.

The several persons who were taken into custody on Saturday last, at Brighton, for passing forged notes of the Brighton Bank there, have been committed for trial.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

JOHN HATCHELL, ESQ., Q.C. A.M., M.P., HER MAJESTY'S SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR IRELAND

MR. HATCHELL, the recently returned member for Windsor, was born in 1798. He entered Trinity College, Dublin, in 1804, and, during his course, obtained honours both in science and classics. In the latter he was especially distinguished, and was a successful candidate for a scholarship—conferring, during five years, chambers, commons, and some yearly honorariums, and attainable only by very superior answering in a very extended course of classics. Whilst a scholar, he was a member of the Old College Historical Society, and obtained some celebrity as a public speaker; his contemporaries being, amongst others, the late Mr. North, Mr. Charles Phillips, and the present Master of the Mint. At that time the College Historical Society was recognized, and its meetings presided over, by the heads of the University. The debates were held in the dining-hall, and excited the greatest interest both within and outside the college walls. On public nights, when the members had the privilege of giving admissions to their friends, it was no uncommon thing to have an audience of from five hundred to a thousand persons. Though the subjects set down for discussion were historical, the debates caught the spirit of the times, and were full of present interest. The fire of earnestness gave life to historic discussion, and reality to the philosophy of politics. Whoever was well heard in the Historical Society, had no need to fear any other audience. Nowhere else would he be met with more searching, keen reply, nor find more pretension more rapidly put down. The old Historical Society was a true school of oratory. It gave the confidence and taught the power of public speech, and was the inspiration to many who afterwards became distinguished in the pulpit, at the bar, and in Parliament. In 1808 Mr. Hatchell closed the session of the Historical Society by a speech from the chair.

MR. HATCHELL, M.P. FOR WINDSOR.

He was a student of the Middle Temple, was called to the Irish Bar in 1809, and elected a member of the Leinster circuit. He had no long briefless time of weary waiting upon fortune to teach him patience, but almost at once obtained celebrity and a large practice as a criminal lawyer, and within a short period had gained the character of being one of the ablest cross-examiners and best Crown lawyers at the Irish Bar. O'Connell used to say to him, "When I'm gone, you'll be first."

In 1835 Mr. Hatchell was appointed Queen's Counsel, and from that time within the Bar became one of the leading men in Nisi Prius, both on his circuit and in the superior courts at Dublin. No opening in a cross-examination, no point in a case escaped him. There was scarcely a trial of any interest in which he was not engaged; and the best proof of his success is to be found in the fact of his having realised a considerable fortune in the practice of his profession.

In 1846 he was one of the counsel to the Castle; and in December, 1847, received the appointment of Solicitor-General for Ireland. At the time there could scarcely be a more arduous office. The duties of 1848 were incessant. There were two special commissions in the south, the conduct of the criminal business of which fell to the Solicitor-General, and the trials in Dublin for sedition and high treason.

The Government measures for Ireland making it especially important that in the present session one of the Irish law officers of the Crown should be in the House, Mr. Hatchell, on the retirement of Lord John Hay, offered himself as a candidate for Windsor, and was elected without opposition, on the 6th of the present month. He had but just taken the oaths and his seat, when a motion of Mr. Sadleir compelled him to make his maiden speech, in defence of the omission of Roman Catholics from the special jury in the case of "Cahanan against Cameron."

ERRATA.—In our memoir, last week, of Colonel Chatterton, Anna, Martha, and Rebecca should have been placed as daughters of the first Baronet, and therefore sisters of Colonel Chatterton. The date of Colonel Chatterton's marriage was 1820; and he had one son born in 1826, and who died in 1827.

ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—The position of all parties connected with this establishment appears to be assuming a more complicated aspect than ever. The parents of the boys on the foundation, who are under Mr. Whiston, as head-master, received on the 20th ult. a letter from the chapter-clerk, by which they were informed that if their sons did not resume their studies over the Prior's-gate, the Dean and Chapter would feel it their painful duty to declare their places vacant, and to fill them up. On the 23rd instant, three days after, Mr. Meeres himself received a letter from the clerk of the peace for Bucks, to acquaint him that the Court of Adjourned Session at Aylesbury had unanimously resolved to require him to return to the discharge of his duties of chaplain of their county prison, in person, immediately, or without fail on or before the 11th inst. Maidstone Journal

A subscription has been entered into amongst the scholars of Rugby School, for the purpose of presenting to the Rev. the Dean of Carlisle (Dr. Tait, the late head-master of the school), a testimonial, as a mark of the esteem and respect felt by the scholars placed under the tuition of the reverend Doctor for the uniform kindness he has displayed in his treatment of them, and also for the interest he has taken in promoting their education in the classics, mathematics, and other high class attainments.

A resident at Stratford has in his possession a Bible, in an excellent state of preservation, printed in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and containing the autograph of Paul Joddrell, Esq., who was clerk to the House of Commons more than two centuries ago. It seems this ancient relic is likely again to become the property of the Joddrell family, as Sir R. P. Joddrell, Bart., has identified the autograph by comparing it with some family records in his possession, and has intimated a desire to purchase the book, which is a fine specimen of the typography of the period.—Essex Standard.

On Monday last, the Rev. Charles Boutell, of Downham Market, in Norfolk, had the honour, by special command, of presenting copies of his works on the "Monumental Brasses of England," and on "Christian Monuments in England and Wales," to his Royal Highness Prince Albert. His Royal Highness most graciously received these volumes, and has since communicated to Mr. Boutell his high approbation and admiration of them.

COMPOSITE COLUMNS.—No. I.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

IN the belief that selections made at random from the note-book of any one dependent upon general observation for his existence, so to speak, may not altogether be without interest or amusement, we have obtained permission to set up a column, from time to time, of materials thus collected.

We intend to pick them up wherever we can find them, and we shall have them as varied as possible. Hits at any flying topics of the day, in which, be assured, we shall endeavour to make good-humour triumph over personality; odd nooks and corners of society, scraps and oddities of travel; short legends, or anecdotes; harmless absurdities, written (by way of relief to the great mass of literature of the present day) without any "purpose" at all but that of a minute's amusement—these, and many other matters, we shall endeavour to make available to our purpose. And all this we wish to do without interfering or jostling with any one, for the world, besides being a very good work, is very large, and there is room in it for everybody to occupy his own allotted space, with great comfort to himself, provided he does not, from his own quarrelsomeness, annoy his neighbours.

We beg—and in this we differ from the philosophy of prospectuses in general—that you will not take the first column as a sample of our intentions: for, in a matter like this, as in a pantomime, machinery does not get into gear until after a few times working; but then we hope that all will go on smoothly enough, without hitch, hindrance, or any expression of disapprobation from our audience.

With a truthful expression of the pleasure we feel at renewing regularly those relations with the readers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, which have for some years been the most agreeable portion of our literary work, we now retire behind the curtain, to show off our exhibition.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.

WITHIN the last few days a sturdy band of the most presuming and questionable conundrums have been forcing their way into respectable society. Several are old offenders; others have just come out; but it is time that all of them were put down, for they are getting very obnoxious. And, therefore, in the manner of a Hue and Cry, we beg to signalise them, that they may not, in future, be allowed to molest quiet people.

Deep thinkers have been much annoyed, upon being asked, "What moral sentence does a weathercock suggest?" to be told, "It is a vane thing to a-spire." And well they may be.

The lady of the house, at a dinner party, when anxious and carving, has been questioned as to "The difference between a fowl with one wing, and one with two," and has not recovered her self-possession upon being told that it was "A mere matter of a-pinion." Cries of "Shame!" and "Turn him out!"

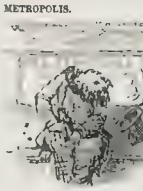
A gentleman moving in high sporting circles was asked the other day, by a coarse trainer, "Is a race between the eyes and the nose, which would win?" and, to his disgust (for he is a man of refined mind) was told that "When the nose was blown, the eyes would still be running." The consequence of this is, that he has left the turf.

But nothing can equal the indignation excited by Mr. Tottleberry, who, having been on a cheap "excursion" to France, got into a bad medium between the two languages, and thought it clever, in reply to the question "Who did Brunel build the tunnel?" to say "Pour passer le Tems." Nobody knew what this meant, until the wretched attempt at combining the sound of Thames and Tempus was pointed out to them; on which Mr. Tottleberry was recommended on his next excursion, instead of Paris, to go to Bath.

We shall keep our eye on all these nuisances, and next week shall put our friends on their guard against a few more.

HEALTH OF THE METROPOLIS.

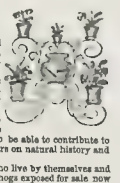
IN the course of the last two months, the public has laboured from frightful "cricks in the neck." The epidemic was at first supposed to proceed from the late cold winds, but has now been satisfactorily ascertained to arise from the extraordinary positions in which enquiring persons, anxious to read the advertisements on the roofs of omnibuses and railway carriages have been obliged to twist their heads.



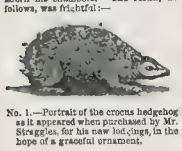
PORTRAIT OF A GENTLEMAN AS HE APPEARS WHEN TRYING TO READ AN OMNIBUS ROOF ADVERTISEMENT.

EXCEPT the "Island of Jewels," at the Lyceum, Covent-garden Market is at present the most attractive sight in London, and it has the advantage of being a gratuitous one. Instead of exhibiting, as formerly, the largest specimens of natural produce, it now displays only the smallest; and the shopkeepers struggle to excel each other in putting forth the most diminutive fish and tiny flower-pots ever seen.

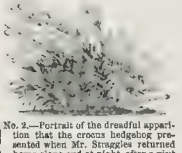
The case of the hapless minnows confined in these globules, calls for the interference of the Prevention of Cruelty Society. They are so nicely adjusted to the diameter of their glass, that their nose touches one side whilst their tail brushes the other; and so they pass their lives, which are as short as themselves, in a wiggling immoveably painful to witness. The miniature plants have not a less uncomfortable appearance. They have look but West India pickles planted out in dolls' flower-pots, and suggest anything but verdant coolness with their dry scanty mould and tight scarlet pots. We have bought an inch tittlebat, and a corresponding plant, which appears to be a cross between a caterpillar and a nutmeg. We shall report their state from week to week, and hope to be able to contribute to science a few facts which have as yet escaped the writers on natural history and botany of the present day.



Mean while, we must caution those of our readers who live by themselves and are nervous, against buying the early-flowering hedgehogs exposed for sale now in Covent-garden. An old friend of ours, of a confiding disposition, seeing one of them labelled "I am full of crocuses, and only half-a-crown," in a rash moment of floricultural enthusiasm, bought it to adorn his chambers. The result, as follows, was frightful:—



No. 1.—Portrait of the crocus hedgehog as it appeared when purchased by Mr. Struggles, for his new lodgings, in the hope of a graceful ornament.



No. 2.—Portrait of the dreadful apparition that the crocus hedgehog presented when Mr. Struggles returned home alone and at night, after a visit of a week or two into the country.

SWISS FASHIONS, 1849.

From the very shadow of the Jungfrau we copy the dress of the "merry Swiss Girl" of last autumn. We call her a Swiss girl, because the only other females, with few exceptions, are old women and babies; and we beg to assure our readers that comical boddices and headdresses, bare arms and short petticoats, are known only to artists and authors in annua. Once we met a woman with something like an enormous black crape butterfly on her head; but the sight was so dreadful, we do not want to see another.

INTERLACHEN, 1849.

Interlachen is the Tunbridge Wells of Switzerland. Its chief productions are boarding-houses, waterfalls, mules, and Murray's "Hand-Books." Its chief manufactures are straw hats, flirtations, polkas, and écarté. Its imports, bottled porter and Galignani's Messenger. People who have nothing the matter with them go there to be cured; and the prettiest person in Switzerland is the girl at the Post-office. It is, therefore, an admirable spot for all gentlemen to have their letters addressed "poste restante."

BRITISH INSTITUTION EXHIBITION.—"ALADDIN'S PRESENT TO THE SULTAN."—PAINTED BY JOHN GILBERT.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

WE have this week engraved "Aladdin's present to the Sultan," No. 203 in the catalogue, and three feet five inches in height, and two feet eleven inches in width. It is painted by J. Gilbert, and is a composition somewhat in the manner of the late Mr. Etty. Mr. Gilbert has a fine eye for colour, and in this instance has brought together all the riches of his palette and the resources of his art.

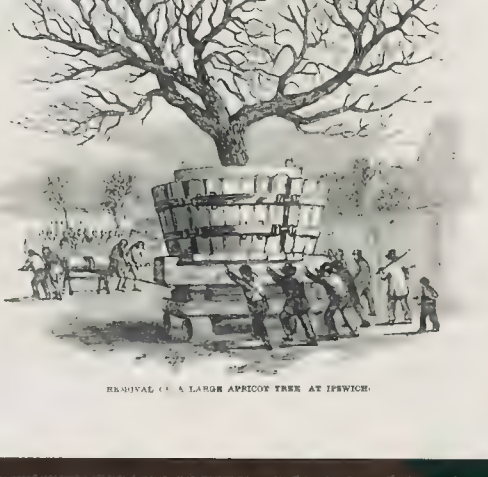
The accompanying Sketch was taken just before the tree passed the Observatory to its final resting-place.

REMOVAL OF A LARGE APRICOT TREE, AT IPSWICH.

SOME time since (see ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for July 29, 1848) we illustrated the skill of the Ipswich artisans in removing entire a dwelling-house; and now we have to congratulate them on a like success with a more tender object—the transport of a splendid Apricot Tree, a standard, similar to an apple-tree, which, for half a century, has produced a noble crop of fruit.

The tree stood in the garden of the late Dykes Alexander, Esq., by whom it was planted fifty-six years since. In clearing the estate of timber, this fine old tree was spared; and preparations were made, under the direction of Charles May, Esq., to remove it on Tuesday, the 19th ult., from its bed, and convey it to the garden of that gentleman, at St. Margaret's, nearly a mile distant. For this purpose, a deep trench was dug round the trunk, to the circumference of twenty-seven feet; and there was made a ring of tub staves, three inches thick and three feet deep, all firmly hooped and screwed together. Flanks were then placed underneath the roots, and a good and strong bottom being formed, the whole mass—the earth alone weighing no less than five tons—was screwed up by jacks, and eventually lifted over a high wall, and safely deposited on a rully. The girth of the trunk is thirty-seven inches, and the circumference of the branches is at least one hundred feet. It was good work for five powerful horses to draw this unusual load. In passing down St. Matthew's, the branches frequently swept the fronts of the houses; the rully, however, proceeded without serious impediment through the back roads until it arrived opposite to the wedding-machine near to St. Margaret'sChurch, when it was found necessary to remove the overhanging steelyard: this having been done, the tree was safely conveyed into Mr. May's premises, and is now, together with its old soil, one of the chief ornaments of that gentleman's grounds.

The operation excited considerable curiosity in the streets of Ipswich, and the contrivance was much admired.

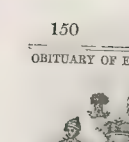


REMOVAL OF A LARGE APRICOT TREE AT IPSWICH.

At Reading, on Saturday night, about half-past ten o'clock, the farm premises of George Higgs, Esq., a wealthy gentleman, living at a fine surburban villa on the Oxford road, about one mile from the centre of the borough, were by the act of an incendiary reduced to a complete mass of ashes, and the loss must amount to some thousands of pounds. The property destroyed consisted of barns, one or two ricks of corn, stables, cattle sheds, granaries, agricultural implements, &c., horses, two cows, and three pigs. The proprietor was fully insured.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LORD AYLMER



MATTHEW WHITWORTH AYLMER, G.C.B., Lord Aylmer, Baron of Balrath, in the county of Meath, in the Peerage of Ireland, an Irish Baronet, and a General in the Army, was born the 24th May, 17; He was the eldest son of Henry, fourth Lord Aylmer, by his wife, Catherine, daughter of Sir Charles Whitworth, and sister of Charles Earl Whitworth. He succeeded to the title as fifth Lord when only ten years old, on the death of his father, in 1785. His Lordship fought and led gallantly in the British service, and he received a cross and clasp for Talavera, Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, Vittoria, and Nive. He rose to the rank of General, and he was made a G.C.B. in 1836. His Lordship was also Colonel of the 15th Foot, and he was formerly Adjutant-General in Ireland, and afterwards Governor-General of Canada. He assumed the surname of Whitworth before that of Aylmer, and the arms of Whitworth in addition to those of Aylmer, by Royal license, in 1825, on the decease of his maternal uncle, Charles, last Earl Whitworth. Lord Aylmer married, the 4th August, 1801, Louisa Anne, second daughter of Sir John Call, Baronet, of Whiteford, in the county of Cornwall, and sister of the present banker, Sir William Call. His Lordship died on the 23rd ultimo, at his residence in Eaton-square. As he leaves no issue, he is succeeded by his next brother, Rear-Admiral the Hon. Frederick William Aylmer, C.B., now sixth Lord Aylmer.

The family of Lord Aylmer is of very ancient lineage, and springs from Aylmer, Earl of Cornwall, at an extremely remote period of our history. His descendant, Aylmer of Lyons, settled in Kildare, in Ireland, in the time of Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke. The late Lord was fifth in direct line from the distinguished seaman, Matthew Aylmer, who, after the Restoration, was made Rear-Admiral of England, and created by George I. Baron Aylmer.

JOHN MIREHOUSE, ESQ., M.A.

JOHN MIREHOUSE, Common Sergeant of the City of London, was born on the 16th of June, 1785. Having graduated at Trinity College, Cambridge (of which he was M.A.), he was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn, the 13th of May, 1817, and soon practised in the courts of common law and on the Home Circuit. He was the author of two legal works, one upon the law of tithes, and the other upon the law of advowsons. For some years past, Mr. Mirehouse filled the office of Common Sergeant of the City of London, and was well known as a Judge of the Central Criminal Court. Though displaying there much quaintness and some irritability of manner, he always acted with fair and upright intentions, and with a due regard to justice and mercy.

Mr. Mirehouse was eldest son of the late John Mirehouse, Esq., of Brownsiade, county Pembroke, High Sheriff of that shire in 1806, by Mary his wife, sister of Sir John Edwards, Bart., of Greenfields; and grandson of the Rev. Thomas Mirehouse, Canon of Peterborough, who derived his descent from the Mirehouses of Mirehyle, in Westmoreland, a family there seated uninterruptedly from the time of the Conquest. The Common Sergeant married, in 1823, Elizabeth, daughter of the late Dr. John Fisher, Bishop of Salisbury, Preceptor to the Princess Charlotte, by whom he leaves issue. Mr. Mirehouse died on the 20th ultimo.

SIR WILLIAM ALLAN, R.A., P.R.S.A.

SIR WILLIAM ALLAN, an eminent painter, was born in 1782. Of humble parentage, he, in his early years, exhibited a decided inclination for his art, and he was, during his whole life, enthusiastically devoted to it. To improve himself he travelled far and wide, visiting all the Continental galleries, and seeking the picturesque in regions most remote. His artist-wanderings carried him to Morocco, Greece, Spain, and other foreign localities, including the semi-barbarous portions of Russia and Turkey; his wanderings extended from Gibraltar to Persia, and from Persia to the Baltic. His artist-journeys were numerous and excellent. Among the most famous of them were "The Polish Captive," "The Slave Market of Constantinople," "The Moorish Love-Letter," "The Murder of Archbishop Sharpe," and "The Battle of Waterloo." Allan was elected a Royal Academician in 1838, and was chosen to fill the chair of the Scottish Academy of Painting Sculpture and Architecture in 1837: he was appointed her Majesty's Limner for Scotland on the death of Sir David Wilkie, in 1841, and was knighted in the following year. He was also an honorary member of the Academies of New York and Philadelphia. With Sir Walter Scott Sir William Allan was on most intimate terms: their friendship lasted through life; and "Will Allan," as Scott used fondly to call him, was one of those who stood by the deathbed of the poet.

Sir William Allan himself paid the debt of nature on the 23rd ultimo, at his residence, 72, Great Stuart-street, Edinburgh: he died at the age of sixty-eighth year. Sir William was a man singularly unassuming, very amiable, and of much esteem with his brother artists and his many friends, among whom were persons of the highest eminence.

GENERAL BLAKE.

GENERAL ROBERT DUDLEY BLAKE was the second son of the late Sir Francis Baker, of Twizel Castle, county of Durham, and brother of the present Baronet. He entered the British army in 1793, and rose, amid much gallant service, through the different grades to that of General, which he attained on the 10th January, 1837. This noble and distinguished veteran officer died recently, at his seat in Sussex, in his 75th year.

WILLIAM JAMES HOPE JOHNSTONE, ESQ.

THIS gentleman, so well known on the northern turf as a great rider of steeplechases, and the possessor of some famous race-horses, died recently of an injury to the spine, caused by a fall over a sunk fence, when looking for ponchers. He was the s. dest son of JOHN James Hope Johnstone, Esq., of Raehills, on Dumfries, hereditary Keeper of Lochmaben Castle, and claimant of the Annandale Peerage, and grandson of Admiral Sir William Johnstone Hope, G.C.B., by the Lady Anne Hope Johnstone his wife, eldest daughter of James, third Earl of Hopetoun. He was born April 19, 1819, and married, 7th December, 1841, the Hon. Octavia Sophia Macdonald, youngest daughter of Godfrey, late Lord Macdonald.

IRELAND.

REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—Mr. John O'Connell held the usual weekly meeting on Monday. The week's rent was £14.

THE CITY RECEIPTS.—The following are the numbers regi-tered at the January sessions:—Conservatives, 108; Whigs and Repealers, 95. Conservative majority, 102.

THE CHURCH.—The Lord Primate's convalescence proceeds satisfactorily. It is understood he intends to open the Rev. Mr. Quinn, one of the vicars choral of the cathedral, has been promoted to the rectory of Charlestown, vacated by the death of the late Rev. Mr. Oliphants. The most Rev. Dr. Cullen, the new Roman Catholic Primate, is expected to arrive from Rome in Armagh previously to Easter.

REDUCTION OF RENT.—The Earl of Castlestuart has made a reduction of 15 per cent. on all rents due on his Tyrone estate at September last, and which have not been paid to the present. This abatement was unsolicited by the tenantry.

PAYMENT OF WAGES IN IRELAND.—Sir William Somerville has introduced a bill to prohibit in Ireland the payment in certain cases of wages in goods, or otherwise than in the current coin of the realm. The bill provides that from the passing of the act all contracts for the hiring of artificers in Ireland must be made in the current coin of the realm, and must not contain any stipulations as to the manner in which the wages shall be expended: all wages must be paid to the workman in coin, and payment in goods declared illegal. Artificers may recover wages, if not paid in the current coin. It is also provided that in an action brought for wages no set-off is allowed for goods supplied by the employer, or by any shop in which the employer is interested. No employer is to have any action against his artificer for goods supplied to him on account of wages. The wages in the current coin of the realm are not to be lowlid, if the artificer consents. The bill further declares that persons making contracts declared by the act to be illegal shall for the first offence pay a penalty of £10, for the second £20, and for the third, which is to be considered a misdemeanour, a sum not exceeding £100.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

YORK AND NORTH MIDLAND.—The report of the directors of this company shows the receipts for the half-year to have been £204,511 7s. 2d., and the expenditure for working the line £68,532 1s. 7d. After paying debenture interest, &c., the disposable balance is available for dividend is £35,040 2s. 7d., which would give a dividend of £1 3s. 2d. per cent on the consolidated stock of the company; but the directors recommend that a dividend of only £1 per share be declared, leaving a balance of £4819 14s. 7d. The disposable balance includes the £19 928 14s. 11d. from the last account, the dividend for the whole year 1849 will be only one per cent.

DERBY AND LEEDS.—Monday the Master in Chancery Brougham appointed Mr. Croysdell official manager to wind up and investicate this company's affairs. The directors of it allotted shares and proceeded to Parliament, of which proceedings no account had been rendered to the shareholders

GREAT NORTHERN.—Feb. 28: Half yearly Meeting: London: E. B. Denison, M.P., in the chair.—The report stated that the traffic on that portion of the line opened was proceeding very satisfactorily. In the course of next month a short line would be opened to Burton Salmon, thereby completing the communication between Doncaster and York and the North, and the line between London and Peterborough might confidently be expected to be open in August next, when the town's line would be completed. £5,466,167 has been expended, and the company have power to raise altogether £6,284,800, leaving a balance of £2,284,277 to meet the liabilities of the company, and finish the line—which would only leave £676,011 to construct the remaining forty-four miles of the town line, and twenty-six miles between Doncaster and York (not at present proposed to be constructed). The report, after the usual congratulatory address, in moving the adoption of the report, it was stated that if, hereafter, it were proposed to complete the whole line, the directors would recommend the shareholders to proceed to Parliament for powers to raise £1,000,000 additional capital. which would be more than sufficient for all their purposes. It was also proposed to discontinue the payment of interest out of capital after June next. The report was adopted; a dividend of five per cent declared on the preference £12 10s. shares out of the profits of the half-year (£15,000); four new directors elected to the board; the secretary's salary reduced from £800 to £600 a-year, and a series of formal resolutions passed.

SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.—At the half-yearly meeting of this company, held on Tuesday, at the company's station, Nine Elms, a dividend of 3½ per cent. per annum was declared to be paid on the 10th of March. The report was adopted, a vote of investigation was adopted, and a vote of confidence in the directors was unanimously carried.

NEW QUEEN'S COUNSEL.—It is stated that the Lord Chancellor has intimated his intention to elevate the undernamed gentlemen to the rank of Queen's counsel:—Mr. Pashley, Mr. Edwin James, Mr. Prendergast, Mr. Granger, Mr. Bliss, Mr. O'Malley, Mr. Macaulay, Mr. Greaves, Mr. Townsend, and Mr. Carpenter Rowe.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Successive sales of stock for immediate delivery, as well as large amounts upon speculative accounts, have had a depressing influence on the market during the past week. Consols opened on Monday at the decline of one-eighth upon the last price of the preceding week, the first quotation being 98½, leaving off at 98 to ⅝. Opening on Tuesday at the decline of 9⅛ per 9⅝, prices receded to 9⅝; and after the close of business there were sellers at that quotation. On Wednesday, however, the market was more buoyant; Consols opened at 9⅝ ⅜ for Money; some transactions afterwards having occurred at 9⅝; when a gradual improvement to 9⅝ ½ succeeded, closing at 9⅝ to ⅝ for Money. This improvement was, however, maintained on Thursday; Consols opening at 9⅝, afterwards advancing to 9⅝ ⅜ with purchasers for the account. Indian Exchequer Bills continue about the same as last week's quotation; also India Bonds. The depression in the English Market, notwithstanding the low price of money, is variously accounted for. It is supposed by some, that the failures in the savings-banks are being largely withdrawn, from alarm at recent disclosures, necessarily causing heavy sales or money stock on the part of the Government. This may be partially true, but it is certain that the speculations for the rise, who took the stock and fear to hold it longer, is a still more probable solution of this unexpected depression. When the week closed, prices were—for Bank Stock, 209½; Reduced, 98¼; New 3½ per Cent. Annuities, 98¼; Long Annuities, to expire Jan., 1860, 9 9-16; Ditto, 30 years, Jan., 1860, 8 3-16; India Bonds, £1000, 87 pm.; Ditto, under £1000, 87 pm.; South Sea Stock, 104½; Ditto, Old Annuities, 94¾; Ditto, New Annuities, 95¾; Consols for Account, 95; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 57 pm.; Ditto, £500, June, 57 pm.; Ditto, Small, June, 57 pm.

The Foreign Market has shared in the depression of the home funds, prices generally having receded. Unanticipated difficulties in the settlement of the large Bull account in Peruvian have compelled sales for the purpose of closing. The old stock has, consequently, receded from 81, Monday's highest quotation, to 78, and the Deferred, from 38 to 34¼. Mexican has fluctuated but little; Portuguese has slightly advanced; Russian Scrip has ranged between 2 prem. and 1⅛. The last prices of the week are—for Mexican, Five per Cent., 1840, ex January Coupons, 29¾; Ditto, Three per Cents., Four per Cent., 77¾; Ditto, Deferred, 34¾; Portuguese, Five per Cents, 85; Ditto, Four per Cent., 31¾; Ditto, Account, 32¾; Russian Scrip, 1¾ p.; Spanish, Five per Cent., 1840, 17¾; Ditto, Account, 18; Ditto, Passive, Three per Cent., 5¾; Venezuela Bonds, Two-and-a-Quarter per Cent., 33⅝; Dutch, Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 52 Guilders, 55¼; Ditto, Four per Cent., Certificates, 86¾

Shares have been very heavy, great depression having characterised the Market during the week. The settling day meeting appears to have tended greatly to promote this feeling. After the settling on Wednesday, a rather improved feeling prevailed; the only rise, however, of any consequence being in South-Westerns, which, with Brighton, Caledonian, and Great Northern, were the most of the capital accounts; and, in the case of the South-Westerns, the trifling amount of the debenture bonds and guaranteed stock. At the close of the week prices were—Caledonian, 9¾; Eastern Counties, 1¼; Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 39¾; Eastern Counties Extension, No. 2, ¾ p.; Do, Northern and Eastern, 5 per Cent., 67 x.d., Great Northern, 33¾; Do., 5 per Cent. Pref., 102; Great Western, 76; Quarter Shares, 14¾ x.d.; Do., Fifths, 10⅝ x.d.; Ditto, New £17, 7 x.d.; Hull and Selby, Half Shares, 47¾ x.d.; Lancaster and Carlisle, 52; Lancashire and Yorkshire, Quarters, 10¾; Ditto, Thirds, 7; Leeds and London and Blackwall, 3¼ x.d.; London and South-Western, 63¾ x.d.; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, Half Shares; Ditto, £50 Shares, 4¾; Ditto, Consolidated Bristol and Birmingham, Six per Cent., 123½; Norfolk Extension, 18½; North British, 10; Ditto, Pref., 6½; North Staffordshire, 3; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 8¾; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 15; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, Class B., 1½; South-Eastern, 17½; Ditto, No. 3, 17½ ds.; Ditto, Registered, No. 4, 6⅝; South Wales, 17½; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 14; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, 8⅝; Ditto, G.N.E. Pref., 12½; York and North Midland, 17½; Ditto, Pref., 6½; Boulogne and Amiens, 6⅝.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols opened yesterday at 9⅝ to 99 for money, after sales at intermediate prices. The Stock Exchange quotations for the current week for Foreign Securities were tolerably well supported, and the Share Market was a trifle firmer. In neither market were the variations of any importance.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The arrival's of English wheat for our market since Monday have been moderate in extent, and of full average quality, the total supply coastwise having amounted to 2340 quarters. The show of samples of both red and white here to-day was, however, comparatively small, yet the demand for all descriptions ruled very inactive, at barely satisfactory prices, and no clearance was effected. Only 1000 quarters of foreign wheat have reached us, but a large quantity is close at hand. Fine dry samples were held at full prices. In all other kinds of grain the quotations were almost nominal. The show of English barley was large, that of foreign small. Both met a very dull sale, at somewhat lower terms. Malting qualities, in consequence of an unusually large supply of malt, upwards of 10,000 quarters, was brought forward. All kinds were extremely heavy, at a fall in value of 1s per quarter. Beans, peas, & oats were dull, at previous rates. Damp qualities ruled heavy, on somewhat lower terms. Flour, peas, & Indian corn remained without alteration deserving of notice.

English wheat, [illegible] barley, 6280; malt, 10 810; oats, 7320; flour, 1770. Irish [illegible] barley, 7100; oats, 2220 quarters.

English wheat, Essex and Kent [illegible] 38s to 42s; ditto, white, 40s to 43s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 36s to 40s; ditto, white, 40s to 42s; rye, 26s to 28s; grinding barley, 18s to 21s, distilling ditto, 22s to 25s; malting ditto, 32s to 37s. Norfolk and Suffolk malt, 56s to 58s; Chevalier 37s to 38s; Yorkshire and [illegible] ditto, old, 36s to 38s; grey peas, 24s to 26s; maple, 26s to 28s; white ditto, old, 26s to 28s; new, 24s to 26s; boilers, 28s to 30s per quarter. Town and [illegible] ditto, 30s to 32s per sack. Flour, [illegible] per barrel; Irish, 20s to 22s per sack.

Foreign.—Not the slightest change has taken place in the demand for, or value of, any kind of seed.

Wheat [illegible] 34s to 36s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 42s; Mediterranean and [illegible] 33s to 36s per quarter; coriander, 10s to 12s per cwt; brown mustard-seed, 8s to 11s per bushel; white ditto, 10s to 12s per bushel; English rapeseed, new, £30 to £35 per last; [illegible] 19s to 20s 6d per quarter; [illegible] ditto, foreign, 25s to 26s; linseed cakes, 12 0s to 12 5s per ton; canary [illegible] 50s per quarter. Rye, [illegible] per cwt; extra, —s to —s.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6d to 7d; of household ditto, 5½d to 6d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 37s 11d; barley, 23s 7d; oats, 15s 6d; rye, 30s 11d; beans, 31s 8d; peas, 32s 0d.

The Sun Weekly Average.—Wheat, 39s 1d; barley, 24s 11d; oats, 15s 6d; rye, 32s 6d; beans, 32s 6d; peas, 32s 0d.

Dutch Grain Circular.—Wheat is dull; barley, 1s 6d, oats, 1s 0d; rye, 1s 0d, beans, 1s 0d; peas, 1s 0d.

TEA.—The medium kinds of new Congou are in moderate request, at full prices. Common sound is selling at 9½d to 10½d per lb. In other qualities very little is doing.

SUGAR.—A kind of raw sugar more off steadily, at an advance of 6d per cwt. Refined goods are slow in sale at former prices. Grocery, 63s to 63s 6d; Lumps, 65s to 65s per cwt. Foreign and foreign crushed, dull, at barely late rates.

COFFEE.—Native Ceylon in demand, at 56s 6d to 60s per cwt. All other kinds of coffee command scarcely any attention.

RICE.—Very little business is passing in this article. Cleaned qualities are unusually dull.

Provisions.—The demand for all good and fine parcels of Dutch butter is steady, at full prices. In the middling and inferior kinds we have very little doing. Fine hay Friesland is quoted at 95s to 100s; fine sinkhole Kiel and Hostein, 86s to 90s, and low to middling, 80s per cwt. For the Liverpool and Manchester markets, upwards of 5000 firkins of Irish butter have changed hands this week, and the quotations have further improved 1s to 2s per cwt. Carlow, landed, firsts 74s to 80s; Clonmel and Kilkenny, 72s to 78s; Cork, 72s to 75s; Limerick, 68s to 70s; Waterford, 68s to 70s; Sligo, 68s to 70s; Belfast, 68s to 70s; Derry, 68s to 70s per cwt. Fine new Dorset moves off steadily, at 104s to 108s per cwt. Old qualities are a slow sale, at 96s to 98s per cwt. Mild-cured parcels of Irish have also changed hands at 72s to 74s per cwt. The bacon market is heavy, at 1s to 2s per cwt less money. Prime small Waterford, landed, 64s to 66s; heavy, 62s to 64s; Limerick, 60s to 62s per cwt. Good and prime lard, as well as the best Irish hams, move off steadily, at fully previous rates.

Tallow.—A decline of 1s per cwt has taken place in the quotations since our last report. P. Y. C. on the spot is selling at 44s 6d, and for delivery over the next six months, 43s per cwt. Rough fat are offers at 2s 9d per cwt. Town tallow, 36s per cwt not sold.

Oils.—Generally speaking, our market is inactive, owing to the supplies exceeding the demand.

Spirits.—Brandy and the finest parcels of West India rum are in fair request, at full prices. Genova and corn spirits dull.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 8s to £3 10s; clover ditto, £3 0s to £4 10s; and straw, £1 1s to £1 8s per load.

Wool.—The public sales have passed off steadily, at an advance in the quotations of quite 10 per cent. The imports this week have been small. Privately, a steady business is doing at fully late rates.

Potatoes.—Since our last report nearly 4,000 tons of foreign potatoes have come to hand. This large supply has produced considerable heaviness in the demand, and prices have given way fully 5s to 10s per ton.

Coals.—Hetton, 18s; Eden, 18s 6d; Adair's, 18s 6d; Lambton, 17s, Eden Main, 17s 6d; Hetton, 18s 6d; and Hartley, 14s 6d per ton. The supply at market was large, and prices were dropping.

Hops (Friday).—In our hops are very scarce, and quite as dear as last week, although the amount of our sales during it them is trifling. In the middling and inferior kinds, very few transactions have taken place.

Newspaper Stamps (Friday).—The supply of [illegible] was very moderately supplied with beasts, the time of year considered, the demand for that description of stock ruled heavy, as barely Monday's decline in the quotations. Scarcely any prime Scots were on offer, and the top price of beef was 3s 8d per 8lb. The numbers of sheep were less than those exhibited on this day se'nnight; nevertheless the matter trade was in a very inactive state, at a fall in the currencies of 2d per 8lb. The primest old Downs, in the week, sold with difficulty, at 4s 2d to 4s 4d per 8lb. Short Downs produced 4s 6d to 4s 8d per 8 lb. There were about 50 Dorset lambs in the market, in good condition. Calves—as the supply of which was small—moved off slowly, at about a nominal prices. In pigs scarcely any business was transacted. Milch cows moved off slowly, at from £14 to £18 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; second quality ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 6d to 3s 8d coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; prime ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime coarse [illegible] to 4s 6d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 8d to 4s 10d; large coarse calves, [illegible] prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; large hogs, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; neat small porkers, 3s 6d to 3s 8d. Suckling calves, 18s to 32s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 28s. Total supplies [illegible] 260, calves, 41. South: Beasts, 190; sheep, 45.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—These markets were heavy to-day, at drooping prices, although the supplies were large.

Per 8lbs to sink the offals:—Inferior beef, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; middling ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime large ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime small ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; large coarse mutton, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; inferior mutton, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; middling ditto, 3s 10d to [illegible] 3s 2d to 3s 6d; veal, 3s 6d to 3s 10d; small pork, 3s 6d to 4s 0d.

NIMROUD SCULPTURES.

THAT the interest raised by the exhibition of these remarkable monuments of a remote historic period does not decline, is fully proved by the number of visitors who daily traverse the rooms at the British Museum in which they are deposited. Therefore, in continuation of our former illustrations, we give this week [illegible] ings of three more of the slabs which have recently been received.

The Engraving at the head of the page is a faithful delineation of one of the most curious of these Sculptures, representing incidents and occupations of domestic life. The wheel-like figure with extended projections, on the left of the composition, is supposed to be intended to exhibit the ground-plan of a circular building, surrounded by embattled turrets, in which various culinary processes are carried on. Of the two upper subjects in it, that to the left shows a female superintending the boiling of the contents of a cauldron, while pots or jars, of various sizes, supported on frames resembling tripods; the females to the right are employed in grinding corn; the sitting figure is working a hand-mill. Below, two figures are in the act of preparing the carcase of some animal, perhaps a calf or a goat; while, in the opposite compartment, a baker is seen tending his oven. The whole probably represents the kitchen attached to the palace of Nimrodh, and the entrance to the culinary [illegible] accompanied by goats or horses. In front of, or within the pavilion, is a slave grooming a horse, and a group of these animals are represented loose, some drinking at a tank; they are of the same breed and general character. In the upper corner, to the right, [illegible] two figures dancing, attired in masks resembling the heads of lions or lionpards; their performance appears to be directed by an attendant [illegible] on a musical instrument, the [illegible] of which is removed. There is a remarkable likeness to the [illegible] as which are depicted in manuscripts of the Middle Ages. Below these mummers, as they may be called, are four captives who seem to be pinioned, and are being conducted by two attendants to the entrance of the temple or palace, in the doorway of which an officer stands ready to receive them. The detail of this singular composition admit of a few general remarks, apart from any consideration of the meaning of the subject, to which we shall presently refer. That triads were used by the ancient Persians for the purpose of [illegible] metal vessels, or in earthen pots (olive), appears as certain as that they were commonly used for the same purpose by the Greeks and Romans, and still later by the inhabitants of Europe in the Middle Ages. A tripod, of very [illegible] wood, supported on a three-headed bronze serpent, was found among the spoils of the Persian army after the battle of Platæa. In the present instance the shape of the tripods is more clearly defined: they would seem to be metal utensils supported on four feet, but it is more probable that the primitive fashion of three was intended to be represented. It will be observed that the legs of the tripods end in the feet of animals. The forms of the vessels placed on the tripods, in the example under notice, partake more of the character of those which, in remote antiquity, were made of earth, and not of metal. The hand-mill shown in the cooking-scene is of the simplest form, and is still in use. That the process of grinding corn by means of such instruments was chiefly executed by women in ancient times, as it is indeed at present, we are justified in concluding the figures in this compartment to be intended for females. The only male is the baker. The oven to which he is attending is of a peculiar form, and is placed beneath the centre of the upper part. This bas-relief is supposed to represent a castle and encampment.

The slab engraved at the foot of our page is placed beside the one just described, as there is a close connexion between the subjects represented. It exhibits the triumphal return of the victorious King to his camp. The King is seen in his chariot, attended by his chief eunuch, before him, [illegible] appear to display with exultation. It will be observed that his eagle has [illegible] follows the course of the chariots on these slabs, whether the subject be [illegible] a hunting es-dition or a battle: it was intended, probably, as a type both of power and of destruction, and appears to have been adopted as an ensign by the Sovereigns of Persia. The reader of Quintus Curtius will remember that a spread-eagle of gold was placed between the statues of Belus and Ninus, also of gold, on the yoke of the horses which drew the chariot of Darius. In the present example, the yokes of the chariots are undecorated; but the curious form of the poles to which they are attached is well worth observation; and, although the headstalls of the horses are not adorned with the lofty plumes which distinguish other specimens in the collection, their trappings are otherwise of a most gorgeous character: yet it should be remarked that these trappings scarcely differ in any respect from the harness which was used on state occasions, in the seventeenth century, in Spain and other countries of Europe; and, in some points, they are evidently the prototypes of our modern horse furniture of parade. The fashions of the East underwent few changes; and there can be no doubt that many of them, particularly elaborate horse-trappings, were introduced into Europe by the first crusaders. On some of the Sculptures, a parasol, the emblem of sovereignty, is held above the King, and suggests to us that it may interest our lady-readers to learn that that convenient and now indispensable article was known in England by the same name in the thirteenth century.

The Engraving in the centre of the page is taken from a fine, though unfortunately broken slab, representing the flight of an Arab mounted on a camel: he is closely pursued by two horsemen, whom he seems to be deriding, or from whom he may be imploring quarter. His pursuers ride with their lances directed towards the ground, for the purpose, doubtless, of despatching the wounded, several of whom are scattered about. The Arab guides his camel by the aid of a halter only. In rendering the attitude of the camel, whether in motion or at rest, the ancient sculptor has been remarkably successful. There is another slab, representing a group of those animals, with a woman, executed with extraordinary truth and power. The student of the military costume of Europe in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, cannot fail to be struck by the strong resemblance of the dress of the pursuers of the Arab to the warlike costume of Norman times in England. The conical-shaped helmet, and the long hauberk descending to the knee, are identically the same, as may be seen by comparing these specimens with the effigies on seals of the Norman period, and on the coins of the Norman Sovereigns of Sicily. And it is not only in these respects that points of analogy between very distant periods of the world's history may be traced: there are others, a few of which it may be worth while to indicate on the present occasion, although we give no illustrative examples. They who have seen these Sculptures cannot fail to remember that the fortified buildings represented on them precisely resemble, in every important respect, the castellated edifices of Europe during the Middle Ages: examples of battlements finished by acutely-cusped merlons may still be seen in the north of Italy and other parts; and it may also be observed that these Oriental battlements project, as though they were machicolated — a fashion which did not prevail in Europe until the end of the thirteenth century. It is not clear that they actually were machicolated, but they certainly have that appearance. Again, these Sculptures shew the early use of a large shield, exactly resembling the pavese of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, under cover of which the besiegers of fortified places advanced to the assault. Such shields as represented on the Nimroud Sculptures appear to have been formed of wicker-work, and were probably strengthened with iron and leather. The sculptures also shew the early use of the scaling-ladder, of the covered battering-ram or testudo, and the process of undermining walls. It is not a little curious that one of the slabs represents the besieged using iron or bronze chains to arrest the action of the battering-ram of their assailants. Thucydides tells us that the Plateans employed the same device. In short, for comparative purposes, independently of their value to the history of art, these Marbles are of the greatest importance: whatever may be their real antiquity, they are probably of an earlier date than the first scintillations of Grecian genius, and, therefore, may be reasonably supposed to have exercised some influence over the conceptions and works of the Ionian colonists at least. In our former notices of these Sculptures we gave illustrations of their bearing on sacred history; on the present occasion, we thought it would be acceptable to our readers to consider them in another point of view; and, should we recur to the subject, we may endeavour to treat it by another, and, we would hope, equally instructive, process of examination.

CALIFORNIA AND THE SLAVERY QUESTION.

The last arrivals from the United States are full of interest and warning to all nations; and show that the crisis, long foreseen, of danger to the stability of the Union, is rapidly approaching. As the prosperity of every free and civilized country is involved in the prosperity of every other free and civilized country, it is impossible for us upon this side of the Atlantic to be indifferent to the struggle which has long been going on in America, and which is now fast ripening to its issue. The accession of California is the event which acts as the lever to upheave the whole mass of American society; and to expedite, for good or for evil, the solution of the great questions of slavery, and the permanence of the largest, wealthiest, and most powerful, confederation of republics that the world ever saw.

These events are a striking example of the divine government of the world, and of that Providence > which shapes our ends

> Rough hew them as we may.

In the insolence of power and pride, and moved by an insatiable ambition or cupidity for the acquisition of territory, the United States made war upon the weak, distracted, and effete government of Mexico. Our Anglo-Saxon brethren were more successful than they anticipated or deserved to be. The unjust aggression was as fortunate as the best of causes could have hoped to be. Mexico was humbled and crippled, and was but too happy to purchase peace by the cession of a large portion of her territory, which she had long possessed without knowing that it was of any particular value. The spoil no sooner passed into the hands of the vigorous sons of English blood, than its extraordinary value was discovered. California, that had been a sealed book in the lazy and ignorant possession of the Spanish races, was found to be a true "livre d'or" when the English race began to examine it—a book of which every page was printed in golden letters. The possession of this wondrous country, where pure gold in lumps worth £500 each might be had for the gathering; where each river or brook was a Pactolus; where the hills seemed actually to be built of gold; which was, in a word, the visible and tangible realization of the ancient dream of "El Dorado;" might well have excited the envy of the world. Fortune seemed to be smiling upon all nations, but upon the United States more particularly, where the marvellous stories of the apparently inexhaustible wealth of this new land were found to be no unsubstantial imaginings, but sober facts. "Happy America!" said the people of the Old World, "you have not only an almost boundless extent of fertile soil, teeming with agricultural, mineral, and every other wealth; you have not only room and food for all your children, but farms for an additional hundred of millions, if they will but come and make them and take possession of them; you have not only the richest lands, but the noblest rivers and most commodious harbours in the globe; everything, in fact, in the greatest abundance that can administer to your necessities, your comforts, or your luxuries; but Fortune, as if she were determined to exhaust her own generosity in one final and crowning gift, has bestowed California upon you, and made you virtually the arbitress in a future time of the destinies of the world." But, though all this was true, and though an unjust war was the means by which this splendid and unlooked-for consummation was realized, the tale had its befitting moral. The golden cup had a drop of poison in it which the United States were destined to drink. California, instead of being the guardian angel of the Union, was fated to be its Nemesis. A venomous serpent lurked at the bottom of the treasure; and the crime, which had been apparently rewarded with so splendid an inheritance, bore its punishment, even in the very bosom of the acquisition of which it so prematurely boasted, and of which the other nations of the world so prematurely envied them the possession. The adventurers of California, who swarmed into it from every region on the face of the globe, soon became so numerous as to be under the necessity of forming a government and a constitution for themselves. Although adventurers, composed of the most reckless, daring, and greedy of mankind, they had some conscience: they could not reconcile themselves to a property in the blood and bones of their living brothers of the Negro race; they repudiated Slavery; and, by the constitution which they peacefully and legally drew up for their future governance, they declared, amid the admiration of the world, that California should be a Free State.

In that capacity, and having fulfilled all the other conditions necessary for the purpose, California asks for admission into the American Union, and to add one more star to the transatlantic banner. The demand, though natural and to be expected, has let loose a flood of angry passions throughout the length and breadth of the Union. At present, the Confederation numbers fifteen free, and fifteen slave, States. The contending parties are equally balanced; but if California be admitted, the balance will be destroyed, and the free interest will have the preponderance in the general legislature—a preponderance which the slave States will not, and indeed cannot, submit to. Hence the present agitation.

There are only two modes of settling the question satisfactorily to the Southern or Slave States: either to reject the claim of California, or to conquer or otherwise call into federal existence a slave state to maintain the balance of these conflicting principles. The latter alternative is not easy; and if it were, it would not settle the question, or even postpone it for any appreciable length of time, for there are two other embryo States almost ready for admission into the Union. The first is the Mormon State of Deseret, daily increasing in the numbers of its population; and the second is New Mexico. Both of these growing communities have already pronounced themselves against slavery; so that the slavery interest will speedily require not merely one, but three slave States, to secure the equilibrium which is essential to their purpose. They are, therefore, straining every nerve to keep California out of the Union. The question is now fairly before Congress. On the 14th ultimo, the discussion on the Californian Constitution and the admission of that State was renewed, and had not come to a close, after successive adjournments, when the last mail left New York.

Mr. Clay has made one effort at a compromise; and during the last day's debate of which any report has reached this country, two resolutions with a similar view were submitted to the House of Representatives—namely, that it is inexpedient to receive California into the Union with her present constitution respecting slavery north of the latitude of 36 deg. 30 min.; and that the Committee on Territories be instructed to report bills providing for the organisation of the portion south of that line of latitude, with the recognition of slavery within those boundaries, southward. As far as the debates have yet gone, equal violence of speech seems to have been exhibited by the party of abolition and by the party in favour of slavery. Both talk of civil war and dissolution of the Union as mere matters of course, and as if such events were the only possible means of untying the Gordian knot of this question. Still, notwithstanding this violence, there is a large fund of good sense in America, and a growing appreciation of the paramount necessity of maintaining at all hazards the solidarity of the Union. Even the senators and representatives who talk so glibly about the dissolution of this mighty Confederacy, will doubtless take care how they do more than talk. There is great license of the tongue amongst our transatlantic brethren; but the best men of America will be cool enough, before they proceed to any acts which will have a tendency to impair the strength, or endanger the continued existence of the great Republic, of which north and south, slave States and free, are equally proud. In the meantime, the question of California is of the highest interest; and the Old World, as well as the New, looks on with great solicitude for the result of their deliberations.

ROYAL INSTITUTION.—GOLD FINDING.

On the evening of yesterday week, the 1st inst., Sir Roderick Impey Murchison, the distinguished geologist, delivered in the theatre of the Royal Institution, in Albemarle-street, a very interesting and instructive lecture on "The Distribution of Gold Ore in the crust and upon the surface of the globe." The auditory was very crowded, and included several ladies: the Duke of Northumberland, the President of the Institution, was in the chair; and among the audience were Lord Campbell and family; and the Lord Chief Baron, Sir Frederick Pollock. Upon the table were several specimens of gold ore, amongst which we noticed the large lump of Californian gold, the property of Mr. Walls, and engraved in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for January 26. There was likewise a remarkably fine lump of ore, procured from the same region upwards of thirty years since, for the Right Hon. Edward Ellice. We also observed the splendid collection belonging to Mr. Tennant. Large maps of the world, maps of Russia, &c., and a magnificent chart of the world on Mercator's projection, chiefly taken from Erman, were hung round to illustrate the lecture; and a single glance at which proved to be fallacious the popular belief that gold belonged principally to the warm regions of the south, from the fact thereupon apparent that the greater mass of the precious ore is found to the north of the equator.

Sir Roderick commenced by stating it to be an axiom that gold ore never occurs in any great quantity except under certain conditions or "constants," which may be thus briefly explained to be where the ancient stratified rocks constituting the backbones of continents, or great islands, have been penetrated and altered and crystallized by the intrusion of igneous or eruptive matter. The golden vein-stones which rise up from beneath have been carefully examined to a very considerable distance below the surface, and it has been ascertained that they invariably deteriorate in value, i. e. in the percentage of pure gold on the weight of ore, the deeper the search is made. All the rich portions are found near the surface; hence the great curiosity and interest attaching to whatever has undergone in ancient times, has, by grinding down the tops of mountains, carried away by far the greatest quantity of valuable ore, and distributed it in heaps of gravel and sand, in pleasant or fruitful valleys. As a homely illustration of this, Sir Roderick observed, that had the Hertfordshire and Surrey hills been crystalline or eruptive rocks, and not formed as at present of chalk, the gravel-pits of Hyde Park and of Hampstead would have been the great gold mining-ground of Middlesex and the adjacent counties; whilst the mud of the Thames would be auriferous only where small portions of gold had been washed by the waters from its ancient banks. The London gravel is of the same age as the detritus or rubbish of Siberia, which, as Humboldt in his Cosmos has pointed out, is quarried for other great extinct fossil quadrupeds. Never has there been gold discovered in any more ancient conglomerate: hence, the learned lecturer infers gold to be of a very recent date as regards our planet, and of little or no value as regards the human race. Indeed, the accumulations on the flanks of the Ural Mountains clearly prove that iron and copper were formed before gold. These Ural Mountains and Siberia furnish the best example of all the gold regions throughout the world. From the Ural Mountains and the twenty-five districts of Siberia, in the region around the flourishing city of Krasnojarsk, of which one is 300 miles in length and 100 in breadth, where the metal is regularly found in the broken materials and débris above mentioned—nearly the value of £3,800,000 in gold is annually derived. Geologically similar are the chief backbones of the American continent, which also afford at intervals clustered collections of gold ore.

It is right, however, to state a fact of financial importance, that California has not hitherto produced more than £1,500,000 annually. The learned lecturer adverted to a remark made by Sir Robert Peel, when addressed a few years since, by Sir Roderick, on the probability of gold being found in Australia, that he hoped "We might not have too much of a good thing." The recent explorations of those intelligent and persevering American officers, Messrs. Emory and Peck, employed under General Kearney, prove that in all the long tract watered by the Rio del Norte, the Colorado, and the Gila, which have been, for the most part, long inhabited by civilised men, gold is known in two or three spots only, and then the real profit is derived from gold gravel. Such will be the case in California; and Sir Roderick inveighed against what he might almost designate as the popular delusion, that all the Californian region would prove equally productive of gold. Of course his opinion is founded on the presumption that there can be no deviation from the "constants," which appeared almost, as far as they have been determined, to be a law of nature. As a proof that gold in a mine diminishes as the solid rock is perforated downwards, the authority of Colonel Colquhoun, R.A., long resident in Mexico, shows that in Guadalupe y Calvo, vein-stones opened out by British adventurers, though at first productive, gradually declined in value, and became poor as the ore was sought for deeper, and finally became purely argentiferous. The same has been shown by Mr. Warrington Smyth to be the case in the gold mines of Hungary.

Long before the discovery was actually made, Sir Roderick Murchison had inferred, from the description of the Australian rocks by Count Strzlecki, that certain ranges there contained gold; and now Mr. John Phillips, a Cornish miner, had actually found that gold ore was disseminated there over the surface throughout 300 square miles.

Sir Roderick Murchison, in a brief historical view of the subject, remarked that Job was a true and good geologist when he said, "There is a vein for the silver," and "the earth hath dust of gold." It would be in vain to assign any limit to the productive value of diver mines when science had been fully applied to them; for they increase in value as in depth, whereas gold ore diminishes as we descend to seek it. In terminating this admirable paper, the learned lecturer reminded his audience that if the precious ore had remained locked up in solid vein-stones, and there interlaced with other minerals, alloys, and stones, it would have been inculculably less accessible to man than it is now, when distributed as a separate and loose material along the sides of hills and slopes of valleys. "If, however," said Sir Roderick, in conclusion, "we allow ourselves to speculate on the moral effects of this golden shower, we must, I apprehend, admit, with an ancient historian (Diodorus Siculus—but no geologist), that gold is obtained with toil, is refined with difficulty, creates every where anxiety, and in its use produces both pleasure and pain."

The learned lecturer concluded his discourse amidst loud cheers.

GIGANTIC BIRDS OF NEW ZEALAND.—At the meeting of the Geological Society, on Wednesday week, Dr. Mantell, in illustration of a memoir on a large collection of fossils and rock specimens lately received from his son, Mr. Walter Mantell, of Wellington, New Zealand, exhibited some highly interesting remains of the extinct birds of that country. Among them were skulls and mandibles of egg-shells, and numerous bones of the lower extremities. The most remarkable specimens were a pair of perfect feet, including the tarso-metatarsals and twelve phalangeals of the foot of the same individual, Dinornis giganteus, which were found standing erect, apart, in a tertiary deposit, at Waikonaiti, in the Middle Island of New Zealand. The position in which they were found, and the perfect state of the bones, and their close apposition, seem to indicate that the bird to which they belonged had become mired in the swamp, and perished on the spot. These bones are so perfect as to admit of being fixed together like a recent skeleton. The foot must have been 16 inches long and 16 inches wide. The original bird is estimated at ten feet in height. Owing with these colossal extinct birds were one species of dog, two of seals, one of penguin, albatross, water-hen, and parrot. Extensive caverns have been discovered in the North Island, and these are said to contain in their stalagmitic floors bones of various animals.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE

The liberty of speech at public meetings, which in monarchical England is as unrestricted as the breathing of the atmosphere, is considered by the authorities in the republican France as an enjoyment of so perilous a nature, that it should only be participated in by the many on certain prescribed occasions. The principal of these consists of a short period anterior to the election of members of the Legislative Chamber; and at such times "the people," like children permitted for a brief space to indulge in some otherwise forbidden pleasure, give way to the most absurd license in the use of the tongue. Paris at the present moment furnishes, amongst a few sensible meetings of electors, several most ludicrous instances of those babbling assemblages in which the Socialists give utterance to the wildest, the silliest, and the most hateful sentiments, whether as regards the science of political government or the foundation, laws, and guidance of society itself, that can be conceived; the sole ruling principle with those regenerators of the world being, that they should enjoy the good things of life without earning or inheriting them, and that, in order to attain that end, they are justified in marching through seas of blood. For the present, the grand scapegoat with these gentry is the bourgeoisie, whom they hate for not being poor, as their fathers hated the old noblesse for not being low-born.

The disgust inspired by the harangues of those brawlers is so general, that it would appear almost the sounder policy for the Government to allow them to talk themselves down, by the contempt that their folly would excite, than, by restricting them to certain opportunities, attach an air of importance to them to which it would be a libel on the civilization of the age to suppose that they could otherwise attain. Some members of the Legislative Assembly, who were guilty of using language of the kind referred to, have been called to account there; and on Tuesday, the President, M. Dupin, communicated to the House reports made by the police on incendiary speeches delivered by M. Michel de Bourges, who, in an address to a meeting of 800 individuals, on the 1st of March, attacked the principle of property as follows: —"The day after their triumph the people will inquire into the origin of fortunes and capital, and proceed to wind up the accounts of the bourgeoisie. They will be justified in so doing, after examining the accounts of property, unless the bourgeoisie shall voluntarily consent to the sacrifice, which I strongly recommend them to do. The people produce everything, and it is to them consequently that everything belongs. The Republic, as it exists to-day, is a mere empty word."

M. Michel de Bourges protested on his honour—and five of his colleagues and 1000 citizens of Montmartre, who had heard him, would attest that the words imputed to him had not been uttered by him. He, on the contrary, preached conciliation; and he defied the Ministry and its agents to substantiate their charge. He had said that it was time the misunderstanding existing between the bourgeoisie and the people should cease, and that both should take each other by the hand. The speech ascribed to him was a fabrication.

This explanation, however, appeared so unsatisfactory, that the report of the police was referred to a committee of inquiry. Another member, M. Bancel, whose language was not so violent, made some explanations which were accepted, and with respect to him the order of the day was voted, and the matter dropped.

It is expected that the committee to which the matter was referred will report against the prosecution of M. Michel de Bourges, as it is believed that the members of it are disposed to give every possible latitude to a representative of the people while addressing public meetings, particularly when immediately preceding an election.

Amongst the friends of order, as those opposed to Socialism style themselves, a preliminary ballot has been taken to decide who, out of all the candidates, should be chosen by them to be put in nomination for the representation of Paris. No less than 60,000 electors voted, and the persons selected were General de la Hitte, Minister for Foreign Affairs, M. Berjeau, and M. Foy. This result is favourable to peace and order, and will have a good effect upon the departments. MM. Cnabrol (Legitimist), Chemeau, Arrigti de Padoue (Bonapartist), Thayer, and Marbeau have, in consequence, withdrawn their claims to represent the metropolis. The Socialists do not relax their efforts to get their men returned, and the contest is looked to with much anxiety.

The Government were defeated on Tuesday in the Bureaux of the Assembly on the appointment of the committee for examining the bill nominating Mayors and deputy Mayors. Fourteen members were named, out of which seven are opposed to the Ministry. According to the proposed law, the municipalities would be deprived of the right of electing a Mayor, and all Mayors would be chosen by the Government sitting in Paris, thus adding to an already excessive centralisation.

M. Cassagnac, a law student, who acted as private secretary to Sobrier after the revolution of February, was sentenced by court-martial in Paris, on Tuesday, to transportation for life, for the insurrection of June, 1848.

The President of the Republic has conferred the Legion of Honour on several retired military officers.

Five soldiers of the 17th Light Infantry have been sentenced to death by court-martial, for disobeying instructions at Lyons on the 15th of June.

PRUSSIA.

Accounts from Berlin, dated the 5th inst., state that the Prussian members of the Chamber of the States to meet at Erfurth have been nominated by the Government. They are almost all of aristocratic rank, Count Arnim being at the head of the list. It appears that the Democrats and the ultra-Constitutionalists will not interfere in the proceedings of the First Chamber. His Majesty's Government has adopted for those elections the same mode as for the other Chamber. The Government having used its privilege of nominating members for the Chamber of the States, and for the Second Section, all those who sincerely desire that Germany should attain to a definite constitutional state are greatly discouraged, the choice of so many members of the aristocracy being too significant to permit of the hope of a favourable development of the internal liberties of Germany.

DENMARK AND SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

It is stated on authority that the Danish Ministers have determined to abstain from any further negotiation relative to a fixed pro-nunciation of the armistice. This resolution has been communicated to the ambassadors of the mediating powers, with the observation that the interests of Denmark, under present circumstances, called for the continuance of it, and not find any concession in Switzerland. The Council directs the cantons to notify this to the refugees, and to draw up lists of such individuals as may be willing to avail themselves of the privilege.

ITALIAN STATES.

ROME. Accounts from Rome of the 27th ult. state that the anniversary of the French Republic was celebrated by a grand sham fight and review. Dr. Cullen has been consecrated Primate of Ireland and Archbishop of Armagh. Another military execution took place on the 26th, on a man who was found carrying a knife on his person.

From Naples there are no further details respecting the eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

GREECE.

The suspension of the blockade by Admiral Parker, in consequence of the acceptance of the interposition of good offices by the French, has been notified to the Greek Government.

UNITED STATES.

Advices to the 20th ult. have been received from New York.

The American Senate had not concluded the debate on slavery.

The Senate had rejected the nomination of Colonel Webb as Envoy to Austria.

Two senators, Dr. Givin and J. C. Freeman, had arrived at Washington from San Francisco.

A destructive fire had taken place at Camp-street, New Orleans, on the 16th February, by which property to the amount of 1,000,000 dollars was lost. The fire was the work of an incendiary.

The amount of gold received since the Niagara's departure from California amounted to above three millions of dollars.

A proposition has been submitted to the Secretary of the Navy, by Henry Grinnell, Esq., a merchant of this city, to equip and furnish two suitable vessels for the prosecution of the search after Sir John Franklin, provided the Government will countenance the expedition by appointing naval officers to take command of it. The suggestion will probably be adopted. A number of the most accomplished officers are ready to volunteer for the service, and among those spoken of in connexion with the command is Lieut. Lynch.

CANADA.

From Canada we learn that serious riots had taken place at Three Rivers, in connexion with the School Act. The Assessor's house was burnt. The military were obliged to be called out.

A fire which broke out at Montreal on the 18th of February, had burned the Canadian Institute Library and the Governor's office.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

From Panama the latest dates are to the 22nd of January. The Oregon steamer had arrived at San Francisco with upwards of 2,000,000 dollars' worth of gold dust, and about 300 passengers.

There was a great deal of fever existing in Panama, but no serious cases; it yielded to mild remedies, but it takes a considerable time for the patients to regain their strength.

The railway had not commenced, notwithstanding the fine weather was so very favourable for its beginning. It is generally supposed that capital was still waiting to carry out the project. It was current at Panama that Baring Brothers had invested £50,000 in the line.

Traffic on the Isthmus was increasing daily to a very considerable extent.

At Chagres there had arrived, within five days, no fewer than four American steamers with passengers for California. These were the Cherokee, with 195 passengers; the Alabama, with 80; the Telegraph, with 70; and the Falcon, with 272 making in all 547.

The number of consumptives on the part of the states of Nicaragua, Honduras, and St. Salvador, have agreed to a series of articles for establishing a federal union between those states.

CALIFORNIA.

The news from San Francisco reaches to the 31st of December, the details of which were published last week.

Two hundred and fifty vessels remained in the harbour of San Francisco without crews.

The precious ore is still plentiful at the diggings, but the picking of it is attended with great risk of health at this season; dysentery prevailed to a great extent, which, it is said, the doctors attribute to the quality of the water.

WEST INDIES.

Accounts to the 7th ult. have been received from Jamaica.

The House of Assembly had closed. Among the last bills which had received the assent of the Governor, was one which will relieve all steam-vessels arriving in the ports of the island from payment of the customary tonnage dues. The session was, as our readers are aware, a tedious and protracted one.

The February term of the Supreme Court of Judicature had commenced its sitting before the three Judges. Mr. William Gird, editor of the Colonial Standard, was to be prosecuted for a libel on the court.

Some excitement had been created at Kingston in consequence of an unsuccessful administration of chloroform. The subject was a patient in the Public Hospital, and being about to undergo a very painful surgical operation, it was deemed advisable to place him under the influence of chloroform. The sponge, steeped in the liquid, however, had scarcely been applied to the nostrils, when the patient became violent, struggled a great deal, made a few stentorous inspirations, and then ceased to exist. The quantity applied was about one drachm. The jury delivered the following verdict:

"That the deceased died from the inhalation of chloroform, and the jurors are of opinion that the deceased state of deceased a heart predisposed him to the fatal effects which followed the use of chloroform—age, twenty-nine years."

At Barbadoes the Legislative Council had closed; and it was expected that the general elections would take place on the 26th of February, and pass off quietly.

The small island of Montserat is suffering to a dreadful extent with the small-pox; no less than 700 of the inhabitants being affected with it, and it was feared that a large number of the cases would prove fatal. The disease had been introduced into Antigua. A meeting of the Board of Health at Antigua had been held, for the purpose of concerting the best means of alleviating the sufferings of those afflicted with the disease, and a large amount of provisions had been purchased and forwarded for distribution.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Viscount Gough took the oaths and his seat.

AUDIT OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS.

Earl GRANVILLE moved the first reading of the Government Railway Audit Bill, by which it was proposed to secure, with the smallest amount of interference, an independent and continuous audit of railway accounts by means of a permanent central board, composed of delegates elected by the proprietors of each company; these delegates to have one or more votes, in proportion to the capital paid up by the several companies. Ample powers were to be given to this board, who were to lay their reports before Parliament at the beginning of each session.

Lord MONTEAGLE expressed his satisfaction that the Government had at last introduced a bill of this kind on their own responsibility, and the bill was read a first time.

NATIONAL EDUCATION.

Lord STANLEY having presented a petition complaining of the "management clauses" of the National Education Act,

The Bishop of LONDON, wishing to avoid what he considered the "great calamity" of a discussion of the controversy that had occurred with the Committee of the Privy Council, recommended the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the whole operation of the Education Bill.

The Archbishop of CANTERBURY supported the motion, believing that information was wanted, as there had been errors and false conclusions on both sides.

Lord BROUGHAM regretted that the constant desire of all parties to promote education, and the efforts made by the legislature for that purpose, should be in so great a degree frustrated through the anxiety of Churchmen and Dissenters, respectively, to obtain the ascendancy.

The Bishop of CHICHESTER hoped to see the committee appointed.

The Bishop of ST. DAVID'S would be glad to have information on the subject, but did not believe that any satisfactory result could be expected from the inquiries conducted by a committee.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE, referring to the late meeting at Willis's Rooms, declared that almost every statement there made could be contradicted on undoubtable authority. The Church of England, which was at that meeting pronounced to have been neglected, had in fact received the full proportion of the amount at the disposal of the Government. His Lordship then stated the amount of benefit that had already resulted from the educational grants, and less than 800 schools had been founded with the assistance of these grants, and remained in close connexion with the Church. With respect to the motion for a committee, he saw no sufficient reason for its appointment. The investigation would be one of appalling magnitude, and would hardly aid the Privy Council in the discharge of the difficult task assigned to them. At all events, he trusted that the present system would not be suspended pending the inquiry.

PARTY PROCESSIONS (IRELAND).

On the motion for the committal of the Party Processions (Ireland) Bill,

The Duke of WELLINGTON said, that the measure did not go far enough. At funerals and other occasions of ceremonial or festivity, when crowds were gathered together, causes of disturbance would inevitably arise, and the only way of securing quiet was to prohibit the possession, or, at all, events, the carrying of arms on those and on all other occasions by any person who could not produce a game certificate.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE objected to turn the Processions Bill into an Arms Bill.

After some observations from Lord MONTEAGLE and Lord STANLEY, the bill went through committee

The Ecclesiastical Commission Bill was read a third time and passed.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The SPEAKER announced that the petition presented against the return of one of the members for the City of London (Baron Rothschild) had been withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

In reply to Sir W. Molesworth,

Lord J. RUSSELL gave notice that he would move, on Tuesday in Passion Week, the adjournment of the House from that day to Monday, the 8th of April, for the Easter holidays. The noble Lord stated that on Monday next he would ask for some navy votes; that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would, on the 15th inst, make his financial statement; and that the Australian Government Bill would be proceeded with on the 22nd instant.

DENMARK AND THE DUCHIES.

To a question put by Mr. Sanders,

Lord PALMERSTON replied that no renewal of the armistice had been agreed upon by Denmark and Prussia and Central Germany. Her Majesty's Government was in communication with the three parties with the view of obtaining a fixed prolongation of the armistice, and of negotiating a final arrangement of the question in dispute. There were differences on both sides which had, as yet, prevented the renewal of the armistice; but it still continued de facto, and would continue till one of the parties should give notice to terminate it. He (Lord Palmerston) did not think one of the parties had an intention to give such notice.

GREECE.

Mr. HUME asked in what state were our relations with Greece, on which great anxiety existed.

Lord PALMERSTON—Sir, the state of our relations with Greece is this, that it has been thought necessary to make a prompt demand for certain redress, for which application had been previously made without success; and that, redress having been refused, reprisals commenced, consisting in the taking in pledge of certain property as a security for those demands. By the last advices it appeared that sufficient seizures had thus been made. Meanwhile, the good offices of the French Government had been accepted, but the negotiator on the part of that Government had not arrived. Diplomatic relations have all the time continued between this country and Greece, although Mr. Wyse has embarked on board the British fleet; and to show that there has been no breach of courtesy in the business, I may state that, on the occurrence of the anniversary of the arrival of the Queen of Greece, the British fleet saluted in full form. (Laughter).

PARLIAMENTARY VOTERS (IRELAND) BILL.

On the House going into committee on the Parliamentary Voters (Ireland) Bill,

Sir R. FERGUSON moved the omission of the 2d or "joint occupancy" clause.

Lord J. RUSSELL said the Government had no objection to omit the clause if the Irish members would consent.

A number of Irish representatives spoke in answer to this appeal, but their judgments differed considerably as to the advisability of omitting the clause; and Lord J. RUSSELL observed that, under the circumstances, the Government would persist in retaining it.

The discussion was prolonged for some considerable time, and excited much diversity of opinion. Several liberal representatives objected to the clause, on the ground that it would tend to enhance the already excessive power of the landlords; and many Opposition members arrived at a similar conclusion, under the belief that it would encourage the manufacture of fictitious votes.

Sir R. PEEL, who closed the debate on this amendment, characterised the system of fictitious voting as "abominable," and attributed many of the social evils that afflicted the country to the great stimulus to the vote manufacture afforded by the 40s. freehold qualification introduced by the Irish Reform Bill. He coincided in wishing to give an extended franchise to Ireland, but only upon such a principle as would secure its being bond fide

On a division, the clause was carried by a majority of 144 to 104; majority, 40.

On the third clause,

Sir F. THESIGER argued upon the impropriety of allowing parties to enjoy the franchise who had paid no rent, nor even possessed any beneficial interest in the property, of which they were the nominal owners. He proposed an amendment to the clause, so drawn as to render more stringent the property qualification required under the clause.

Lord J. RUSSELL persisted in believing that the £5 annual value of property, held in fee or for life, as proposed in the clause, was quite high enough by way of qualification.

Lord J. Manners, the Attorney-General, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Reynolds, and Mr. Sadleir continued the debate, after which the committee divided

For the amendment ..	..	..	..	..	30
Against ..	..	..	..	..	106

Some further amendments were afterwards proposed to the third clause, leading to a very miscellaneous debate, the contest being principally carried on between Sir J. JERVIS and Sir F. THESIGER.

The clause was ultimately adopted with some alterations.

CLAUSES 4 and 5 were agreed to without a debate. On clause 6 a long discussion arose, in the course of which a declaration was elicited from Sir G. GREY, that the bill was not designed to interfere with any species of qualification under which the franchise was at the present moment conferred. Another division took place on an amendment moved by Mr. GROGAN, which was negatived by a majority of 170 to 83.

Mr. ENTWISLE moved an amendment, reducing the rating qualification from £8 to £6 in boroughs. He called on Mr. Hume, and the English reformers, to support his motion, which would much extend the electoral basis, and even, in some instances, prevent the constituencies being considerably reduced, as they would be if the £8 rating were established.

Sir W SOMERVILLE felt compelled to oppose the amendment. He recapitulated some of the reasons and calculations that had led the Government to fix the qualification as it stood in the bill, and declared their intention of adhering to it.

Mr. FRENCH supported the amendment, as did Sir L. O'BRIEN and Colonel RAWDON.

Mr. ROEBUCK said that the small borough constituencies in England were the great hotbeds of corruption, and that the £8 qualification would create a vast number of similarly contrasted and corruptible electoral bodies in Ireland. To reduce the £8 to £6 would so widen the basis as to effect a cure of the evil to a very considerable degree.

Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL pronounced the bill under the £8 qualification a mockery of justice to Ireland.

The amendment was supported by Sir D. Norreys, Mr. Sadleir, Mr. Maurice O'Connell, and Mr. Scully. A division was then called for, and the gallery partially cleared, when Lord CASTLEREAGH expressed his hope that some member of the Government would consecond to give some reply to the arguments that had been adduced by so many Irish members in favour of the reduced qualification.

After some conversation,

Lord J. RUSSELL could see no reason why, if a £5 qualification were adopted for boroughs in Ireland, a similar qualification should not be extended to England. The bill had been under mature consideration; and he believed that, should a £6 franchise be adopted, it would be fatal to the passing of the bill.

Mr. Christopher, Mr. Roebuck, Mr. M'Cullagh, Mr. Kershaw, and Mr. Grogan continued the discussion, and the committee divided.

For the amendment	..	..	..	..	90
Against ..	..	..	..	..	142
Majority	..	..	..	..	—52

Mr GROGAN moved that the police rate and grand jury cess should be included with the poor-rate as requisites for qualification.

Lord J. RUSSELL thought the addition would form an injurious incumbrance upon the measure.

The amendment was negatived without a division.

CLAUSE 6, with some alterations, having been agreed to, the Chairman reported progress, and the House resumed. The bill is to be proceeded with, if possible, on Monday next.—Adjourned at a quarter-past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

COMMONS ENCLOSURE.

Earl GRANVILLE moved the second reading of the Commons Enclosure Bill.

Lord PORTMAN impressed on the Government the necessity of taking measures to procure more statistical information relative to agriculture.

Earl GRANVILLE said that the Government were well convinced of the utility of trustworthy agricultural statistics, and that their attention would be turned to the subject.

The bill was read a second time.

The Earl of MOUNTCASHEL moved for correspondence connected with the Earl Grey emigrant ship, and for a variety of papers bearing on the question of emigration.

Earl GREY offered no objection to the production of the required papers; but took the opportunity to state that the complaints made against the officers of emigrant ships were generally unfounded, though he admitted that in some instances it was otherwise. In one case he confessed that the owners of the ship had been fined £500.

The Earl of MOUNTCASHEL gave notice of a motion for further papers on this subject, and proceeded to answer Lord Grey's assertions, and to instance the case of the Surveyor emigrant ship as one showing the existence of abuses; when he was stopped by the CHAIRMAN, and an animating altercation took place between the noble Earl and the noble and learned Lord, each insisting that the other was "the most disorderly Peer in the House."

On the motion of Lord BROUGHAM, the Removal of Obstructions in the Corn Trade (Scotland) Bill was read a second time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

NEW MEMBER.

Col. ROMILLY took the oaths and his seat for Canterbury, in the room of Lord Albert Denison, promoted to the Upper House. The hon. and gallant member was introduced by Sir J. Romilly (the Solicitor-General) and Mr. Ord.

CONDITION OF THE POOR.

Mr. SLANEY submitted a resolution for the appointment of a standing committee on unpaid commission to consider and report on practical plans, not connected with political changes, for the social improvement of the working and poorer classes. The hon. member cited a number of reports to establish that during several years the labouring classes were deteriorating in condition, that they suffered from ignorance, disease, poverty, discomfort, and that they were sinking lower and lower in the sink of crime. The cost of crime, he said, was not less than £11,000,000 in England and Wales, to which, if poor-rates, hospital funds, expenses of prisons, &c., were added, the amount would be raised to £27,000,000, or £30,000,000 for the United Kingdom. He thought that great advantage would be derived from the spending of this sum in training the rising generation, before steeped in poverty or tainted with crime.

Mr. LACY seconded the motion.

Mr. HERBERT opposed it, on the ground that such a motion would induce the working classes to depend on Parliament for relief, instead of relying on their own exertions.

Sir G. GREY recommended the withdrawal of the motion, which he considered too vague and indefinite to be of practical utility, or to be likely to carry out the praiseworthy object which the hon. member had in view.

Mr. Sotheron, Mr. Hume, Mr. M. Milnes, Mr. Stanford, Mr. Campbell, and Lord R. Grosvenor complimented the hon. member on the philanthropic scope of his motion, but recommended him not to injure the good cause he advocated by pressing it to a division.

Mr. SLANEY yielded to the general wish of the House, and withdrew his motion

Lord J. RUSSELL appealed to Sir De Lacy Evans to postpone his motion for extending the elective franchise to all persons who pay assessed, income, or property tax, on the ground that the subject was fully discussed on Mr. Hume's motion, and that a debate on the franchise now might prejudice the Parliamentary Voters (Ireland) Bill.

Sir DE LACY EVANS responded to the appeal of the First Minister, and postponed his motion to some day after Easter.

POSTAL COMMUNICATION WITH PARIS.

Mr. MACKINNON moved for a Select Committee to ascertain the most expeditious and least expensive mode of postal communication between London and Paris.

Mr. W. COWPER said the Government had no objection to the committee, but he desired the House to remember that, in considering this question, the material point to decide was not by which route the most rapid communication could be made at any particular time, but by which route communications could be carried throughout the whole year in all weathers and seasons, so as to have the mails delivered with punctuality, and as near as possible at a certain hour. The hon. member suggested the addition to the motion of the words, "and to the north of Europe."

Mr. HUME recommended the extension of the penny postage to our colonies.

After a short conversation,

The motion was agreed to, with the addition of the words suggested by Mr. W. Cowper.

FREEMEN'S STAMP DUTIES.

Alderman SIDNEY moved for leave to bring in a Bill to abolish the payment of Fines and Stamp Duties on the admission of Freemen into Corporations of cities and boroughs in England and Wales.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL opposed the bill, on the ground that it would violate the principle of self-government conferred on the municipal corporations, by taking from them the power of retaining or abolishing, as they deem fit, the payment of fines, &c., on the admission of freemen.

Colonel SIBTHORP advised the hon. Alderman to withdraw his bill, and to confine his attention to the city of London alone.

Sir B. HALL called on the Government to redeem the pledge they had long ago given to reform the Corporation of London.

After a short discussion, Mr. Alderman SIDNEY asked leave to withdraw his motion, with the intention of renewing it on a future day.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL objected to the withdrawal, and the motion was negatived without a division.

TIMBER DUTIES.

Mr. MITCHELL moved that the House resolve itself into a committee to take into consideration the duties on wood, with the view of remitting the duty on all wood used in shipbuilding. The hon. member contended that the consumers obtained all the advantage of the reduction of the duties heretofore made, and urged the remission of the duty he asked for as an act of bare justice to the shipbuilders, now exposed to competition with all the world. He calculated that the revenue would only lose £36,000 by the remission.

Mr. HEADLAM seconded the motion.

Mr. LABOUCHERE could give no opinion one way or the other upon the question of the proposed remission; all he could give was the stereotyped answer, that it would not be consistent for him, as a member of the Government, to discuss the matter until after the Chancellor of the Exchequer's general financial statement.

Mr. CARDWELL urged the remission of the duty, on the general principle that had been adopted by the House of taking all duties off the raw material. The continuance of the duty on wood used in shipbuilding, now that shipbuilders are exposed to unlimited competition, could not be defended on any principle of justice, policy, or expediency.

Mr. HENLEY wished to know, if all the burdens were to be taken off interests exposed to general competition, where the system was to stop. This debate was an instructive one, and this proposition was the beginning of the end. Before the shipping interest was exposed to competition with the world, the House ought well to have considered what the ultimate result would be.

Mr. MITCHELL appeared inclined to withdraw his motion, but honourable members around him, seeing the Ministerial benches almost unoccupied, advised him to take advantage of the state of the House, and to insist on a division. He followed their advice, and there were—

For going into committee	..	..	..	..	45
Against it	..	..	..	..	32
Majority against the Government			..	..	—13

Mr. MITCHELL postponed going into committee until that day fortnight.

RAILWAY AUDIT.

Mr. STANFORD rose to move for leave to bring in a Bill for the more effectual Audit of Railway Accounts, but, as he was proceeding with his speech, the House was counted out at ten o'clock, there being but thirty-one members present.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock.

The Civil Bill, Boroughs (Ireland), Bill was read a second time.

PUBLIC HEALTH (SCOTLAND).

LORD ADVOCATE gave to the Lord Advocate to bring in a Bill to Facilitate Procedure in the Court of Session in Scotland, and likewise a Bill to make more effectual provision for regulating the Police of towns and populous places in Scotland, and for cleansing, paving, draining, lighting, and improving the same; also a Bill for Promoting Public Health in Scotland.

MARRIAGES BILL.

The adjourned debate on the second reading of the Marriages Bill was resumed by Mr. HOPE. The honourable member opposed the bill, contending that, should the Legislature pass it, they would have to legalise hereafter all the marriages that had been celebrated in violation of the existing laws.

Mr. S. HERBERT considered that, balancing the evils, it would be a less one to pass the bill than to reject it, and therefore he felt himself justified in voting for the second reading, though he would do so with considerable reluctance.

Mr. ROEBUCK opposed the bill, which he thought would, if passed, break down the existing affectionate feelings between a man and his wife's sister, and between the wife and her sister substituting feelings of jealousy and suspicion.

Mr. SPOONER advocated the bill, on the ground that it was calculated to confer a benefit upon the middle and humble classes.

Mr. R. PALMER argued that the measure was contrary to Divine law; and that, even if it could be proved that some advantage would accrue to society by passing it, the Legislature would still be bound to throw the shield of protection over the wife's sister, to save her from suspicion, and enable her to retain those affectionate relations that exist naturally between sisters and between an aunt and her sister's children.

Lord MAHON opposed the bill.

Mr. M. MILES spoke against it.

Mr. COCKBURN supported the measure. It appeared to be admitted by common consent that the question should be decided without any reference to Scriptural authority. (Cries of "No, no.") Why, then, the hon. member for Abingdon, at the very outset of his argument, admitted that the matter was one of extreme doubt, so much so that it ought to be settled by the Church of England; but that was impossible, when they came to consider the different sects existing in the Church itself upon these topics Besides, the Church had quite enough to settle upon their own hands. After the lapse of two hundred years, a most important question had to be referred to the Church in the shape of a lay tribunal. But supposing the Church did settle it, would the Dissenters be satisfied, as that body were unanimously in favour of the present bill? The bill now relieved the clergy from the necessity of celebrating these marriages, and he thought this a wise course, and that the question would become, as it ought to be, one of conscience.

Mr. SHELL was not aware whether his learned friend was a member of the Established Church (hear, hear), but he should say, from his speech, he was a Christian "unattached." (Loud laughter.) The theological part of the question had been exhausted by two forensic theologians. (Laughter.) His objections to the measure were of a social character. He could not give his assent to a bill the effect of which would be to make the pathway of one sister to the nuptial altar over the coffin of the other—which would teach women to associate the idea of a wedding garment with a sister's shroud. Should the bill pass, of what degree would the House pause? Would they permit a man to marry the daughter of his wife? The right hon. gentleman asserted that the religious members of the Establishment, and in England were against the bill, as it was abhorrent to the people of Scotland, and the people of Ireland were decidedly hostile to it.

Mr. ANSTEY contended that the marriages in question were not offences against the law of God, but only offences against an act of Parliament. This was a question of religious liberty affecting Roman Catholics and all classes of Dissenters, and therefore he should support the bill in all its stages.

Mr. CORDEN said he had watched the tendency of the debates on this question for several years, and he came to the conclusion that the opposition raised against the bill originated, and was maintained, with a particular party of the Established Church, who desired to carry us back towards Papacism, to genuflexions, and all the errors and absurdities of the mediæval Church. This measure would not interfere with any religious opinions in England, Scotland, or Ireland, because it was only a permissive one. There was no authority in the Bible condemnatory of these marriages, and the attempt to make them illegal by Act of Parliament was a violation of conscience and of religious liberty, and was in direct opposition to public opinion in this country. The House would not tolerate setting up the canonical law against the Bible, and therefore the religious grounds upon which the bill had been at first opposed had been abandoned.

Mr. GOULBURN denied that the religious grounds of opposition to the bill had been abandoned. On the contrary, these grounds had been emphatically relied on during the course of the debate. By the law of Leviticus these marriages were prohibited, and on that law he based his opposition to the bill. The right honourable gentleman put several cases resting on the same principle as marriage with the sister of a deceased wife, to prove that, should that marriage be legalised, the Legislature should go many steps further, and it would be impossible to foresee where they could stop.

Mr. J. S. WORTLEY replied, and the House divided.

For the second reading of the bill	..	..	..	..	183
Against it ..	..	..	..	..	130
Majority for the bill	..	..	..	..	—53

The bill was read a second time, and the committee was fixed for Wednesday next.

Mr. FOX MAULE gave notice that he would move a clause that the bill should not extend to Scotland.

NEWSPAPER STAMPS.

Mr. SCHOLEFIELD moved for an estimate of the annual expense of collecting the stamp duty on newspapers, stating the number and wages of persons employed at Somerset House, and in Edinburgh and Manchester, in stamping the paper; the annual cost of machinery, and the expense of clerks, including those who receive the money for stamps.—Agreed to.—Adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

NEW PEERS.

Lord Londesborough and Lord Overstone took the oaths and their seats. Lord Londesborough was introduced by Lord Foley and Lord Eddisbury, and Lord Overstone by Lord Portman and Lord Campbell.

REMOVAL OF OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE CORN TRADE (SCOTLAND) BILL

Lord BROUGHAM moved the committal of this bill.

The Duke of RICHMOND urged the postponement of the bill until May, in order to give time to consult the landlords of Scotland on the subject.

Lord BROUGHAM had every wish that the bill should receive the amplest consideration, but if he were to postpone it until May he would risk losing the bill. He would move the committal now, and would not object to postpone the next stage until after Easter.

The bill then passed through committee.

PARTY PROCESSIONS (IRELAND) BILL.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE moved the bringing up the report of the amendments to this bill. He suggested to the noble Duke (Wellington) the propriety of permitting the report to be now received, and of moving the clause of which he had given notice on the third reading.

The DUKE of WELLINGTON agreed to the suggestion of the noble Marquis, and gave notice that on the third reading of the bill he should move a clause preventing any person appearing in arms in Ireland out of his house.

Lord MONTEAGLE gave notice of his intention to move certain clauses on the third reading

The report was then brought up and agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

SUNDAY TRADING.

The Bill to prevent Sunday Trading was read a second time, and referred to a select committee.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

ADMISSION OF JEWS INTO PARLIAMENT.

Mr. P. WOOD gave notice that on an early day he should move the appointment of a committee to search the journals of the House for any precedents which relate to the admission of Jews to a seat in the House without being previously sworn on the Holy Gospel; also, to inquire into and report upon the circumstances under which Mr Desdes, in 1833, was allowed to make an affirmation to the effect of the usual oaths on taking his seat; and to inquire into and report upon the legislative enactments which allow Jews and persons not professing Christianity to make affirmation in courts of law, and be sworn on the Bible where oaths on the Evangelists are usually required.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. B. OSBORNE wished to call the attention of the House to a matter of privilege. He had seen that day in the Morning Chronicle an advertisement to the effect that the hon. member for Cambridge (Mr. Campbell) intended to call the attention of the House to a matter that occurred in a recent debate in that House. He (Mr. B. Osborne) wished to know whether it was competent for the hon. member to comment upon a former debate

The SPEAKER said an hon. member could not comment on a former debate without transgressing the rules of the House.

Mr. HUME asked whether it was proper for any hon member to advertise in the public papers on such a subject? (Great laughter, which drowned the reply of the Speaker.)

Mr. CAMPBELL explained that he had not applied the epithet "low people" to the inhabitants of Chelsea and Hammersmith, on a former occasion, as attributed to him by the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Osborne).

Mr. OSBORNE accepted the explanation as satisfactory.

REDUCTION OF LIGHT DUES.

Mr. FORSTER wished to know whether it was the intention of the right hon. gentleman, the President of the Board of Trade, to bring in any measure this session for the reduction of the lighthouse dues chargeable upon sea-going vessels.

Mr. LABOUCHERE said that certainly when the subject of the Trinity Board was before the House, last session, he had incidentally alluded to the light dues, hoping to lessen the expenses which now resulted from them, but he had this session introduced several important measures connected with the mercantile marine, not one of which had he had an opportunity of bringing before the House, and he should therefore feel perfectly unjustified in bringing any other matter before the House until these were disposed of.

THE NEW LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

In reply to Colonel Sibthorp, Lord JOHN RUSSELL said that Lord Campbell had accepted the office of Lord Chief Justice at the same salary as Lord Denman—namely, £8000 per annum. He ought also to state that the arrangement with respect to the distribution of the salary of the office had been made by the Lords of the Treasury without any bill being passed for the purpose in Parliament; but he should presently give notice of a bill for that purpose. It was not proper to bring in any measure without consulting Lord Denman, and he might say that his bill would have Lord Denman's full approval. With respect to Lord Campbell, he had been informed at the time that her Majesty's pleasure had been notified to him that the salary would be £8000 per annum. He might also state that it was intended to reduce the salary of the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas to £7000 per annum. With respect to the first part of the question, he could not state that it was generally intended to reduce all the salaries of officers appointed since the last session of Parliament, but some salaries would be reduced, and those officers whom it was intended to reduce had received notice.

Mr. HUME wished to know if the pension which Lord Campbell was to receive had been settled?

Lord J. RUSSELL said that no arrangements had yet been come to.

Colonel SIBTHORP wished to know if Lord Campbell would still continue to be a Minister?

Lord J. RUSSELL said that Lord Campbell had already ceased to hold a seat in the Cabinet.

ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

Lord NUGENT asked Sir De Lacy Evans whether he might be understood as engaging himself, in any event, to press forward to a discussion and division, on the earliest day after the Easter recess, the measure which he has postponed on Tuesday evening last, respecting an extension of the elective franchise.

Sir DE LACY EVANS replied that it was his intention to press the measure, but if any unforeseen circumstance should arise to prevent him, the noble Lord was at liberty to bring forward the subject himself

Lord NUGENT said the House would perhaps allow him to give a conditional notice. That, in the event of his hon. and gallant friend not considering it necessary to bring forward the question on an early day after Easter, he should feel it his duty to give notice that on an early day after that period he should move for leave to bring in a bill to the effect that all occupiers of dwelling-houses assessed to the poor-rates or taxes should be qualified to vote for members of Parliament. (Hear, hear.)

The Ecclesiastical Commission Bill was read a first time.

KILRUSH UNION.

Mr. P. SCROPE called the attention of the House to the social state of the union of Kilrush, in the county of Clare, for the purpose of moving for the appointment of a Special Commission to inquire into the same, and into the means that might be adopted for its amelioration. He hoped that some suggestion might be made, or some plan devised by such a commission to rescue from starvation and the grave the unhappy population of this union. The population was 80,000 in 1841, and the valuation in that year was under £50,000; and though it would appear to be a densely populated district, the average number of acres per head was considerably larger than in many other unions.

Lord J. RUSSELL and Sir G. GREY both opposed the motion, on the ground that it would only tend to excite delusive hopes; that the Government were doing all that they could to ameliorate the condition of the Irish unions generally; that, therefore, they could not legislate or make inquiry with a view to a single union only, particularly as there was no additional information to be gained by the inquiry; and that they had reason to expect most advantageous results from the operation of the Encumbered Estates Act, by transferring property from insolvent to solvent proprietors.

Mr. FAGAN and Lord O'NEILL DUNNE also opposed the motion.

Mr. Horsman, Mr. Monsell, Mr. Hume, and Lord Naas were in favour of inquiry.

After some further discussion the House divided.

The motion was accordingly lost.

THE BALLOT.

Mr. H. BERKELEY moved for leave to bring in a Bill to protect the Parliamentary electors of Great Britain and Ireland from undue influence by the use of the Ballot.

Sir G. GREY opposed the motion; and, after a short discussion, the House divided, when there appeared—

For the motion ..	..	..	..	..	121

The motion was accordingly lost.—Adjourned at half-past twelve o'clock.

LEICESTER-SQUARE SOUP KITCHEN.—The subjoined report of this charity, which, during the past quarter, has relieved no fewer than 86,807 persons, contains statistical information bearing upon the destitution of the metropolis, of considerable value and interest to the benevolent and wealthy. There are few public institutions, we believe, whose efforts in the cause of philanthropy have been attended with such signal success:—

FIRE ON BOARD A STEAMSHIP.—On Saturday night a fire broke out in the Trident steam ship, the property of the General Steam Navigation Company, lying alongside of St Katherine's Dock Steamers' Wharf. Whilst the crew were packing goods in the after hold, a box filled with fusees fell into that compartment of the ship, and the contents exploded. Two of the ship's crew who were in the hold were frightfully burned, and were removed to the hospital, where they remain in a precarious state. The ship's company and wharf labourers succeeded in getting the fire extinguished.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

JOHN SADLEIR, ESQ., M.P.

One of the general election of 1847, Mr. Sadleir was invited by requisition to become a candidate for the representation of the town of Carlow. He had not previously taken any part in public affairs, but was favourably known as the founder, in 1837, of a prosperous joint-stock bank in the county of Tipperary—as auditor and manager of some of the largest estates in the south of Ireland—as having been successful in calling the attention of English capitalists to the securities of Irish land, finding lucrative employment in England for Irishmen of character and ability, and as having retired in 1846 from successful practice as a solicitor.

His national effort in 1847 to return Irishmen for Ireland, led to the invitation to Mr Sadleir. He came forward as a Liberal, desirous to obtain for Ireland municipal and political equality with England: but he gave no pledges, and, after a sharp contest, was returned as an independent member. He is a Liberal, but does not properly belong to the whip either of the Government or the Radical party. He is in favour of the ballot and an extension of the franchise; he voted for Mr. Hume's motion on the 28th ult., and, in the last session, for the Parliamentary Oaths Bill, which would enable Jews to take their seats in the Legislature. But the sub ect to which Mr. Sadleir has especially given his attention, and upon which he has now a motion upon the books, is the obstacles to the sale and transfer of land in Ireland. On the 17th of April,

THE "TITANIA" SCHOONER YACHT, BUILT FOR MR. ROBERT STEPHENSON, C.E.

1849, he brought forward his first motion upon the subject; and in a long and able speech, supported by facts with which his professional experience amply furnished him, pointed out that no plan of poor-law, no amendment of municipal institutions, nor extension of the franchise, could effectually better the condition of the people of Ireland, unless the obstacles were removed which stood in the way of the sale and transfer of land. These obstacles were the endless involvements and costs of Irish Chancery suits, no unusual duration of which was 20 years. Every individual who had the remotest or most indirect interest in the property, even for debts about which there was no dispute, must be brought before the court, and every separate fact was liable to be made the subject of a small equity suit on its own account. In the case of "Gardiner against Blessington" there were 184 of these little charges before the court: the costs in a second case amounted to £20,000; in a third, to sixty-two per cent. on the entire rental of the property in dispute, and which amounted to £800 per annum. As to titles, the searches were endless; and even in sales under the court it was, in nine cases out of ten, a condition that the purchaser should not object to some flaw—perhaps an obscure will—which practically left him, though buying under the court, and after all the costs and siftings of searchers, subject to future litigation, if any one should be found to let in another Chancery suit through this gap in the title. Besides these grand hindrances, there was but an imperfect registration of deeds, and no registration at all of encumbrances and judgment debts. To get rid of these manifold costs, difficulties, and pitfalls, in the way of the transfer of property in Ireland, Mr. Sadleir recommended the appointment of two or three commissioners empowered to act without the tedious forms of Chancery, and to give, after an investigation of claims, a perfect title, and which could not after be disputed to the purchaser. This recommendation was subsequently adopted in the amended Encumbered Estates Bill, to which Mr. Sadleir, who had opposed the first Encumbered Estates Bill because it still left the whole matter to be brought through Chancery, and made minor mortgagees practically powerless to compel a sale, gave his cordial support; as he also did to the bill brought forward by the Solicitor-General on the 27th of April last, to empower persons in Ireland, having a limited interest in lands, to grant leases, conferring a Parliamentary title, for 99 years, or for shorter terms. This power as to leases Mr. Sadleir had also urged, in his speech on the 17th, as essential to the improved cultivation of the land in Ireland. He has always strenuously advocated the adoption of such a system of tenant-right as shall give the farmer a claim easily recoverable for the value of improvements in case of removal. He opposed the rate in aid, and urged instead, that £100,000 should be raised by sale of a portion of such estates as were in arrear of poor-rate. He voted for the Government measures for the better security of life and property in Ireland in 1847 and 1848, under the conviction that tranquility and absence of political excitement are essential to social amelioration and improvement of the country; but he opposed the Government measure of Feb. 9, 1849, for the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act, on the ground that it was not called for by the circumstances of the country, and would tend to create false apprehensions as to the safety of life and property in Ireland. In short, Mr. Sadleir's most earnest desire is to see the land resources of Ireland developed: with that object he has exerted himself to make land easily marketable. He voted with Mr. Osborne on his motion of last session as to the Irish Church; he is opposed to its continuance as a state establishment in that country, and he has repeatedly urged upon the Government the importance of sanitary measures for Ireland. Early in the present session, in a speech which fixed the attention of the House and took the Solicitor-General for Ireland by surprise, he brought forward the circumstances under which nine of the leading Catholic gentry of his native county were set aside from the special jury in the case of Callanan against Cameron; and, in committee on the Irish Franchise Bill, he divided the House for a £5 instead of an £8 rating, in a minority of 90.

MR. JOHN SADLEIR, M.P. FOR CARLOW.

Mr. Sadleir is connected with the City as chairman of the London and County Bank, the success of which is in a great measure owing to his exertions.

He was born in 1814, at Shrove Hill, in the county of Tipperary, and was educated at Clongowes College, Ireland; is the third son of Clement William Sadleir, of Shrove Hill, and is unmarried.

It is worthy of note, that, in the Parliament for the three kingdoms called by Oliver Cromwell, and which met at Westminster, on the 3rd of September, 1654, and continued to the 22nd of January, 1655, and to which Ireland sent twenty-four members for counties and six for cities and towns—the number in the previous Irish Parliament having been 232—Thomas Sadleir, ancestor of the present member for Carlow, in conjunction with Daniel Astell, represented Caterlough, Wexford, Kilkenny, and Queen's County. Caterlough has since—it may be for the ease of English tongues—been smoothed down to Carlow; so that Mr. Sadleir now represents the same constituency one of his ancestors sat for two hundred years since.

The accompanying Portrait, an excellent likeness, is from a Daguerréotype by Kilburn, of Regent-street.

LAUNCH OF THE "TITANIA" SCHOONER YACHT.

THE launch of this vessel was attended with circumstances of more than common interest. It is not usual to launch vessels of any class in any considerable degree of completeness, but only in such a forward state that they can afterwards be rigged, fitted up and made ready for sea, and finished after a considerable time. In this instance, however, the Titania was completed for sea on the stocks. Her masts, topmasts, and all spars were in their place; her rigging was complete; her ballast on board; her water-tanks, anchors, chain cables, cook-house, carpenter's stores, boatswain's stores, were all shipped; her cabins completely fitted and furnished: in short, the vessel went direct from the stocks into the water a finished vessel, ready to proceed immediately out to sea.

To many it was a matter of great doubt whether a vessel fully loaded with all her weights could be launched with safety from the building slip; but the result proved the propriety of the plan; for, immediately on receiving her name from the lady who auspiciously performed the ceremony, the Titania, fairy-like, began to glide along the ways, and rapidly descended into her new element.

In the water the Titania very much resembles the Bermudan schooners, of which one hears so much: she looks long, low, and rakish, with her two tall masts sloping considerably aft. But the actual shape of her hull in the water is of a very different form from them. She is formed on the wave-principle of Mr. Scott Russell, and is in many respects very remarkable. She is entirely of iron, and the greater part of her ballast is built into the vessel, so as to form almost part of it. She also possesses the extraordinary roominess, or capacity inside, for cabins and accommodation, which is characteristic of vessels on this principle. Although only 100 tons measurement, this vessel has a deck that looks like 150, and accommodation below such as few vessels possess of double her tonnage. There is a large saloon 21 ft. long, 17 ft. wide, and 7 ft. 6 in. high. This is fitted up chastely and elegantly with fancy woods, by Messrs Crace, and furnished with every convenience. Next to it is the owner's private cabin, 9 ft. by 7 ft., and 7 ft. 6 in. high; there is a dressing-room, 7 ft. by 7 ft.; a gue-ts' cabin, 11 ft. by 7 ft.; a captain's cabin, 6 ft. 8 in. by 6 ft. 6 in.; and three other cabins, besides steward's pantry, servants' rooms, and every other accommodation.

The external appearance of the vessel is as handsome as her interior: her shape is made of the fine form calculated to go through the water with least disturbance, and she has every look of a good sea-boat. All her lines are smooth and even, and of good workmanship. She was built by Messrs. Robinson and Russell, at their ship-building-yard and engine-works, at Millwall, where the launch took place on the 1st inst. The sails were cut by Eversfield, of Gravesend; and the masts and spars were supplied by Messrs. Ferguson. The Titania has been built for the eminent engineer Mr. Stephenson, who has just completed the Britannia Bridge, and is a specimen of English shipbuilding of which even he need not be ashamed. We forgot to mention that the figure-head is a beautiful bust of the fairy-queen, modelled by Mr. John Bell, the eminent sculptor, and carved by Messrs Hulter.

The following are the chief dimensions of the Titania:—

Length of keel ..	..	..	88 ft. 2 3-8 in
Breadth of beam ..	..	..	18 ft. 0 in.
Draft of water (mean) ..	..	..	10 ft. 0 in.
Tonnage (old law) ..	..	..	99 36—94 tons

THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA.

(From a Correspondent.)

As public attention and enterprise are now particularly directed to the above spot, some few details and observations I have made during my residence there these last six months, may not be uninteresting to your numerous readers. The accompanying is a Sketch of the ancient Spanish fortification at Chagres, situated at the mouth of the river of that name. It was built in the seventeenth century, when the present Republic of New Granada was under the dominion of Spain. There are still within its walls many relics which are of great interest to the antiquarian. Emigration to "El Dorado" in California has caused much bustle in this place, and the natives (half Spanish, half Indian) are beginning to be initiated into the shrewdness and tricks of Brother Jonathan. When passengers make bargains to be conveyed up the river to Cruces, it is necessary to be much on their guard, and procure a written contract for their passage, setting forth the principal items of the agreement, which must be visé'd by the alcalde at Chagres, with his signature. Unless they do this, the patron or helmsman of the canoe will frequently absent himself at some of the numerous villages on the river, and refuse to proceed until some further advance is made beyond the price agreed on for being carried to Cruces. The price averages about 10 dollars per man for passage only. The emigrant has to supply his own provision. The time occupied in the voyage is about four days; the distance fifty-six miles. This is probably one of the most picturesque rivers in the whole Isthmus. Numerous wild flowers grow spontaneously on the borders of the stream, and give the place an appearance of an earthly paradise. The winged choristers of heaven luxuriate amongst the beauties bountifully provided for their enjoyment.

When the emigrant arrives at Cruces, if he has not much baggage, he should proceed across the Cordillera Mountains, on foot, the distance being about twenty-two miles. There are numerous haciendas on the way between Cruces and Panama, where the traveller can stop during the night, if the journey should be too long for him in one day, but it is generally accomplished in that time. To hire mules at Cruces is expensive, and no fixed price can be named; sometimes one can be hired for ten dollars, whilst at others, when there is a great demand, the price rises to twenty dollars, or even twenty-five dollars. Parties should take as little baggage as possible, and proceed on foot.

The view of the city and bay of Panama is very beautiful as seen from the mountains. There is, however, no harbour at Panama for shipping, which is a great obstacle to its future greatness. All the passengers and freight are embarked and disembarked in small boats, at a distance of three or four miles from the steamers and other vessels, which are obliged to anchor off the small island of Toboga. There are some good harbours a little to the south of Panama: for instance, the Villa Antigua, of Panama, from whence the railroad is now in course of construction by Messrs. Howland and Aspinwall, of New York, to connect the Atlantic and Pacific, having Leman Bay on the Atlantic, and Old Panama on the Pacific, as its termini.

I can corroborate the statement that gold is found near Panama, having seen specimens of it on the spot prior to my leaving, last November. Much gold was found on the Atlantic side of the Isthmus. It is collected by the Indians from the Riobre, a small stream about sixty miles N.W. of Chagres, and near the harbour of Bocca del Toure (or, the Bull's Mouth). I have seen specimens as fine and pure as any that have arrived from California; and am convinced that along the whole chain of mountains running from the Isthmus to the Sierra Nevada there are abundant deposits of the precious metal. I would not advise any European, however, to stop here to obtain it, as the climate is, at all seasons of the year, very unhealthy; and, though gold might be got, it would be at the expense of health or life.

NEW LETTER-BOX AT PARIS.

THE reduction of the rate of postage in France has suggested the adoption of a new form of Letter-box from Belgium, a specimen of which has been erected in the Rue de la Paix, at Paris. It consists of a bronzed columnar design, raised upon a granite socle; the opening for the receipt of the letters being in the upper portion of the column, and having a projection to keep out the rain; a door for the removal of the letters being provided towards the base.

CAPTURE OF A WHALE.—On the morning of Wednesday week, a lugger brought into Margate Harbour a fine male specimen of the Cetacea genus, Rorqualis borealis: it measured about 60 feet in length, and was alive on the previous morning, when it was captured. The under jaw and throat were beautifully and characteristically plicated.

CURIOSITIES.—XIV.

DR. DEE'S SHEW-STONE.

At the sale of the effects of J. H. S. Pigott, Esq., at Brockley Hall, Somersetshire, in October, 1849, and which we described and illustrated in No. 396 of our Journal, the Shew-Stone of the celebrated astrologer Dr. Dee was one of the curiosities disposed of. In the annexed Engraving we have given a careful representation of the black stone, in its case of stamped leather; and we cannot do better than quote the notice written and pasted at the back of the stone, by

DR. DEE'S SHEW-STONE.

Horace Walpole, for we should mention this relic was from the Strawberry-hill collection:—

"DR. DEE'S STONE.

"The black stone into which Dr. Dee used to call his spirits by his book. This stone was mentioned in the catalogue of the collection of the Earls of Peterborough, from whom it came to Lady Elizabeth Germaine. H. W.

"Kelly was Dr. Dee's associate, and is mentioned with this very stone in 'Hudibras,' chapter 2, canto 3, verses 6-31. Kelly did all his feats upon the devil's looking-glass, or stone."

The stone is eight inches long, and seven inches and a half across at its widest part.

In the British Museum is another relic of this same astrologer, Dr. Dee—his Magic Mirror—being a piece of rock crystal, of somewhat smoky tint, fashioned into a globular form; and from Sir Walter Scott's interesting little book, "Demonology and Witchcraft," it would appear that the astrologer, in divining by means of the Magic Mirror or Shew-Stone, did not himself pretend to see the spirit supposed to be imprisoned in the stone, "but the task of viewer or reader was entrusted to a third party—a boy or a girl usually under the years of puberty." Dr. Dee was raised by his associates, both in fortune and reputation; and Kelly was the person who acted as his viewer.

NEW STRAND THEATRE.

Mr. Tom Taylor has dramatised for this theatre the substantive story of Goldsmith's ever-delightful "Vicar of Wakefield;" omitting, we believe, nothing but the character of the Vicar's eldest son. While Mr. Taylor is to be praised for the accuracy with which he has accomplished his task, we cannot flatter him with the assurance that he has triumphed over all its difficulties. He has, indeed, put a novel on the stage but not a drama. The public must likely will not expect the latter, and will prefer the dialogue and situations of Goldsmith to suppression and substitution, though in order to compression and effect, Mr. Taylor has distributed his subject into three parts, or acts: the first, all domestic happiness and rural sports—the hayfield—the festival and the dance, Sir Roger de Coverley in the ascendant; the second, the shadow of destiny Olivia's abduction—frauds at fair time—and the loss of confidence; the third, Olivia's return, and the scenes in prison, with the full reparation of all injuries. Mr. Farren and Mrs. Glover perform Dr. Primrose and his lady, so pompous, so pathetic. Olivia has fallen to the lot of Mrs. Stirling, who, acting it admirably throughout, gained a triumph at the end, when, as the returning penitent, she clasped her father's knees and wrestled for his pardon. Mr. and Mrs. Leigh Murray, as Burchell and Mrs. Skeggs, were telling; Mr. Norton, as Squire Thornhill, was effective; and the two junior Farrens, as Moses and Ephraim Jenkinson, were not much amiss; whilst Farmer Flamborough was capitally performed by Mr. Bender. It is needless to say that, thus supported, the drama was most successful.

A dispute has arisen on the subject of this piece between Mr. Stirling Coyne and the manager. The former gentleman had written, in 1847, a drama on the same subject for Mr. Webster, the perusal of which naturally fell to Mr. Farren as stage-manager. That piece not having been yet produced at the Haymarket, and Mr. Farren having since become manager of the New Strand, he applied to the author last Christmas for permission to perform it. But the piece was still in the hands of Mr Webster, who declined to transfer it. Under these circumstances Mr Farren applied to Mr Taylor for a dramatisation of the subject, and that gentleman accepted the commission, with a full knowledge that Mr. S. Coyne had already done the same thing, and also that Mr. Albert Smith had intended to do it—the last-named gentleman having formally transferred to Mr. Taylor his "property" in the notion. Mr. Stirling Coyne thinks that he had still more "property" in the "realised idea," and that the admission of "property" in the one case justifies him and Mr. Webster in thinking that they have been greatly injured in the other. All parties to the dispute, however, appeared to have overlooked the fact, that about some three-and-thirty years ago Mr. Thomas Dibdin dramatised "the Vicar of Wakefield" for the Surrey Theatre; and, if we recollect rightly, the success of the subject there induced a similar attempt, about the same time, at another theatre. This consideration may lead to the reflection with what slender right any man may claim a "property" in any "notion" grounded upon a work, the original authorship of which belongs to another.

SUPPLY OF NEW YORK WITH WATER.

THE CROTON AQUEDUCT.

One of the most urgent questions of the day, affecting the social condition of the metropolis, relates to the best mode of providing the population with an adequate supply of wholesome water. Pure water is one of the necessaries of life; and it is no longer doubted, except, perhaps, by the proprietors of Water Company shares, that London holds a subordinate place among the great cities of the world, in its arrangements for meeting this primary want. Whether for domestic use, for cleansing the streets and sewers, or for extinguishing fires, the two millions and a quarter of our population are not cared for in a manner proportionate to their numbers, their wealth, or the boasted intelligence of the age. In this respect, the practical energy of our transatlantic descendants is far outstripping us. Several of the great cities of the United States have taken up the matter in earnest, sparing no expense, shrinking from no difficulties, and resting only when they had poured into every street, and almost into every apartment, an unlimited and unfailing supply of water.

The Croton Aqueduct, which supplies the city of New York, is a stupendous work, which is well calculated to arouse to emulation the capitals of Europe. New York, as is well known, is the largest and most important city in the western republic, and stands on Manhattan Island, at the mouth of the Hudson or North River. It contained, in 1770, only 22,000 inhabitants; it now numbers, including the suburbs, nearly 500,000, having extended with almost unexampled rapidity during the last 35 years. The want of water was early felt, and various expedients were adopted to remedy it. At one period, not very remote, pure soft water was carried from house to house in casks, and retailed to the inhabitants at their doors like milk. The first proposals to establish water-works were made in the year 1774, but failed to engage the public attention, through the revolutionary war which broke out two years after. Matters remained in this state for 40 years, during which the city was frequently visited by desolating epidemics, and the inhabitants incurred an aggregate of expense more than sufficient to have secured for them an ample supply. During the next 20 years, various projects were formed, and successively abandoned; until, in the year 1835, Commissioners were appointed, and duly empowered, by a vote of 11,367 in favour of the project, and 3968 against it, to convey to the city the water of the Croton River, a distance of more than 40 miles, by means of a covered aqueduct. After the most pertinacious opposition from interested parties, the great work was at length begun in 1837, and its completion celebrated on the 14th of October, 1842. A costly bridge has since been found necessary to perfect the design, the erection of which was not completed until last year.

This is, perhaps, the noblest work of the kind in any country. Exclusive of the grand reservoir, the Croton Lake (which is five miles long), the length of the aqueduct, from the upper dam to the distributing reservoir on Murray hill, is 40½ miles. The dam crosses the Croton River six miles from its confluence with the Hudson, forming an artificial lake of 400 acres in area, and giving to the surface of the water an elevation of 166 feet above the mean tidal line in the Hudson River. From the great dam the aqueduct runs southerly, through the valley of the Hudson, to the edge of the Harlem River valley, consisting, through the whole distance of thirty-two miles, of one continuous underground canal of stone and brick masonry.

The noble Bridge, represented in the annexed Engraving, conducts the water by means of two pipes, each of thirty-six inches diameter, across the Harlem River; the pipes lying above the arches of the bridge, and being surmounted by the roadway. In this fine structure there are eight arches over the river, with a span of 80 feet each, springing from piers 20 feet wide at the spring line, which is 60 feet above the surface at high water. The under sides of the arches are 100 feet from the surface of the river. There are several other arches springing from the ground, of 50 feet span each. The whole structure is of hewn granite.

From the Harlem River, the conduit of masonry is resumed, till again interrupted by iron pipes in the valley of the Manhattan River, by which the island on which the city is built is separated from the continent. It finally reaches the great receiving reservoir on York-hill, about five miles from the City Hall. This structure embraces an area of thirty-seven acres, being 1826 feet long, and 836 feet wide. It is divided by a cross wall into two separate compartments, each of which may be used as a single reservoir by itself, while the other may be emptied for inspection and repair. It is formed of immense embankments of solid stone masonry. The depth of water is twenty feet, and the contents 150,000,000 of gallons. From this vast storehouse, the water is conveyed by cast-iron pipes, two miles, to the distributing reservoir on Murray-hill, which covers an area of more than four acres, being 420 feet square; it also is divided into compartments. It is built of granite, in the Egyptian style of architecture, and from its massive proportions presents an imposing appearance. A promenade, enclosed by iron railings, is formed on the top of the walls. The depth of water is thirty feet; the contents are 20,000,000 gallons, and the surface is 115 feet above mean tide.

From this source the water is conveyed by large iron pipes through the central parts of the city, and distributed to the streets, and thence to the houses, by means of smaller pipes, more than two hundred miles of which have probably by this time been laid down, while their length is daily increasing. From these pipes there is an uninterrupted flow of water, yielding a superabundant supply to all the apartments of every floor; allowing without stint for the washing of the streets, and even of the fronts of the houses, during the heat of summer, and providing instantaneously for extinguishing fires. There are fire-hydrants throughout the city, to which the hose may be attached in from three to five minutes, and the water made to play, by means of a pipe, upon the tops of the highest houses. Fire-engines are being gradually dispensed with as unnecessary. The losses by fire since the introduction of the Croton water amount to about half what they were before. The number of fires increases with the growth of the city—the amount of property consumed diminishes. The effect has been to cause a diminution amounting to 25 per cent. in the rate of fire insurance.

More than 600 hydrants, for the free use of the population, are distributed through the city, and in many parts are beautiful fountains, the number of which has procured for New York the appellation of the "Fountain City." The water in these fountains is thrown to the height of sixty or seventy feet; and such is the power gained, that at the Harlem River bridge, a 12-inch pipe, with a 6-inch jet, throws the water, in calm weather, to the height of 100 or 110 feet. There are no waterworks connected with the water-rent.

The engineering difficulties of this work were very great; the country traversed being mostly made up of rocky ridges and ravines, which had to be excavated, tunnelled, and embanked, at an enormous expense. There are sixteen tunnels, varying in length from 100 to 1000 feet each. There are 114 culverts of solid masonry. A large portion of the aqueduct is built of stone. It has a descent of thirteen inches and a quarter per mile, and will discharge 60,000,000 of gallons in twenty-four hours. The various precautions and expedients adopted to guard against failure, and secure the object aimed at, reflect the highest credit upon the engineers and commissioners. The supply has never failed in the greatest drought, and is supposed to be adequate to meet the wants of three times the existing population.

The water is very pure, containing, by analysis, 2 9-10 grains of carbonate of lime and of ammonia, and 3 grains of vegetable matter to the gallon. The water formerly used in the city contained 125 grains of foreign matter to the gallon.

The cost of this magnificent structure has been 12,500,000 dollars, or upwards of three millions sterling; the interest of which is 665 000 dollars, or £150,000. This is partly defrayed by water-rates, and partly out of the general income of the city. A sinking fund provides for the gradual repayment of the capital. The income from rates, for 1847, was about £36,000, and was expected to increase at the rate of 35 per cent. per annum. This amount was received from 7171 private dwellings, and 1141 manufactories and other large establishments.

The Aqueduct passes through the ground of the celebrated American author, Washington Irving, whose mansion faces the Hudson, a few miles above New York.

In England we have no work of the above class which can be compared with the Croton Aqueduct. The enterprise of the last few years has, however, given rise to a work which makes some approach to the Transatlantic wonder. For example, the town of Boston, in Lincolnshire, is now supplied, by means of iron pipes fifteen miles in extent, with water, reputed to be the finest in England, from a reservoir at Keal Hill, covering forty acres.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 9, 1850.

We are glad to see that the question of National Education has lately received more attention than has been bestowed upon it during the last three or four years, and that the public mind, even in quarters that were not formerly altogether favourable to it, has been predisposed to consider it more fully and carefully. In the House of Commons Mr. W. J. Fox has obtained leave to bring in a bill, after receiving the compliments of the Prime Minister for the eloquence, moderation, and sagacity which he displayed in his treatment of the subject; and in the House of Lords an interesting discussion has taken place, in which the Government, through the medium of the Marquis of Lansdowne, defended itself from the charge of being inimical, in respect of education, to the claims of the Church of England. Hitherto there has been a great and general misunderstanding of the word "Education." It has been thought to signify the cultivation of the intellect alone, to the neglect of morality and religion. Many good and conscientious men have objected to such an education for the mass of the people, as worse than useless. But truer notions begin to prevail. Education, in its only correct sense, is not merely intellectual; it is threefold, and includes the development in complete harmony of the physical, the intellectual, and the moral or religious nature of man. The upper and middle classes have neglected the physical education of their children, any more than they have neglected their intellectual training. The children of these classes have, for the most part, been allowed necessary and healthful recreation. They enjoy the fresh air; they have sports in the play-ground; they are taught to run, to leap, to ride, to swim; and are encouraged in other bodily exercises which tend to the increase of bodily health and comfort. As a necessary consequence, their intellectual training—the second branch of a complete education—has been rendered more easy. Then sound body has aided the development of the sound mind; and a very general diffusion of what is commonly called "education" has been the result. In this physical and intellectual condition, the "crown and completion" of the man is the development of his moral and religious faculties. In this last and most important aspect of our nature, however great and manifold may still be the deficiencies of the upper and middle classes of Englishmen, it cannot be said of them that they are inferior to any nation in the world; on the contrary, our countrymen may, without exaggeration, be called an eminently moral and religious people—unsurpassed, and, indeed, unrivalled, by any nation on the face of the globe, for their piety and their zeal in every humane, benevolent, and Christian object.

But among the children of the poor the case, unfortunately, is very different. We have, in fact, begun at the wrong end with them. Stunted, diseased, or deformed; brought up in physical filth and degradation; scarcely breathing the fresh air of heaven, or knowing the delight of running about the fields to give vigour to their limbs, or healthy activity to their lungs; or compelled while still mere infants, to work hard for a subsistence;—how was it possible that they should become the recipients of intellectual knowledge? Yet, in this state of incompleteness of their physical and intellectual natures, many well-meaning men have devoted themselves to the task of giving them moral and religious instruction alone. With all our churches, chapels, and Sunday-schools, the children of the poor—in numbers fearful to think upon, and in a manner highly dangerous to our character and happiness as a people—have been allowed to grow up without any instruction to fit them either for this world or the next. This is the danger to which men of all parties are now opening their eyes, and which the Committee of Council on Education have been endeavouring to obviate, with the inadequate means which Parliament has placed at their disposal. The children of the poorest classes are unfortunately almost impervious to our moral and religious teaching. Their physical wants, and the degradation and dirt in which they live, have rendered it difficult, with any of the existing agencies that can be brought to bear upon them, to give them anything like an adequate intellectural training; and the conjoined operations of these two causes have rendered them unfit to become the recipients of the moral and religious truths which thousands of good men, in every part of the country, would only be too happy to instil into their minds. The right Reverend bench of Bishops—never lukewarm upon this great question, and fully aware of its mighty importance both to the Church and to the nation, took a large part in the discussion of Monday evening last, and gave expression to sentiments in connexion with it which cannot fail to give wide satisfaction. In reference to Mr. Fox's bill, the Bishop of London stated his belief that the introduction imposed upon the House of Lords the duty of instituting, with as little delay as possible, an inquiry into the whole subject in all its bearings. The Marquis of Lansdowne was equally anxious that every possible circumstance in connexion with the subject should be made known. His Lordship admitted that, owing to the want of general co-operation, the existing system had not been as complete as was desirable; but dwelt upon the fact that 800 schools, founded upon or connected with the educational grants, existed under the daily superintendance of zealous clergymen. From the observations that fell from the noble Marquis, we learn that the Government will not oppose the committee to be moved for by the Bishop of London Nothing but good can result from such an investigation. The sectarian jealousies that have hitherto impeded the threefold education of the people—and that have stood in the way of the religious quite as much as of the intellectual training of the vast swarms of the poor children of our towns—will, it is to be hoped, give way. The prejudice against what is called secular education will be removed, when it is found that, without secular education, a moral and religious education is impossible. This is the point for which the real friends of a sound and not an illusory education must strive; and we are glad to observe, from many circumstances of daily occurrence, that the prospects of the question are brightening, and that men are opening their eyes to the pressing importance of a subject that cannot for ever be trifled with, unless we are to lose our place amongst the nations, and rank lowest both in the intellectual and in the religious scale.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

OPENING OF THE BRITANNIA TUBULAR BRIDGE. THE FIRST TRAIN THROUGH.

This magnificent structure was opened for the first time on Tuesday last, with perfect success. At half-past six o'clock a.m., three powerful engines, the Cambria, the St. David, and the Pegasus, of from fifty to sixty horse power each, decorated with flags of all nations and union jacks, steamed up and harnessed together, started from the Bangor station, carrying Mr. Stephenson; Mr. Bidder, the engineer; Mr. Trevethick, locomotive manager of the London and North Western Railway; Mr. Edwin Clark and his brother, Mr. Latimer Clark, Mr. Appelt, and Mr. Fairbairn. At precisely seven o'clock they swept over the threshold of the stupendous fabric, and progressing at a speed of seven miles an hour, were lost sight of in the recess of the iron corridor. The total weight of the locomotives was ninety tons. They were brought to a standstill in the centre of each of the great spans, and rested with the weight of all wheels on the floor of the tube, but without causing the slightest strain or deflection. The first process—that of going through the tube and returning, occupied altogether ten minutes. But another and more critical ordeal had to follow—to ascertain how the vast machine was capable of sustaining the equilibrium of forces; and the result was such as to prove, beyond cavil, the accuracy of the first experimental conclusions arrived at by Mr. Stephenson and his staff of engineers. The second experimental convoy that went through consisted of twenty-four heavily-laden waggons, filled with huge blocks of Brymbo coal: in all, engines included, an aggregate weight of 300 tons. This was drawn deliberately through, at the rate of from eight to ten miles an hour, the steam working at quarter power. During the passage through the tube a breathless silence prevailed; and when the train reached out on the other side, loud acclamations arose, followed at intervals by the rattle of artillery from the battlements, upon the return, which occupied about seven minutes, similar demonstrations ensued; and during the progress of the train, those who stood upon its top, to ascertain any possible weakness, declared they could detect no approach to deflexion. After this Mr. Stephenson and his staff steamed up to Plas Llandfair, Mr. Foster's seat, and partook of a handsome breakfast. Meantime the locomotives were disengaged preparatory to their passage down the tube, proving, if it may be so said, its strength almost to provocation, but without eliciting the slightest manifestation of strain or ill-temper. An ordeal stronger still was then resorted to. A train of 200 tons of coals was allowed to rest with all its aplomb, for two hours, in the centre of the Carnarvonshire tube; and at the end of the time, on the load being removed, it was found to have caused a deflexion of only 4-10ths of an inch; and it is a remarkable phenomenon that this amount of deflexion is not so much as one half-hour of sunshine would produce upon the structure; it being, moreover, calculated with confidence that the whole bridge might with safety be deflected to the extent of 13 inches.

At twelve o'clock another testing train was prepared to be taken through the tube. It consisted of the three engines, the 200 tons of coal, and from thirty to forty railway carriages, containing between 600 and 700 passengers. It passed through triumphantly, at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour.

It is understood that Captain Symonds, the Government inspector, will inspect on the 9th inst., and report to the Government, and the public inauguration for every-day traffic may be expected to commence on the 15th inst.

The effect of the recent narricane on the calibre of the tube has proved that its lateral surface strength is sufficient, and far more so, to resist the redoubled blow of constant blasts. It is calculated that, taking the force of the wind at 90 lb. on the square foot, an excessive supposition, the resistance offered by the bridge would be 800 tons, multiplied by 2, equal to 600 tons, which is net two-thirds more than it ever weight. The tubes are, from end to end, the rush of a hurricane would only press in the ratio of 128 tons on the side. As to the time when both tubes are up, to brace them together will stays, so as to counteract all possible oscillation, if any.

YORK, NEWCASTLE, AND BERWICK RAILWAY.—March 7th: York: Half-yearly meeting: H. S. Thompson, Esq., in the chair.—The business commenced by the presentation of testimonials to the members of the late committee of investigation. The gentlemen who received those marks of approval were Mr. Pearse, Mr. Love, Mr. Meek, Mr. Leschman, Mr. Kiplin, and Mr. M'Leran. The testimonials were each to the value of 100 guineas, and of very beautiful designs, each being the selection of the gentleman for whom it was designed. Mr. Alderman Meek returned thanks on behalf of himself and the late colleagues. The report was then read and adopted, and, after a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

Her Majesty has honoured the Orphan Working School, Haverstockhill, by presenting to its funds the sum of 250 guineas, for the purchase of a presentation to the Institute during her Majesty's lifetime.

THE LISTON TESTIMONIAL.—On Wednesday evening a meeting of the noblemen, gentlemen, and members of the medical and surgical profession, subscribers to the fund for providing a suitable memorial to the late eminent surgeon, J. Liston, Esq., took place at No. 32, Old Burlington-street. The Marquis of Anglesey presided, and the report of the committee was unanimously adopted, in which they stated that the funds subscribed were not sufficiently large to enable them to complete the original design of erecting a colossal statue to the memory of Mr. Liston, as well as founding a gold medal to be called the Liston medal, and annually presented to the University College, London. To carry out these suggestions, a sum of £1400 would be required, while the subscriptions received amounted only to £750. After some discussion, adverse to the adoption of the recommendation to found a gold medal, and also suggested the execution of four marble busts, one to be presented to the Royal College of Surgeons, a second to the University College of London, a third to the Royal Infirmary of Edinburgh, and the fourth to the family of the late Mr. Liston.

ANCIENT AND MEDIÆVAL ART.—The committee formed for the purpose of carrying out the exhibition of ancient and mediæval art (of which his Royal Highness Prince Albert has consented to act as president) are now actively engaged in making preparations at the Society of Arts, and it is expected that this interesting spectacle will be opened to the public about the middle of the present month. In addition to the productions of Cellini, &c., which, by the gracious permission of her Majesty, have been placed at the disposal of the committee, and have been brought from Windsor Castle for that purpose, most of the colleges, corporate bodies, and nobility possessing antiquities of value as works of art, have contributed from their museums. Altogether, this unique exhibition cannot prove otherwise than highly attractive; and if the usual facilities are accorded our artists for making fac-similes of the objects which will be shown, we shall not fail to present our readers with illustrations of such as are most remarkable, either as works of art or historical relics.

POSTSCRIPT.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

GORHAM v. THE BISHOP OF EXETER.

On Friday (yesterday) afternoon judgment was delivered in this case, which had been argued at much length a short time since. It was an appeal to the Privy Council against the conduct of the Bishop of Exeter, in excluding from a benefice the Rev. Mr. Gorham, on the ground that his tenets in holding that grace might exist prior to baptism were heretical, and contrary to the doctrines of the Church of England. The judgment was delivered at length by Lord Langdale, and was adverse to the proceeding of the Bishop, and in favour of Mr. Gorham, upon the ground of the Article relating to Baptism not being sufficiently defined to warrant the Bishop in his proceedings.

The judgment of the Privy Council was unanimous, with the exception of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce; and was also concurred in by the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, but dissented from by the Bishop of London.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

BANKRUPTCY CONSOLIDATION BILL.

Lord BROUGHAM postponed the second reading of this bill for six weeks, as he intended to introduce some alterations in it.

EDUCATION.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE drew the attention of the House to a letter which he had received from the hon. and learned gentleman (Mr. Talbot) in relation to the charges of mis-statements which he had brought against the speakers at the meeting. One of those mis-statements was, that not a shilling of the public money was given to any school unless it adopted the clauses required by the Privy Council. As an answer to the mis-statement, he now laid on the table returns which would prove that mis-statement. He did not impute to the hon. and learned gentleman that he had wilfully misrepresented, but that he had been misinformed; and, in reply, he laid on the table a list of between 400 and 500 Church of England schools which had received assistance without subscribing to these clauses.

Lord STANLEY regretted that the noble Marquis had not communicated to his hon. and learned friend his intention of placing these papers on the table. He understood that the cause of complaint on the part of the clergy of the Church of England was, that at present no schools could receive assistance without accepting those clauses. Possibly that was what his hon. and learned friend had stated, and he might have been misreported.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said that those schools were receiving, and would continue to receive, assistance for any purpose except for building; but the statement was that it had not received a shilling of public money for any purpose whatever; and that statement he denied, and he undertook to prove that those statements were unfounded. With regard to misreporting, all the reports in all the papers ascribed the same language to the hon. and learned gentleman.

PARTY PROCESSIONS (IRELAND) BILL

On the order of the day for the third reading of this bill being moved,

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE observed, with respect to the clause, of which notice had been given by the noble Duke (Wellington), prohibiting the carrying of arms with a view to a breach of the peace, that if it would be to make the present measure an arms-bill; and as that would delay it by leading to prolonged discussion, he should hope the noble Duke would withdraw it, particularly as he could have effect his object by bringing in a bill for the purpose, or introducing the clause in another more suitable measure.

The Duke of WELLINGTON acquiesced in the suggestion, and withdrew the clause.

On the motion of Lord MONTEAGLE, a clause was added to the bill, authorising magistrates to demand arms to be given up by persons carrying them without license.

The bill was then read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

ABOLITION OF THE OFFICE OF LORD-LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

The Lord MAYOR of DUBLIN asked the noble Lord at the head of the Government if it was the intention of her Majesty's Government to introduce or support, during the present session of Parliament, any measure for the abolition of the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland?

Lord J. RUSSELL said his hon. friend would be aware that it would be impossible to abolish the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland without introducing a bill into that House. Now, as no Prince could be sent to govern Ireland who was further, that the Government had for some time been in consultation as to the propriety of introducing a bill to abolish that office (hear, hear), and they had been in communication with the Lord-Lieutenant on the subject. If any such bill were introduced, it would be brought forward in the name of the Government, and not in that of any private member of the House.

SUPPLY.—FINANCIAL REFORM.

On the motion for going into Committee of Supply on the Army Estimates,

Mr. CORDEN presented a petition from Liverpool, signed by 30,000 persons, in favour of financial reform. He complained of the manner in which the expenditure of the country was submitted to the Legislature, so different from the method of other constitutional countries; because, when the estimates were brought forward in the House, any material alteration which might be made in them was taken as a vote of want of confidence. The manner in which he had brought this forward was not with any such view; but it was simply to ask the House to come to a resolution embodying a return to the taxation of 1835. This course was not a new one—Pitt had been the first to adopt it, and Sir Wyse had quoted it wished to return to for a quarter of a century. He should ask the Government to show reason why they would not sanction a gradual return to the standard of 1835. The petitioner in the present case would read a few figures showing the relative difference of expenditure in the years 1836 and 1850:—In the year ending the 5th of January, 1836, the interest of the national debt funded and unfunded was £4,000 per year more than the sum of January, 1850, it was £28,324,000; the army expenses were, in the first-named year, £6,460,000; in the latter year, £6,549,000; the navy expences £4,920,000 and £5,942,000 respectively, The expenses of the Ordnance department in the first year amounted to £1,151,000, In the latter year to £2,323,000, and the civil expenditure £4,225,000 and £6,732,000 for the respective years. When he brought forward his financial statement last year he had stated that the excess of expenditure during the preceding year over that of 1835 was £2,000,000. According to the estimates, he found that the relative amounts of expenditure, in 1849 and 1835, was £53,500 000 against £44,295,000. He was not stating the matter from the estimates of the present year, but from last year; and by that it appeared that the excess of expenditure of 1850 over 1835 was £6,453,000. But, taking the estimates of the ensuing year, he thought that a million further, at least, would be saved, making the total amount £5,000,000. Well, that was encouraging; but it only showed that, however desirous the Ministry might be of economising, there was such a pressure from without, such an urgency from the several professional departments of the state, that unless the Government were backed by a stern determination of that House, they would never be able to accomplish that which they very possibly desired. (Hear, hear.) How then was he to effect that saving? He would now show. It was to be understood that he had to deal with an excess of 6½ millions. He proposed, in the first place, to reduce the army and navy and ordnance estimates by £5,340,000. The remaining £800,000 was for civil expenditure, and he proposed to reform the expense of managing the office of Woods and Forests, which he suggested should be placed under better management. He thought the hon. gentleman would agree with him that these were things which ought not to be repeated. (Hear, hear.) If they cast their eyes over this long list they would find many things which would not have been allowed in this day, and which never could be repeated. (Hear, hear.) But still they required a strict supervision by this House. (Hear, hear.) Such a looking over the estimates items, and considering the cases of many of the parties receiving pensions, he found that it was not unreasonable to expect that a very considerable saving would accrue to the state every year. (Hear.) He must come to salaries and allowances, and in alluding to that portion of the subject he might observe that hon. gentlemen opposite would agree with him in first noticing the large sum expended for the support of a number of commissioners. (Hear, hear.) The se might be much better condensed under one well paid and able commissioner. They would have their work better done and cheaper done by one man than twelve. It was an observation, and not a bad pun, that a board was sometimes a good screen. The hon. gentleman concluded by moving that, as the taxes requisite for the present expenditure impeded the industry and prosperity of the country, and as there was no foreign or domestic cause for keeping up that expenditure, it should be reduced from £50,853,000, to which it amounted in the year ending January 1850, to £44,422,000, the net expenditure of the year 1835.

Mr. LABOUCHERE opposed the motion, contending that it was a fallacy to allege that the public expenditure had gone on increasing. The contrary was the fact; since 1848 it had gone on gradually diminishing. The motion of the hon. gentleman assumed that it was the case, for last year he had proposed a reduction of £10,000,000, he now found it necessary to bring down his proposition to £6,000,000. That showed there was a gradual reduction, and he (Mr. Labouchere) hoped that in a few years they would be able to announce a still further reduction. The hon. gentleman, having entered into statistical details in support of his statement that there was a gradual retrenchment, concluded by declaring his determination to oppose the motion.

After a lengthened discussion in which Lord J. RUSSELL also opposed the motion on the part of the Government, justifying the naval and military expenditure on the ground of absolute necessity—the House divided:—

For Mr. Cobden's motion	..	..	..	..	89
Against it	..	..	..	..	272
Majority	..	..	..	..	—183

The motion was accordingly lost.

The House then went into Committee of Supply, when

Mr. FOX MAULE proposed that a vote be taken for 99,128 men, the entire number of men for the army this year, which was a reduction of 4719 on the amount of last year.

Some moved, as an amendment, that the Chairman report progress, and [illegible] to sit again.

The amendment was agreed to, and the House resumed.

Adjourned at half-past twelve o'clock.

SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.—The Gazette of yesterday (Friday) evening contains the following, dated Admiralty, March 7.—"Twenty Thousand Pounds Reward will be given by her Majesty's Government to any party or parties, of any country, who shall render sufficient assistance to the crews of the discovery ships under the command of Sir John Franklin:—1. To any party or parties who, in the judgment of the Board of Admiralty, shall discover and effectually relieve the crews of her Majesty's ships Erebus and Terror, the sum of £20,000; or, 2. To any party or parties who, in the judgment of the Board of Admiralty, shall discover and effectually relieve any of the crews of her Majesty's ships Erebus and Terror, or shall convey such intelligence as shall lead to the relief of such crews, or any of them, the sum of £10,000; or, 3. To any party or parties who, in the judgment of the Board of Admiralty, shall, by virtue of his or their efforts, first succeed in ascertaining their fate, £10,000.—W. A. B HAMILTON, Secretary of the Admiralty.

MEDICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—This ancient society held its seventy-seventh anniversary at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street, yesterday (Friday); the president of the society, H. Hancock, Esq., in the chair. The usual business having been gone through, the secretary announced the names of the officers elected for the ensuing year; after which Francis Bird, Esq., delivered the annual oration, which elicited much applause from a crowded auditory, principally members of the medical profession.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

All the Conservative candidates for Paris who failed in obtaining the majority at the preliminary ballot have formally withdrawn, and have promised to engage their friends to vote for Gen. de la Hitte, Berjean, and Foy. The Legitimists are much disappointed and dissatisfied at the rejection of their own candidate.

M. Eugène Baroste and M. Victor Hennequin, responsible editors of the République and the Democratie Pacifique, were on Wednesday summoned to appear before the Court of Assizes on a charge of publishing a letter signed by Louis Blanc, dated Bruxelles, 1850, respectively, by default, in each case, imprisonment and 1000f., and jointly and severally to the expenses of the prosecution.

M. Gallot, formerly responsible editor of the Reforme, was some time ago condemned to six months' imprisonment and 400f. fine, and subsequently to one months' imprisonment and 100f. fine, for having published in the journal with the caution-money incomplete. He applied this week to the Tribunal to unite the two condemnations, and to mitigate them. But the Tribunal fixed the period of imprisonment at three months, and the fine at 600f.

INDIA.

An extraordinary express which arrived in town yesterday (Friday) has supplied us, in advance of the Overland Mail, with letters and papers from Bombay of the 4th ult., and from Calcutta of the 24th of January. With the exception of a little disturbance at Lahore, by which almost all we know from the journal with the Indus was perfect tranquil. The political news is unimportant. The Marquis of Dalhousie (the Governor General) and his Highness the Gukowar, the Chief of Baroda, and the first Prince in Western India, had paid visits to Bombay, both of whom were received with great pomp and solemnity, worthy of their distinguished greatness. Upon an address by the inhabitants being presented to the Governor-General, his Excellency replied, that he was happy to receive from them upon the restoration of peace, which he heartily prayed might be of long continuance, and he trusted that such a state of things would produce internal improvements, extended commerce, increased wealth, and enhanced prosperity. The object of the Gukowar's visit was to have an interview with Lord Falkland, the Governor of Bombay, on the construction of 40 miles of rail way, from the seaport of Jankaria to the capital, proposed to be established many-peopled countries, the supporter also of this Great World; the son of Hymapes, the Achæmenian."

SUPPLY OF WATER TO THE CITY OF LONDON.—In pursuance of a minute passed by the committee of health connected with the City Sewers Commission, on the 15th of December last, to the following effect, "That it be referred to Mr. Haywood, the surveyor, and Mr. Simon, the medical officer to consider and report, jointly or separately, to the next meeting what, in their opinion, would be a sufficient supply of water to the houses and premises within the City of London, and when would be the best period upon which to effect such supply," these gentlemen have reported at great length. The following is an abstract of the report as far as regards the proposed mode of supply, &c. Mr. Haywood says—"That having considered the subject in all its bearings, he is of opinion that the only mode in which such supply is a system applicable to the City and to the whole of the metropolis, and to every town; and is (if it can be effected) in some respects and cases superior to the intermittent system." He then proceeds, at great length, to show the advantages and the probable disadvantages of the two systems; and in reviewing the arguments he has used, he states as his opinion upon the whole, in answer to the reference made to him "That 7 gallons per head per diem of water supplied to the citizens being upon an average, for all purp ses of consumption, trade loans, and for domestic supply, 21¼ gallons, is sufficient per head per diem, with the present ranges of pressure; if the following conditions of the water companies should be bound to supply 30 gallons per diem should the anticipated prospective increase of consumption take place. Secondly: That whether a constant supply is or is not practicable, it is desirable that a supply at a pressure sufficient to deliver water at the tops of all the houses should be given uniformly throughout the city of London. That if a constant supply is given upon the intermittent system, and adequate cisternage is provided, so that water may be drawn at all times between the intervals of supply, the supply is practically constant to the consumer; but that many instances exist where, if the constant supply fulfilled its signification, and cisterns could be dispensed with, it would be a great benefit: that inasmuch as it appears questionable whether it is inexpedient to discontinue the use of cisterns, even if the constant supply is given, and also that it may be found necessary to incur a large expense to effect and maintain a constant supply without a commensurate benefit; that district should be made for the trial of the system of constant supply at high pressure upon a particular district within a given district of the city of London, for a given period, in order to determine accurately what are the results of the system as regards waste, and what benefits may be practically derived from it. With regard to the quality, I am of opinion that the water would be much improved by filtration through a medium of sand and gravel, which I would suggest that your honourable court would request the water companies to do before they distributed the article for consumption. With regard to the prices, Mr. Haywood says:—"I observe that the City is supplied as cheaply as any portion of the metropolis, and cheaper than many provincial towns. But even more material for opinion as to the fairness of the charges made by the companies appears to me to be wanting, and can only be correctly arrived at by the intervention of the Legislature, which, by means of a select committee of the House of Commons, fairly and impartially sifting in judgment upon the subject, might, in this respect, elicit information and originate a measure which should be a measure of justice to the water companies, alike satisfactory to them and to the metropolitan public.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.—Yesterday week a wardmote was held in Castle Baynard, at which resolutions were passed in favour of a plan of Mr. W. Barber (of the firm of Barber, Howse, and Mead, of St. Paul's Churchyard) for the removal of the wall and iron railing on the west front, and to the north and south portions of St. Paul's Cathedral. On Tuesday, at a meeting of the City Court of Sewers, the following resolution was proposed by Mr. Barber, seconded by Sir Peter Laurie, and carried unanimously:—"That it is the opinion of the court that the public convenience would be promoted, and the architectural beauty of the western end of the cathedral church of St. Paul would be much better displayed, if the dwarf wall and railing around the enclosed vacant area of ground in front thereof were removed and the space paved with flag-stones, in a manner similar to that at the western end of the Royal Exchange." A suggestion that it would be advisable to take steps to preserve the cathedral by a railing put far back from the line of the existing palisade, was also agreed to be acted upon, and a deputation to wait upon the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London on the subject was appointed.—(A large view of the west front of the cathedral, with the railings and wall removed, has been cleverly lithographed by Messrs. Maclure, Macdonald, and Macgregor; together with a ground plan of the building and churchyard, shewing the proposed increase of street accommodation.)

ROYAL GENERAL ANNUITY SOCIETY.—The anniversary festival of this charity took place on Wednesday, at the London Tavern, and was remarkably well attended. About three hundred gentlemen sat down to dinner, and the galleries at either end of the room were filled with ladies. The Hon. E. H. Stanley, M.P., presided, and was supported by Earl Zetland, Mr. Newdegate, M.P., Mr. Locke, M.P., Mr. Green, M.P., and the Hon. W. F. Campbell, M.P. The toast of the evening was proposed by the chairman in terms highly laudatory of the institution, and after the usual bumper toast had been drunk, his health was given by Earl Zetland, who mentioned that Mr. Stanley had returned from the shores of the Pacific in order to preside over the festivities of the evening. The chairman, in very appropriate terms acknowledged the compliments of his noble friend, and the fluttering manner in which they had been received by the company. Mr. Newdegate returned thanks on behalf of the members of the House of Commons present. The Rev. W. H. Jones, chaplain of the society, responded to the toast of "The Church," and Sir E. Belcher on behalf of "The Army and Navy." During the evening, Mr. Aldridge, the secretary, announced a list of subscriptions, amounting altogether to £3300. Every thing connected with the festival was well and even elegantly arranged. This charity is established for the support of decayed merchants, bankers, surgeons, solicitors, medical men, master manufacturers, and tradesmen. It also extends a relieving hand to deserving single women, governesses and others, who, after passing the prime of their life in comparative affluence, have in their declining years fallen into destitute circumstances. Many of the subscriptions announced were in aid of the fund for erecting an asylum, into which the annuitants should be admitted by the ballot.

ROYAL DISPENSARY FOR DISEASES OF THE EAR.—On Wednesday the 53rd annual general meeting of the institution took place at the Dispensary, in Dean-street, Soho. The Rev. Mr. Hale took the chair. The report stated that the institution was originally established under the patronage of George IV. and William IV., at a period when no such charity existed, and was at the present time patronised by numerous distinguished individuals; that its object was to relieve the poorer classes from deafness and other diseases of the ear, to which they were peculiarly liable; and that its great utility might be judged of from the fact that no less than 881 letters for relief had been transmitted during the past year, and that number of cases 369 letters of thanks for cures effected had followed; that, of those classes wholly dependent on their own exertions for support, and who were most liable to diseases of the ear—as domestic servants, soldiers, sailors, artizans, policemen, &c.—as many as thirty-one had received advice and assistance in a single day. Of these cases the larger proportion were attributed by Mr. Harvey, the surgeon of the institution, to damp lodgings, bad food, insufficient clothing, and exposure to the weather. The report concluded with an expression of regret at the death of the Queen Dowager, who had always been a liberal benefactress to the Royal Dispensary, and an earnest appeal to the benevolent public for aid in extending the usefulness of the charity, for which, now ample scope, the funds at present being quite inadequate to the numerous demands upon it. The adoption of the report, and of a resolution declaratory of the benefits the institution conferred on the poor, and that the facilities it gave for relief in cases of deafness and diseases of the ear should be continued, and, if possible, increased, closed the proceedings.

SAMARITAN SOCIETY.—The annual general meeting of governors of this charity, a branch of the London Hospital, devoted to the relief of convalescent patients by sea-bathing, change of air, and assistance to their relations, &c., was held on Wednesday in the institution, Whitechapel-road; Mr. G. Smith in the chair. The relief granted during the past year differed but little from that usually afforded, and the directors regret that in the present state of the funds of the charity there was little hope of an amelioration. The society provided relief during the past year, by money, to 237 patients, to the amount of £53 14s. 11d. Fares paid to assist persons home, wholly or in part, to 155 patients, £22 18s 4jd Fares and support of 90 patients at Margate and in the country, £212 1s. 9½d. The balance in the hands of the treasurer was £242 16s. 7d.; dividend on stock, £427 15s. 4d. The sum of £52 5s. 9d. has been invested and added to the funded property, which now amounts to £14,529 1s. 2d.

ENGINEERS' MASONIC AND UNIVERSAL MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—The second annual meeting of this society was held at the office in the Strand, on Tuesday. Mr. W. F. Dobson, M.A., in the chair.—when a report was presented, which stated that, during the year 1849, 746 proposals for assurances, to the amount of £192,030, had been submitted to the board, sixty of which the directors deemed it prudent to decline; forty-five stood over for further consideration or completion, and 642 policies, covering the sum of £139,370, and producing premiums to the amount of £5047 2s. 4d., had been completed. The total number of policies completed to the 31st of December was 851. The annual income derivable from premiums, £7119 3s. 11d. Notwithstanding the large number of claims that had been awarded with the society, and the fearful epidemic which visited this country during the past year, only seven claims from death, and to the amount of but £1250, had arisen. After a short conversation, in which the chairman congratulated the proprietors on the fact, that the premiums received were more than sufficient, within the first fifteen months of the establishment of the society, to cover the expenses, the report was adopted. The retiring directors and auditors were re-elected.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society took place on Thursday, at the offices, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury; Dr. Joseph Moore in the chair. The report stated that the time had arrived when it would be advisable to obtain increased facilities for the transaction of business, and a bill for that purpose, carefully framed and approved by counsel of high eminence, had been introduced into Parliament. The board proposed to retain a reserve fund of £30,000 out of £51,590, its present amount. The amount carried to the consolidated, or business fund, during the year, had been £51,591, while that during the preceding year amounted only to £38,340. The fund accumulated for the second year's benefit of the assured had increased during the year from £993,105 to £716,586. The report was adopted, and after a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

ROYAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—A meeting of this company took place on Thursday last, at the offices, Moorgate-street, J. J. Millard, Esq., in the chair. The report stated that from April, 1849, to December 31st, they had received 1178 proposals, covering £6,000, of which forty-one were declined, and sixty-eight accepted and completed. These sixty-eight policies assured in the aggregate the sum of £35,380, at annual premiums amounting to £1200 10s., producing a premium fund of £500. Nine claims had been made by the deaths of as many assured. In addition to the life policy business, an arrangement had been made with the Union Fire Office, by the introduction to that office, through the agency of the company, of 289 fire policies, insuring property to the amount of £260,260. The report was unanimously adopted, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the day.

PEARCE'S PENSION SOCIETY.—On Monday afternoon the twenty-fourth annual general meeting of the friends of this charity was held at the London Tavern, for the purpose of receiving the annual report and electing seven additional annuitants upon the funds of the society; Mr. R. Taylor in the chair. The report stated the meeting to be assembled for the first time since the late movement for reconstructing the original plan had been made by the friends of the society assured. In addition to the life policy business, an arrangement had been made with the Union Fire Office, by the introduction to that office, through the agency of the company, of 289 fire policies, insuring property to the amount of £260,260. The report was unanimously adopted, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the day.

PEARCE'S PENSION SOCIETY.—On Monday afternoon the twenty-fourth annual general meeting of the friends of this charity was held at the London Tavern, for the purpose of receiving the annual report and electing seven additional annuitants upon the funds of the society; Mr. R. Taylor in the chair. The report stated the meeting to be assembled for the first time since the late movement for reconstructing the original plan had been made by the friends of the society assured. The subscriptions and donations had somewhat increased, but the subscriptions at the annual dinner had not been to the large amount which had been expected, in consequence of the dinner having been celebrated when the cholera was raging. The funded property of the society amounted to £3373 17s. 3d., and it has been usual to re-invest the yearly interest, which sum for 1849 1794 4d., but in the fundamental laws of the society, as it would be necessary to apply it to the current expenses. 47 annuitants remain on the charity, which, with the number elected on Monday, make 54 dependent on the funds. The total receipts amounted to £1249 18s. 2d., while the expenditure, including the investment of £200 in the Three per Cents, was £870 6s., leaving a balance in favour of the society of £40 12s. 2d. The report was received, ordered to be printed, and the usual elections of committeemen and officers for the ensuing year having taken place, the meeting separated after a vote of thanks to the chairman. The pensioners elected were—Robert Johnson, George Westray, George Green, Esther Roberts, Sophia Whittaker, Grace Cranshall, and Florence Wilkins. Sarah Ellis was elected to the Wurtzburg Pension.

THE JOURNEYMEN TAILORS OF LONDON.—On Monday a general meeting of master tailors was held at Freemasons' Tavern to adopt measures for the alleviation of the distress under which a large number of journeymen are suffering. Most of the principal firms were represented. Mr. Cartwright presided. Several gentlemen addressed the meeting in support of the resolutions brought forward. These speakers attributed the existing distress, and the moral and social degradation of journeymen tailors, to the practice which prevailed in many establishments of giving outdoor work. The prices given, especially to the women employed, were scarcely sufficient to keep them from starvation. Instances were adduced of individuals who, for a series of weeks, were employed to work hard to earn less than 2s. a week Turning to the men, it was stated that a man, to earn 12s. a week, should work eighteen hours a day, and out of this he had to pay 1s. for trimmings, 6d. for candles, and 6d. for coals. The particulars of several flagrant cases of the above description were given, and it was also shown, that, from overcrowding in their rooms, the individuals connected with the trade were physically debilitated, and rendered peculiarly liable to attacks of epidemic disease. A resolution was adopted affirming that it was highly important, as a means for the improvement of the moral, social, and physical condition of the journeymen tailors, that all workmen should be employed on the premises of the master. The master tailors present, individually and collectively, pledged themselves to carry out the measure suggested, and the meeting separated after a vote of thanks to the chairman.

BOILER EXPLOSION.—A most alarming accident occurred on Tuesday morning, between the hours of six and eight, at the Albion Brewery, Camden town, belonging to Messrs. Barker and Son, from the explosion of the boiler, the engine (which has caused much inconvenience to the inhabitants of the premises and in the houses adjacent. The houses in Caroline-place, to the left of the brewery, had the whole of their windows shattered; and a part of the boiler, 2s lbs in weight, was blown upwards of 30 yards. There were only three workmen on the premises at the time of the accident, none of whom received any [illegible]. The cause of the accident is not known, nor the amount of damage done has been ascertained at present ascertained.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Births registered in the week ending Saturday, March 2: Males, 813; females, 761; total, 1574. Deaths during the same period:—Males, 460; females, 436; total, 896. This return shows that the rate of mortality is low at the present time as compared with this season of the former children), which differs little from the number of the same week of the last two years, but is more than the average of the corresponding ten weeks. At Bethnal-green, London-road, the son of a painter and glazier, aged 6 years, died of "English cholera," after 17 hours' illness. On the 24th of February last, Albert-street, the daughter of a gunsmith, aged 4 years, died from "hydrophobia, caused by the bite of a rabid dog on the 15th November last," according to the verdict of a jury. Last week confluent small-pox was fatal to 93 persons; there died on an average in former periods 136. Under other diseases of the respiratory organs, exclusive of hooping-cough, the aggregate is 176 deaths; formerly at this season they have varied from 150 to 205. The deaths of two persons are referred, one to disease arising from intemperance, the other to injury during intoxication. One person died of want, and another is also supposed to have sunk from destitution. The former was a porter, of 73 years, in Parson's-court, St. Luke's; the latter, a single woman of 51 years, was found dead in bed at 37, Elizabeth-street, in the Caurch sub-district of Bethnal-green.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean daily reading of the barometer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was above 30 in. throughout the week; the mean of the week was 30.164 in. The mean temperature of the week was 42·8 degrees, or 3·3 degrees higher than the average of the same week in seven years.

VISIT OF THE PRESIDENT LOUIS NAPOLEON TO THE GARRISON OF PARIS.

PARIS.

VISIT OF THE PRESIDENT TO THE BARRACKS.

THE SOCIALIST ELECTORAL MEETINGS.

The President of the Republic has of late paid visits to the barracks of the troops stationed in Paris, with extraordinary display and parade. Our Artist has pictured one of these scenes; in which Louis Napoleon is riding through the street, pistol in hand, and escorted by cuirassiers. These visits are novel methods of courting popularity; and thus, all the garrison has been visited, addressed, and complimented; and they, in return, have received the President with great enthusiasm. In the Illustration, the caleche is coming from the gate of the barracks; Louis Napoleon wears the uniform of a General; on his left is seated the Minister of War; and facing him is Colonel Edgar Ney, and next him a Colonel of the Staff.

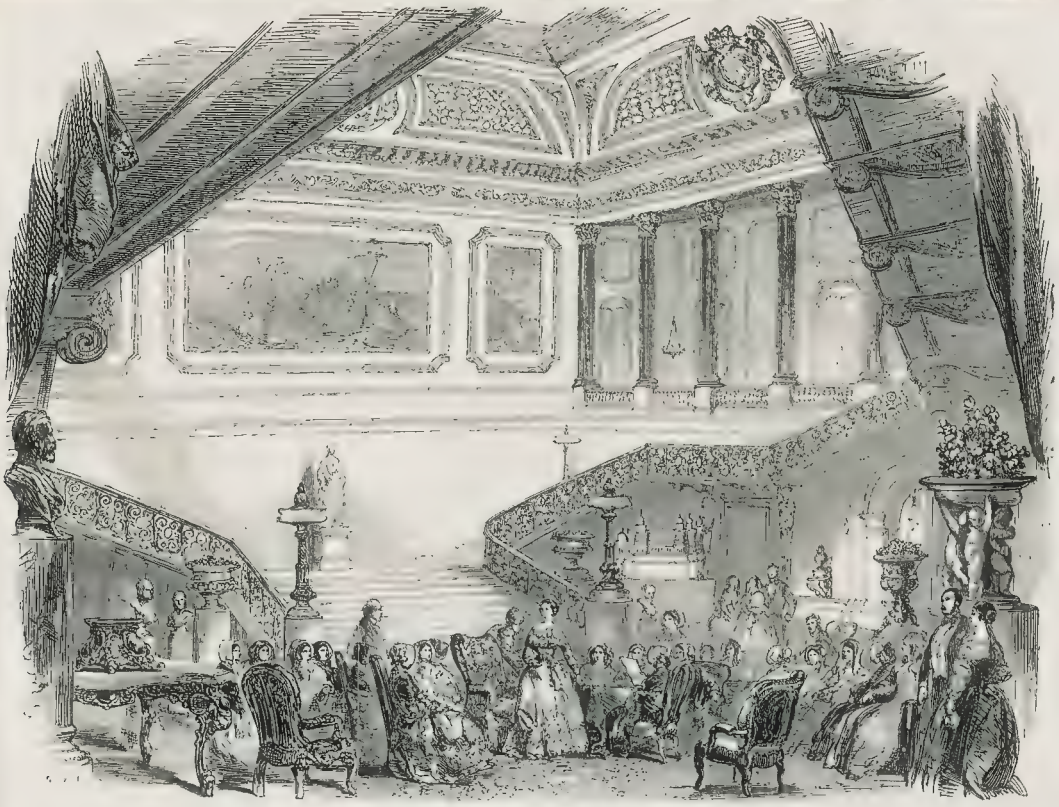
Yesterday week, the President reviewed, in the garden of the Tuileries, two regiments (the 21st and 29th) which were to leave Paris in the evening, for Verdun and Langres. The troops were drawn up in line from the gate of the Place de la Concorde to the gardens immediately in front of the Palace. They were on the ground at half-past one, at which hour Generals Changarnier, Hautpoul, and a number of other military chiefs arrived. Precisely at ten minutes past two the drums on the Place de la Concorde beat to arms, announcing the arrival of the Prince. Louis Napoleon entered the garden by the Place de la Concorde. He was preceded by two dragoons, pistol in hand and finger on the trigger, accompanied by his aides-de-camp, and attended by his usual escort of cuirassiers. The signal was taken up by the bands of the regiments on the ground, who, the moment the Prince entered the garden, struck up their beautiful pas de of war. General Changarnier, placing himself at the head of the generals that accompanied him, and followed by a numerous staff, put spurs to his horse, and galloped along. On reaching the spot were the Chief of the State was, he drew up and saluted him with hat in hand. He then placed himself on the right-hand side of the President, and they both rode slowly along the line, followed by the cortège, and hailed with shouts of "Vive Napoleon!" "Vive le Président!" from the thousands of people who lined the terraces and alleys of the gardens. Amidst the shout that was borne from end of the line to the other, could be heard some cries of "Vive la République!" The President passed at first slowly in front of the line, and then turned and rode more quickly to the other end. He stopped for about twenty minutes, and chatted with the generals and one or two officers of the staff, apparently in a familiar and even affectionate manner. During all this time the shouts continued. It is said he gave away some decorations. He passed once more, and at a quick pace, along the line, and then proceeded to the Place de la Concorde, where the men defiled before him. The whole affair was over about three o'clock.

The second Engraving illustrates a scene of the present Socialist Electoral agitation in Paris—a sitting in the Salle Martel, a new Hall, and the largest in the city. The platform is crowded with well-dressed persons; an orator is in the Tribune; and under him is a bust of Liberty with a Phrygian cap.

One of these meetings is thus described by a contemporary:—

"The Salle Martel contained the largest assemblage of all. There were about 4000 people present, but more than half the number went thither, I am assured, in the expectation of witnessing some fun. Of fun, however, there was very little, the whole time being occupied with a dismal homily from the Carlist Abbé Chantôme, who predicted 'that Socialism would soon melt the ice of the North Pole, and would immediately after convert the Cossacks, in their own tents, to Republicanism.' The realisation of the first part of the prediction would, I have no doubt, be hailed with pleasure by those who are engaged in the search in the Arctic regions. The immediate results of the meeting must have been profitable, as a small sum was paid by each person as he entered. As an extensive wine-house is nearly next door to the place of meeting, it may be presumed that the orators and the bureau 'went (to use a masonic lodge phrase) to refreshment from labour.'"

ELECTORAL MEETING IN THE SALLE MARTEL, PARIS.



MEETING OF THE LADIES' COMMITTEE AT STAFFORD HOUSE IN AID OF THE GREAT EXHIBITION OF INDUSTRY OF ALL NATIONS, IN 1851.

MEETING AT STAFFORD HOUSE.

We have the gratification of pourtraying to our readers the very interesting Meeting of Ladies held in the grand saloon of Stafford House, at the invitation of her Grace the Duchess of Sutherland, on Saturday week, to consider the best means of forwarding the objects of "the Great Exhibition of Industry of all Nations, in 1851."

The Duchess of Sutherland presided in the chair; and the undermentioned ladies agreed to form themselves into a committee for the purpose in this district of the metropolis; they also appointed Lord Edward F. Howard, Lord Dufferin, and Colonel Malcolm to act as secretaries; and passed the following resolutions:—

1. That this Committee, in respectful sympathy with the motives which have influenced her Majesty in graciously promoting an Exhibition for the Industry of all Nations, thinks it desirable to invite the assistance of the Women of England to further a design in which woman by skill and ingenuity must occupy so distinguished a position.

2. That this Committee recommend that subscriptions be received from One Shilling upwards.

3. That subscriptions may be paid to the persons named in the list.

The Marchioness of Aileshury took a very active part in the proceedings, and is understood to have written the resolutions passed by the meeting. The Duchess of Sutherland, the Countess of Waldegrave, and other ladies present were desirous of contributing £50 donations to the fund; but the majority o

VISCOUNTESS PALMERSTON'S ASSEMBLY.

AMONGST the varied attractions of the fashionable season in London, the Viscountess Palmerston's Saturday evening assemblies are acknowledged to stand unrivalled.

Lady Palmerston has already held several soirées this season: that which we have made the subject of our Illustration in the present Number took place on Saturday last, when the guests were more numerous than usual, and the brilliancy of the assembly much heightened by the varied costumes of many members of the House of Commons, who had attended the Speaker's full-dress levee on the same evening.

The festivities of the evening commenced as usual with a banquet, the guests at which included his Excellency the Russian Minister, the Baroness Brunnow and Mdlle. Olga de Lechner, his Excellency the Minister for the Netherlands, the Marquis and Marchioness of Clanricarde, the Family de Burgh, the Earl of Powis. Viscountess Jocelyn, Lord and Lady Foley and the Hon. Miss Foley, Lord Howden, Lord Edward Fitzalan Howard, Baron Rüller, and Mr. H. Greville.

The company invited to the evening conversazione began to arrive at ten o'clock. These included nearly the whole of the corps diplomatique resident at the Court of St. James's, and nearly 300 members of the fashionable world. The Duke of Wellington came from the Speaker's levee attired in the uniform of a field-marshal, and remained the guest of the noble Viscount and Viscountess nearly two hours. The Marquis of Anglesey also came in full uniform, attended by his son, Lord Clarence Paget; and Lord Gough arrived about eleven o'clock, from Viscount Hardinge's, where his Lordship had been dining with a large party. The Earl of Cardigan was also present, in his uniform as Colonel of the 11th Hussars.

The general circle included, among others, the Marquis and Marchioness of Allesbury, the Marquis and Marchioness of Kildare, the Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, the Marchioness of Sligo and the Ladies Browne, the Earl and Countess Grey and Lady Alice Lambton, the Countess of Tankerville, the Earl of Clare, the Countess Poulett, the Countess Cowper, the Countess Dowager Waldegrave and Mr. Harcourt. M.P., the Countess de Flahault and Mdlle. de Falhault, the Earl of Mulgrave, Viscount and Lady Enfield, Viscount Eastnor, Viscount Chewton, Viscount Castlinge, Lord Elphinstone, Lady Elizabeth Bulteel and Miss Macdonald, Lord and Lady Beaumont and the Hon. Miss Stapleton, Lord and Harry Vane, M.P., Lady Seymour and Lord Malet, Lady Georgiana Grey and Miss Bulteel, Lord Dufferin, Lady Peel and Miss Peel, Lord and Lady Eddisbury and the Hon. Miss Stanley, Lady Ashley, Lord and Lady Wodehouse, Lady Johnstone and the Misses Johnstone; Lord George Paget, M.P., and Lady Alfred Paget; Lord and Lady Norreys, Lady Harriet Corry and Miss Corry, Lady Graham and Miss Graham, Lady Elizabeth Drummond and Miss Drummond, Lord Naas, M.P.; Lord Brooke, M.P.; the Lord Chief Justice of England, the Baroness Strathdeen, and the Hon. Miss Campbell; Baron Lionel Rothschild, M.P., and the Baroness Lionel Rothschild, &c.

Maj r Edwardes was honoured with an invitation by Lady Palmerston, but absence from town prevented the gallant officer from accepting it.

Our Illustration is from a sketch taken by one of our own artists, by the express and very kind permission of Lady Palmerston.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The first concert for the season 1850 took place last Monday, at the Hanover-room s. There was a numerous and fashionable attendance. The scheme was opened with Mozart's symphony in C, No. 6, known by the name of "Jupiter," from its colossal conception and marvellous treatment. The lovely andante cantabile was played with the most refined sentiment, the spirited minuet went off like clock-work, and the fiery impulse in the fugued finale was irresistible. A trio from Conrad Kreutzer's "Night in Granada," sung by Miss Louisa Pyne, Mr. Benson, and Mr. Machin, followed, but, save Miss Pyne's neat shake at the close, made little impression. Then came Mendelssohn's quartetto, Op. 13, No. 2, in E flat, for two violins (Sainton and Blagrove), viola (Hill), and violoncello (Lucas). Nothing could be more perfect than the execution of this quartet; but, save the quaint and piquant scherzetto, which was encored, it hung fire, and the slower compositions cannot produce much effect after a symphony of massive proportions. Miss Louisa Pyne then created an extraordinary sensation by her beautiful singing of one of the airs of the Queen of Night, from Mozart's "Zauberflöte." She declaimed the recitative with due emphasis, modelled the melody exquisitely, and executed the intricate divisions in the bravura with astonishing truth of intonation and precision. Miss Pyne displayed a power of voice which was not anticipated from her. It is evident that she has quite enough to fill much larger arenas than that of the Princess' Theatre. Her Philharmonic début places her in the first rank of vocalists, foreign or native. The "Euryanthe" overture terminated the first part of the concert gloriously; the Mendelssohn-Beethoven's second symphony in D, in which the marked originality of the composer's genius was first so nobly developed. It was played to perfection under Costa's bâton. After the duo between "Fanst," between Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Machin, and the trio from Handel's "Acis and Galatea," "The flocks shall leave the mountains," Cherubini's overture, "Les deux Journées," terminated the programme.

The next concert will be on the 18th of March. There have been some changes in the orchestra. Mr. C. Harper is now first horn, and Mr. Alfred Nicholson is the first oboe. Messrs. Cusins and Simmonds, from the Royal Academy of Music, have been added to the violins.

CLASSICAL CHAMBER CONCERTS.

On Tuesday evening, Mr. W. S. Bennett gave his second performance of Classical Pianoforte Music, at the Hanover Rooms, assisted by Herr Molique, Signor Piatti, and the Misses A and M. Williams.

Mr. Lucas, the first violoncello at the Philharmonic Society, has commenced his series of Musical Evenings for Classical Chamber Compositions. His scheme comprised the Quartetto No. 82, Haydn; played by Messrs. Forbriger and Goffrie, Op. 81; and Beethoven's Op. 127; with Dussek's Pianoforte Sonata, "L'Invocation." The executants are Sainton and Blagrove, Hill, Lucas, and Dorrell.

Molique, the celebrated composer and violinist, has commenced a series of Concerts at the Hanover Rooms. In his first programme were included Spohr's Quartet Brilliant in A, Op. 68; Mendelsohn's Trio in C, for piano, violin, and violoncello, a new Quartet by Molique, with three melodies for violin and piano. During the season, this accomplished violinist, as well as gifted composer, will be assisted by Sterndale Bennett, Piatti, Hausmann, Mellon, and Carrodus; the Misses Dolby, Schloss, A. and M. Williams, and Molique.

M. Hillel has begun a new series of Pianoforte Performances at St. Martin's Hall. In his first scheme he included pieces by Beethoven, Handel, Dussek, W. S. Bennett, Stephen Heller, and Mendelssohn

On Saturday last, at St. Martin's Hall, the sixth and last chamber concert of the Society of British Musicians was performed, under the direction of Mr. Lindsey Sloper, the accompanyist being Mr. C E. Stephens. The compositions by native composers were a MS. quartet in E minor, by Mr. J B Calkin, and a clever sonata duo in E, for two performers on one pianoforte, played by Miss Kate Lodor and the composer. The vocalists were Misses Rainforth, Dolby, Owen, Rooke, Punchard, Griesbach, and Thornton.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—Two evening concerts were given last Monday at the Sussex Hall, in the City, by Mr. Turner, and at the Horns Tavern by Mrs. Farquharson Smith.——The third of the London Wednesday Concerts took place on the 6th, at which Thalberg performed.——The second concert of the Amateur Musical Society will take place on Monday; and on the same evening Mr. Willy's second grand orchestral and vocal concert.——Signor Felice Ronconi's second concert will be given on Wednesday.——Mr. Hullah's Upper Singing Schools, with promises of aid, will perform next Wednesday, at St. Martin's Hall, Handel's "Judas Maccabeus."——Next Friday (the 15th), at the Freemasons' Hall, the 112th Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians will be celebrated, the Duke of Cambridge in the chair. There will be a great musical treat at this charitable and festive meeting.——Mr. John Parry gave his entertainment, on Thursday, at Lancaster.——M. Rousselot has engaged Ernst for the new series of Beethoven Quartet Concerts.——The Italian Opera season at St. Petersburgh will close in a few days. On the 17th inst., Grisi, Mario, and Tamburini will leave for London, to commence their engagement at the Royal Italian Opera. Lablache and Gardoni will leave Naples in time to join the company at Her Majesty's Theatre.——Mdme. Castellan, Mdlle. Vera, and M. Mavoli have arrived in Paris, for the Liberal use "Par Prophète" at the Royal Italian Opera.——The great triumphs of Miss Catherine Hayes in Scotland and Ireland, will render her engagement at Her Majesty's Theatre, by Mr. Lumley, a fortunate stroke of policy.——The latest accounts from Cassel announce that Spohr was recovering from the effects of his late severe accident.

COLOSSEUM.—An entire change has been made in the scenery of the Swiss Cottage: the view of Mont Blanc has been removed, and a picture of the Tête Noir Pass and valley of Trient has just been painted by Messrs. Danson. The Collins family have been re-engaged.

MAJOR EDWARDES.—The "Hero of Mooltan" arrived in Shrewsbury, the capital of his native county, on Saturday last, and met with a most enthusiastic reception, the Mayor and Corporation, with about 10,000 of the inhabitants, having assembled to do him honour. A complimentary and appropriate address was presented to the gallant soldier, which he acknowledged with a suitable reply, and the affair passed off in a manner highly satisfactory to all parties.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

This establishment will positively be opened on Tuesday, the 12th inst. The opera will be "Medea," which has been so long on the shelf for want of a suitable lyrical tragedian to impersonate the heroine, that it now returns with the attraction of novelty. The libretto is founded upon the sublime tragedy for which the Corinthians gave five talents to Euripides to induce him to compose it, hoping thereby to appease the gods and deliver Corinth from pestilence—a tragedy which has had many imitators in the modern drama. That great composer Mayer converted it into a musical poem, which, interpreted by Pasta and her lyrical contemporaries, had immense success in Italy, Germany, France, and still more in England. But when Pasta retire', no other was found with adequate power to struggle against the remembrance she had left. At the express desire of Pasta, Parodi has assumed her mantle as Medea, as she did in Norma, and with equal success: she will be ably supported by Giuliani, Calzolari, and Beletti. The ballet is a highly fantastic creation, with picturesque decorations, and new and striking effects. Its name, "Les Métamorphoses," does not merely denote "Ovidian passages;" but all sorts of transformations, diableries, espagleries, and masquerades, &c. follow each other, in which Carlotta Grisi, enacting the part of a sprite, successively assumes the forms of a page, a rustic coquette, a "will-o'-the-wisp," a domino, a cavalier, &c. The ballet is full of the graceful, the picturesque, and pathetic, as well as of frolic; and yet the rapid succession of the varied situations brings the whole within a moderate compass.

SURREY.

Mr. Justice Talfourd's tragedy of "Ion" was performed on Monday—the hero by Mr. Creswick, and Adrastus by Mr. Mead. After which, a new two-act drama, entitled "Hearts at Fault, or Six Years More," was produced. The love of a rich heiress for a dependant orphan is the main interest of the piece; and there is some ingenuity in making the latter respond at first rather as a friend than as a lover to her deep passion. Henriette (Madame Ponisi) is the name of the heroine—Emile Durand (Mr. Shepherd) that of the youth. A Mr. Derosier (Mr. H. Widdicomb) becomes her suitor: her father consents. It is then that Henriette's passion for Emile is revealed: the revelation is creative, and kindles in Emile a sudden reflexion. The parties wed, to the annoyance of Darcier, a foolish gentleman, whose peculiarities are meant to be amusing. Six years elapse. Pauline (Miss R. Maicolm), a cousin of Henriette, is now introduced. Her presence more and more convinces Emile that he had never truly loved; that, in fact, he loves but her. Henriette is in despair; resolves on suicide; but on the river's brink, is rescued by Pauline. The transaction restores Emile to a sense of his duty: and all parties show their gratitude by bestowing the hand of the preserver on Pauline. We know not what to say of this conclusion.

A third piece—a farce, entitled "Adam Buff" was more satisfactory—founded on one of Douglas Jerrold's stories. The want of a shirt makes Adam Buff (Mr. Widdicomb) a philosopher. Dick Dulcimer (Mr. Raymond) seeks his assistance in a love affair, which is quite successful in the Adam from beginning. However, Adam subsequently meets with one Mr. Socrates Shortnight (Mr. Fitzroy), who takes the shirtless philosopher home, and introduces him to his niece, Louisa Bromley (Miss E. Bromley) the very object, as it happens, of Dick Dulcimer's passion. Here Adam is surprised by Dick, and an explanation ensues. The latter is accompanied by a friend, Tommy Jones (Mr. Rogers), a charity boy, and decided droll; between whom and Adam much characteristic fun is generated. The farce was decidedly successful.

DRURY-LANE.

Cumberland's "Wheel of Fortune" was produced on Monday, for the purpose of introducing Mr. Vandenhoff in the character of Penruddock. In this character Mr. John Kemble was great; and, as a professed member of that school of acting, no worthier successor may be named than Mr. Vandenhoff. The play was well supported, though to a modern audience it must, we fear, needs appear dull and slow.

PRINCESS'.

A new extravaganza and a new farce have been successfully produced here. The first is entitled "My Wife shan't go," and partly takes place in the boxes of the theatre—where Mr. Forman performs the part of Mr. Phosphorus, and protests against his wife, Mrs. Stanton (Miss Bleaden) entering a private room with a supposed gentleman, viz. Miss Somers in male attire. Another person from the opposite boxes objects to this interruption; and somebody from above interferes in the dispute. The farce is entitled "Ice and Cold," broadly interpreted: two baths—the clothes of the bather being stolen by a fellow-lodger. In this, alas, Mr. Forman acts the hero. Pieces of this calibre, merely meant for temporary effect, require only a passing notice.

IRELAND.

LORD GOUGH.—The Tipperary Free Press says:—"We understand that his Lordship purposes returning to the land of his fathers, and that his seat, Rathronan House, in the county of Limerick, is being put in order for his reception. If this be so, we can fairly promise him a cead mile failte which will cheer his truly Irish heart, and amply repay him for those slights wh.ch, attempting to be cast upon him, have but made more, reflected only disgrace and discomfiture upon their originators."

THE LORD PRIMATE.—The health of his Grace the Lord Primate is fast progressing towards convalescence. His Grace has been able to leave his room every day for a short time.

Dr. Cullin, the new Roman Catholic Archbishop, is daily expected at Armagh from Rome.

A clerical preferment has become vacant in Ireland by the death of the Very Rev. the Dean of Leighlin, which took place on Friday night last.

The Banner of Ulster states that some aristocratic landowners in the neighbourhood of Ballynahinch and Downpatrick have reduced the wages of their labourers very considerably, without having offered any reduction in their rents

WESTPORT EMBROIDERY AND SEWED MUSLIN FACTORY.—A factory has been established by the Marquis of Sligo and his charitable lady, where one hundred young girls are instructed in needlework by teachers from Belturbet. This establishment is carried on in the noble Marquis's farm-yard. Although it has been only opened a few weeks, the work is described as being really excellent, and of a quality that will get far to pay the expenses incurred.

ENCUMBERED ESTATES.—The Encumbered Estates Commission have, at length, encountered a difficulty which obliges them to have recourse to a court of law. It occurs in the construction of a will in the matter of the estate of Charles Dennison, deceased, of Kilmanahan, in the county of Waterford, announced on Saturday that a case should be prepared for the opinion of a court of law, at the same time that they, the commissioners, might feel it their duty to act independently of that opinion.

RAILWAYS.—A plan projected by Sir John Macneil, the eminent railway engineer, for the extension of a system of branch and connecting railways over Ireland, has been laid before the Monaghan grand jury, to bring it under public notice. Sir John proposes that the formation of a government commission under whose control the system should be worked; the grand juries should present for the land necessary for the foundation of the railways in their respective districts, and should guarantee 3 per cent interest, the railways being constructed by Government advances, to be repaid within a number of years. The lines to be single, and constructed on an average at £5000 per mile.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The meetings of the coursing brotherhood during the current week have been numerous enough, but none of them have possessed more than ordinary interest. The fixtures for next week are—Coventry (over the new course), on Tuesday and Wednesday; the East Cumberland, Chalbury, and Preston on Thursday; and Doncaster, which will include several fair races, on Thursday and Friday. The Grand Military and Leamington Annual Steeplechases come off in the following week; they promise to be "first-rate."

TATTERSALL'S.

TUESDAY.—Cheerful, who was in immense force for the Metropolitan, having been the only animal really backed, we shall make no apology for passing the other spring handicaps without a quotation; and of the Derby betting it is only necessary to select Gilbert, Glincher, and Mildew as having been principally in demand, each at an improved figure.

The enormous quantity of potatoes lately brought into London from the Continent has reduced the price from 90s. to 70s. per ton. As many as 9000 tons have been imported within the last week, principally from Dunkirk, Dieppe, Ostend, and Antwerp.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT WINDSOR AND IN LONDON.

The past week has been one of unusual activity in Court life. On Saturday her Majesty and the Prince Consort, with the Royal children, left Buckingham Palace for Windsor Castle, where they remained until Tuesday. On Wednesday (by desire of her Majesty) the Prince held a levee at St. James's Palace, her Majesty presiding at a Court the same afternoon. And to-day (Saturday) her Majesty holds a Privy Council at Buckingham Palace.

The Court Newsman thus records the leading incidents attendant upon Royalty during the week:—

On Friday evening the Queen had a dinner party at Buckingham Palace. The company included the Duke of Wellington, Lord Gough, the Earl of Mulgrave, the Right Hon. Sir Robert and Lady Peel, the Right Hon. Sir John Hobhouse, the Right Hon. Wm. Sebright Lascelles, Sir Hamilton and Lady Seymour, and Col. the Hon. C. B. and Mrs. Phipps.

On Saturday afternoon her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, the Princess Alice, the Princess Helena, and the Princess Louisa, and attended by the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe, Lord Byron, Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey, Lord Alfred Paget, Colonel Bouverie, Mrs. Gray, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household attended divine service in the private chapel. The Hon. and Rev. G. Wellesley officiated.

On Monday her Majesty and the Prince, with the Royal children, took early walking exercise on the slopes. The Prince Consort afterwards enjoyed the diversion of hunting in the neighbourhood of Windsor.

On Tuesday the Queen and the Prince left the Castle for town, travelling by a special train on the South-Western Railway from Datchet. On arriving at the Richmond station, her Majesty, with the Prince Consort and the Prince of Wales, alighted, and entering a Royal carriage, drove to the Star and Garter Hotel, to dine with the Duke of Cambridge and Princess Mary de Neuilly. Her Majesty remained with the illustrious exiles more than an hour, and then left in an open travelling carriage and four for the metropolis, taking her route through Richmond Park, by Roehampton Gate, and over Barnes Common, on to the great western road into London.

On Wednesday, after the Levee, the Queen and the Prince honoured the performance at the French Plays with their presence.

On Thursday the Queen walked in the gardens of Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness Prince Albert rode out on horseback in the morning, attended by Colonel Bouverie. Her Majesty afterwards had a dinner-party at Buckingham Palace. The band of the Coldstream Guards were in attendance during dinner.

Lord Alfred Paget (Clerk Marshal) has relieved Colonel Buckley in his duties of Equerry in Waiting to her Majesty; and Colonel Bouverie has relieved Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. Alexander Gordon in his duties as Equerry in Waiting to his Royal Highness Prince Albert.

THE QUEEN'S COURT.

On Wednesday her Majesty held a Court at Buckingham Palace, at which Lord Campbell had an audience of her Majesty, and delivered his seals of office as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. His Lordship afterwards kissed hands on being appointed Lord Chief Justice of England. At the Court the Earl of Carlisle had an audience of the Queen, to kiss hands on being appointed Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

THE PRINCE CONSORT'S LEVEE.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert (by the desire of the Queen) held a levee at St. James's Palace, on behalf of her Majesty, on Wednesday afternoon.

His Royal Highness arrived from Buckingham Palace shortly before two o'clock, and was received by the Lord Chamberlain and the Master of the Horse. His Royal Highness was attended by Lord George Lennox, Lord in Waiting, Captain Francis Seymour (in waiting), and Colonel Wylde, Groom of the Bedchamber; Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey, Private Secretary; and Col. Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting. Lord Dufferin, Lord in Waiting to the Queen; Sir Edward Bowater, Groom in Waiting; Lord Alfred Paget (Clerk Marshal), Equerry in Waiting; and Messrs. Forbes and Gordon, Pages of Honour to the Queen, also attended the Prince.

His Royal Highness's Body Guard, under the command of Captain Phibbs, Exon in Waiting, was on duty in the Palace.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge (attended by Mr. Edmond Mildmay) and his Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Hesse attended the levee.

On the diplomatic circle having been introduced, a variety of presentations were made by the different foreign Ministers.

The general circle was very numerously attended. Among the more noticeable presentations were the following:—Lord Gough, G.C.B., on his elevation to the Peerage, and on his return from foreign service, by the Duke of Wellington; Major Herbert Edwardes, C.B., by Sir John C. Hobhouse, President of the Board of Control; the Bishop of London, on his appointment to the see, by the Archbishop of Canterbury; the Dean of St. Paul's, on his promotion, by the Archbishop of Canterbury; the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, by the Right Hon. Lord Campbell; the Lord Mayor Elect, by the Duke of Wellington; Lord John Russell; Hon Captain Rous, on his appointment as Naval Aide-de-camp to her M.jesty, by the First Lord of the Admiralty; Mr William Hay, on his appointment as Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, by Sir G. Grey.

POLITICAL AND FASHIONABLE REUNIONS.

Viscount and Viscountess Hardinge gave a grand entertainment on Saturday last, at their mansion in Great Stanhope-street, to Lord and Lady Gough, and a distinguished circle of the fashionable world responded to her Ladyship's invitation, and the réunion was altogether one of the most brilliant of the season. The company began to arrive at ten o'clock, and from that hour the spacious apartments were crowded with a succession of visitors. His grace the Duke of Wellington came at half-past ten to pay his respects to her Ladyship. Lord and Lady Gough, Viscount Hardinge, Sir Robert and Lady Peel, and Major Hardinge were present, and the noble Lord's staff, the foreign Ministers and more distinguished guests entered by the garden gate in St. James's Park, from whence a tastefully designed corridor, in Edgington's best style, extended to the mansion. The whole suite of rooms on the principal floor were thrown open on the occasion, and, with the exception of the grand staircase, brilliantly illuminated, under the direction of Messrs. Sedgwick and Taylor. Lady John Russell will have another assembly on Wednesday.

The Marchioness of Normanby left town on Thursday morning, for the British Embassy at Paris

The Marquis and Marchioness of Kildare have taken a mansion in St. James's-square for the season.

Earl Fitzwilliam has been unanimously elected High Steward of Cambridge, in the room of the late Lord Godolphin.

Viscount Gough took his seat in the House of Lords on Monday night. His Lordship was introduced by Viscount Hardinge and Viscount Hawarden, and very warmly welcomed by the Duke of Cambridge, the Marquis of Anglesey, and other noble Peers.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer and Lady Mary Wood left town yesterday for Brighton.

Lord Tullamore, eldest son of the Earl of Charleville, was married on Thursday last to Arabella Louisa, youngest daughter of the late Henry Case, Esq., of Shenstone Moss, in the county of Stafford.

THE NEW LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.—Lord Campbell was sworn in a Serjeant-at-Law and Lord Chief Justice of England, in the Lord Chancellor's private room, at the House of Lords, on Tuesday. Mr. Justice Coleridge and Mr. Justice Wightman were present, and the noble Lord, after the ceremony, received the congratulations of his friends. The ceremony took place shortly before five o'clock. The noble and learned Lord was in the course of the morning rung out of Lincoln's-inn, according to the ancient usage of the professing, as he was a member and bencher of that inn. The ceremony was enacted in the bell tower of Lincoln's-inn Hall. On the noble and learned Lord taking leave of the Lincoln's-inn Society Lord Brougham addressed a complimentary address, to which the noble and learned Lord gave the suitable response.

CROSBY HALL.—On MONDAY evening, Miss Stuart will give an "Assemplication" of Shakspeare's female characters, with a Shakspearean and Miscellaneous Concert.

EMIGRATION.—Messrs. Marshall and Edridge, accompanied by other gentlemen interested in the Australian trade, had an interview with her Majesty's Colonial Land and Emigration Commissioners, at their offices in Parkstreet, and afterwards with Earl Grey, at the Colonial-office, on the subject of the complaints which have lately appeared in the public prints respecting certain emigrant vessels, when the system adopted in their ships was explained, and their earnest desire expressed to act on any suggestions which might be made to ensure to passengers greater security and comfort.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

Her most gracious Majesty the Queen has been pleased to honour the Asylum for Idiots with her patronage, and to constitute his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales a member for life, with the privilege of one bed in perpetuity.

Last week, the Hon. E. H. Stanley, M.P., forwarded £50 to R. Baggs, Esq., for distribution amongst the poor of Lynn, which sum that gentleman handed over to the clergy, amongst whom it was apportioned as follows:—£15 for St. Margaret's district, £15 for St. Nicholas's, £10 for St. John's, and £10 for All Saints.

Last week, the prisoner Samuel Best Foote, who is now in Exeter gaol awaiting his trial at the ensuing assizes on the charge of arson, by setting fire to his premises in Queen-street, was found suspended to the iron bar of the window in his cell, by his neckcloth, insensible. He is now recovered from the effects of this abortive attempt at suicide, and two prisoners have been placed in his cell with him to prevent its repetition.

An extensive conflagration took place on Saturday night last, at Elm Lodge Farm, near Reading, the property of Mr. George Higgs. Barns, stables, cow-houses, granaries full of corn, wheat ricks, even the cow cribs in the yard, were all destroyed. Providentially the horses were saved. This is the third fire within fourteen days that has occurred within three miles of Reading, at farm homesteads, doubtless the work of incendiaries.

As Mr. Edward Evans, joiner, of Hollywell, was walking through Begin, on Thursday, with his head down in order to evade the dust and wind, he was knocked down by a horse, and the wheel of the cart passed over his head, killing him on the spot.

Bulkeley Hope, Esq., is appointed a stipendiary magistrate for the Cape of Good Hope; and Captain Henderson, R.N., has taken his departure to superintend the improved convict system in Western Australia.

Lieutenant Baker, of the Coast Guard service, stationed at the Queen's Scarrens, near Hastings, made a seizure, last week, of a vessel 62 tons burden, the Mary Ann, of Rochester, which, upon boarding her, was found to contain 63 tubs of foreign spirits.

The Cologne Gazette declares that all the rumours that have been current respecting a Prussian expedition to Neufchatel are unfounded.

Before its adjournment, last week, the Second Chamber of Prussia adopted the departmental and provincial law, from the advantages of which the Government of Posen is excluded. This measure had caused great dissatisfaction to the ex-representatives of the Grand Duchy.

The German Reform of Berlin announces that M. de Radowitz has been appointed Plenipotentiary President of the Council of Administration, and that M. de Bodelschwingh has retired from the Council.

Letters from Berlin and Frankfort state that great sensation has been caused by the recent dismissal of the Liberal, and the nomination of an absolutist Ministry in Electoral Hesse. The change was considered a severe check to Liberal views, and a great advantage to Austria. The Chamber had unanimously adopted a vote of thanks to the dismissed Ministers.

The Tweed has got into a more favourable state for salmon fishing with the rod, but, generally speaking, there has not been much sport yet. In the beginning of last week, the youthful Marquis of Bowmont killed three fish. On Monday last, Colonel Childers, in Sprouston Dub, killed nine fish, three of them clean salmon, of 19lb. or 11lb. each; Mr. De Winton, four fish in the same water; the Duke of Roxburghe, two fish; and the Marquis of Bowmont, one fish.

The fire which occurred recently on the estate of Mr. Bosanquet, the banker, at Clay Hill, near Enfield, proved more destructive that was at first supposed. Upwards of two thousand volumes of valuable books were destroyed, as also a large quantity of the manuscripts of the late Chief Justice Tindal, and other effects, the property of Captain Tindal, brother of Mrs. Bosanquet. The loss will prove very considerable, and Mr. Bosanquet is not insured.

A serious accident occurred, on Monday last, to Mrs. Waldron, an old and respectable inhabitant of Cients, near Stourbridge, whose husband accidentally shot off her foot, as she was sitting by the fire, by picking the nipple of his gun with a pin. It is supposed that the friction caused the powder to explode. The leg was amputated, to save her life.

Sarah Chances, who recently died in Henby Churchyard almshouses, had drunk, in the last twelve years of her life, to assuage pain, 51 gallons 3 pints 8 ounces of laudanum, costing her £110 8s. 4d.

A spirit of insubordination and agrarian outrage has during the past week manifested itself in the village of Fordham, in consequence of the farmers having reduced the labourers' wages to 7s. a week. Some left their occupations to join in parading the streets, and add to the excitement. Several were sent to prison for leaving their horses and work, and on Tuesday night the ploughs of R. D. Fyson, Esq., were broken to pieces. On Thursday night, the homestead on the off-hand farm of R. D. Fyson, Esq., situate near the church, was consumed, and there is no doubt it was purposely fired.

On Sunday evening last, about half-past six o'clock, the inhabitants of the village of Steeple Morden, in Cambridgeshire, were alarmed by the cry of fire, which proved to be on the farm of Mr. George Lilley. The fire first enveloped the stable, wheat barn full of wheat, barley barn, one more full unthrashed, and forty quarters dressed; an oat barn empty, a bean stack, hay rick, haulm rick, pea stack, hen-house, cow-house, and the piggeries. No stock received any damage, with the exception of some fowls. A person of the name of Simeon Williams, a resident of the same place, has been taken up on suspicion.

On Saturday night last, the farm-yard of Mr. Edwin Dudley, at Kempston, Bedford, was fired by a man named Mitchell, of the same place, who has been committed on his own confession. Two large wheat ricks, a barley stack, a long stack of beans, a range of cattle sheds, and some small wooden buildings were completely consumed.

With reference to the great Exhibition of 1851 a large and influential meeting was held at Carlisle Town Hall, last week, the Mayor in the chair, when the usual resolutions were agreed to, and a committee for that district appointed. A similar meeting was held at Blackburn, for the same objects and with the same results.

Mr. M'Leay, collector of Customs at Dumfries, has been promoted to be comptroller at Sunderland; Mr. J. Lawson, comptroller at Newry, to be collector at Dumfries; Mr. J. Sloan, comptroller at Dumfries, to be comptroller at Newry; and Mr. R. Norman, second clerk at Leith, to be comptroller at Dumfries.

An importation from America took place in the early part of the week, of great importance to our mining interests, being no less than 300 tons of copper, the produce of the smelting works of the United States. It was taken into Swansea direct from Liverpool, and is estimated as worth upwards of £30,000.

A destructive fire broke out last week, in an extensive dairy-yard, in Lime-street, off Townsend street, Dublin. Two large ricks of hay were consumed, together with a shed in which thirty milch cows were kept; and although the fire took place early in the afternoon, the flames spread with such rapidity that it was with great difficulty any of the cattle were saved. Eleven cows, a mare, two calves, and some pigs were burned to death, and several other cows were much injured by the fire.

The Presburgh municipality has just ascertained the number of troops who have been lodged and boarded in that town since the entry of Windischgrätz, in the last November, and the 1st January, 1850 a period of one year and thirteen days. The figures are rather curious:—116,149 officers; 1,341,907 soldiers of all kinds; 359,136 horses.

There has been a dreadful murder at San Francisco, California—Mr. Arthur C. Ingalls, formerly of Philadelphia, having been awakened out of his sleep and killed by a drunken man boarding in the same house. The murderer escaped, but a reward of 3000 dollars has been offered for his apprehension. There had been other homicides and violence outside.

A number of the wealthy men of San Francisco are organizing a steam-packet hne from that port to the Sandwich Islands, China, and, if practicable, also to Japan. A steam line from California to Asia is expected to be under way within a year—probably within a few months.

The enormous quantity of potatoes lately brought into London from the Continent has reduced the prices from 90s. to 70s. per ton. As many as 5000 tons have been sold within the last week, principally from Dunkirk, Dieppe, Ostend, and Antwerp.

The Irish Poor-Law Commissioners recommend Buenos Ayres as a field for emigration from Ireland, the price of labour being excessive, and there being an especial demand for such work as hedging, ditching, and other agricultural work, cattle keeping, farming, and the driving of flocks from district to district.

The Essex County Lunatic Asylum, to be built near Brentwood, will be shortly commenced. The site is declared to be unequalled, and the building promises to be second to none in the kingdom. It will be in the Tudor style, and the cost is estimated at £50,000.

The Oriental Club give their grand dinner to Lord Gough on Tuesday, the 9th of April.

The ceremony of the enthronement of the new Bishop of Llandaff is fixed to take place at the Cathedral, Llandaff, on Wednesday, the 13th instant.

Mr. Humphrey Brown, M.P. for Tewkesbury, is recovering from his late illness, and it is expected that he will very soon resume his Parliamentary duties. The hon. gentleman has no intention whatever of resigning his seat, though such a report was in circulation a few days since.

The election of Lord Rector, Aberdeen, has been made in favour of Sheriff Gordon, who had a majority of seventy-two over his opponent, the author of the "Larter Day" pamphlets—Thomas Carlyle.

The Earl of Mauvers has sent a benefaction to Dr. M'Ternan, of Greenwich Hospital, in aid of the subscription now raising for the six destitute orphans of Lieut M'Kenzie; and Commander Craven J. Featherstone has remitted £38 for the same benevolent object, being the amount of sundry donations collected by him at Ripon.

At Twyford, (Bucks), about two o'clock, on Sunday morning last, a stack of furze was felon-ously set on fire, on the premises of Christopher Perkins, Esq., during his absence at his residence in Oxfordshire. By prompt assistance and a plentiful supply of water, the fire was confined to the stack, or the amount of damage must have been very great.

An address signed by nearly one thousand clergymen and laymen of the Church of England, praying for a revival of the active functions of the Convocation, having been forwarded to the Queen, the Home Secretary has replied that her Majesty "did not signify any commands thereon."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

RUDIS.—The first is too easy. Of the other you have omitted to send a solution

F G B.—The first two are promising, but not up to our mark. The third, if found, upon re-examination, to be correct, shall have a place among the Enigmas

JUVENTUS, No. 4 is the best. The others are very loosely composed. We should recommend you to devote yourself to one problem only at a time

W J S.—The Problem, we are sorry to say, is inadmissible; and your solution of No. 318 incorrect

J C L, R D M, are thanked, but their problems are not sufficiently abstruse to puzzle even the youngest of our chess readers

BRUTUS.—The best and simplest plan is to give merely the initial letter of the place, in Red ink if a White piece, and in Black ink if the piece is Bl ck

J D, Maynooth.—1. The Black King in Enigma No 546 should stand at Q 3 6th, not K 3 6th. 2. Look at No. 544 once more

J F, Blythe.—1. With respect to Enigma No. 546, see the notice above to J. D. 2. Your solution is not all correct

R D M.—The Key move to Enigma No 544 is 1. K to his 7th

G D B.—The amendments are all to right We must still protest, however, against your diagrams. Why designate the dark places by light ink, and the white ones by black? You can have no idea of the trouble such little matters occasion

W L, Dorking.—They are both very promising, and we accept them as earnest of something of a higher quality from the same source

Q, Glasgow.—The key-move to Enigma No. 543 is, 1. R to R 8sq. In 546 and 543 there appears some error, which the authors will probably set right

THE CHESS MATCH AT WASHINGTON, UNITED STATES, FOR 1000 DOLLARS.—TERMINATION OF THE CONTEST.

By the arrival of the Europa we are favoured with the particulars of this contest, which, with the characteristic impatuosity of our transatlantic friends, has been brought to a close in fewer days than a match of such importance here would have occupied weeks. Owing to the dangerous illness of Mr. Stanley (the English competitor), who for a fortnight previously had been confined to his chamber, the belligerents did not meet at Washington before the 9th of February; the preliminaries, however, were so speadily settled, that play began on the 11th, and by the evening of the 14th the battle, consisting of seventeen games, was at an end!

In games played under such circumstances, it would, of course, be idle to look for any of those profound and brilliant and careful combinations—those brilliant and daring stratagems, which by turns delight and electrify us in the match games of the best European players of modern days. But though deficient in the higher qualities of Chess skill, there is a certain spirit and piquancy about some to tuese parties which are sure to render them attractive to the multitude superadded to which is the interest inseparable from them, of their constituting the first fair stand-up fight at Chess betw.en an Englishman and an American; so that we have little doubt of their commanding a due share of attention from the amateurs of this country, and exciting a good deal of speculation as to the result of a return match, which we hear will come off at New York in a few weeks.

The following is the final score at the conclusion of the play:—

C. Stanley	..	..	..	..	11 Games

12. Q Kt to Q sq	Q to Q B 3d	25. B takes Kt
13. K Kt to R 4th (d)	Q Kt to K B sq	And White wins the first game.

(a) We prefer playing this Pawn to Q 4th at once; because it gives freedom to White's game, while it confines his adversary's.

(b) Mr. Stanley's method is "old ward," which he acquired, in days long past, among the redoubtable s of merrie England."

(c) Q to her Kt 3d looks much stronger.

(d) Three Knights in combination are terrible adversaries to cope with, especially when they gain so favourable a position for attack as the present.

(e) By this we should give odds for Black's game.

(f) For a moment, the necessity of capturing with this Pawn seems to retard White's attack, but it is only for a moment, since the opening made for his K Rook and Queen to sweep the Bishop s file gives additional force to the assault in a move or two

(g) We will not pretend to comprehend the purport of tha move, but give it up as quite beyond our fathom

(h) A light breaks in upon us! Black might have meant, by moving his Rook away, to tempt his opponent to take the Kt Pawn, thinking that if he did so this move of the Kt would enable the Black King to win the adverse Kt. If this was really the object of the Rook's move, Mr T. evidently overlooked the capture of his Bishop by the White Kt, and could have examined the p sition but very superficially indeed

(i) Mr. Stanley has now got the game in his own hands, and finishes it with his accustomed vigour and ability.

AND THE GAME WAS GIVEN UP AS A DRAWN BATTLE.

(a) Mr. Turner, we learn, is profoundly versed in all the "bookish theoric" of the gambits; while Mr. Stanley is confessedly ignorant of these perilous openings both in theory and practice too

(b) The attack obtained by sacrificing the Kt at this point is not sufficient to warrant it in a match game.

(c) Black plays this opening with great spirit and determination.

(d) While has now a very cramped uncomfortable sort of game; his best places are all out of play, and those in the field have scarcely any scope for their powers.

(e) As the Kt must perforce be played to K th presently, it would certainly have been better to move him there at once.

(f) To B K t 8th seems also a good move.

(g) With so fine a position as Black now has, it is difficult to understand how he could permit his advantage to come from him in the way he does.

(h) If he had taken the Bishop, White must have won the game.

(i) This move ought to have cost the game

(k) Instead of retreating his King he had simply to play the Kt to K B sq, and the adverse Pawns must have fallen in detail speedily.

(l) At this point we doubt if Black could win, for suppose—

FRANCE AND THE LONDON EXHIBITION OF 1851.

The Moniteur of Friday, March 1, contains a report, addressed to the President of the Republic by M. Dumas, the Minister of Commerce and Agriculture, relative to the co-operation of France in doing honour to the invitation from England to transmit specimens of its best productions for the Exhibition of 1851. It expresses the natural ambition of the manufacturers to maintain their well-earned reputation for taste and powers of production, and urges them to redoubled efforts on this occasion.

As commissioners have been formerly sent to Berlin, Vienna, Brussels, Madrid, &c., for the purpose of reporting on the national exhibitions of the respective countries, interesting accounts of which have been given to the world by M. Sallandrouze de Lamornaix, the Minister urges the appointment of a committee of co-operation, who shall take the necessary measures for enabling the manufacturers to transmit with security to England their various productions, for which purpose they would establish official communications with the Royal Commission in London.

The duties of the committee are proposed to be:—1. Affording information to the French manufacturers as to the conditions upon which their productions will be admitted. 2. Centralising information as to the transmission of those productions. 3. Concurring with the Royal Commission in London all the necessary measures for the transport, the reception, and the final placing of these productions; at the same time the minister reserves to himself the nomination of one or more commissioners, who shall make a report upon the exhibition, and which will eventually be published.

For this purpose a selection has been made of the most distinguished men, representing the various sciences, arts, and manufactures of France, and who, by their talents, their experience, their patriotic devotion, and their independence of character, have been deemed most worthy to assist in establishing more intimate mercantile relations between two countries so evidently designed to co-operate for the benefit of mankind; and it is fervently to be hoped that this mission to London may be an earnest proof of the desire of closer union, and of that noble emulation in the arts of peace, which are the best evidences of advance in order labour, and the general progress of nations towards happiness and prosperity.

The list of the committee contains the names of many men well known in the scientific and manufacturing world; among them are M. Charles Dupin, whose works on great Britain created so much sensation; Messrs. Payen and Balard, chemists; M. Fontaine, the architect; M. Sallandrouze de Lamornaix, the celebrated manufacturer of Aubusson carpets and tapestry, who already resides among us, and has established the Exhibition of Products of French industry in George-street, Hanover-square; Messrs. Morin, Chatellier, and Coombes, engineers, and others whose names are noted in the general list which is given, as being approved by the President of the Republic.

It is to be hoped that the co-operation and the experience of this commission will tend to fix the decision of our Royal Commissioners on many points on which, for want of previous training, they are necessarily as yet only scantily informed.

PREVIOUS EXAMINATION.—The prælectors of the several colleges have been requested to present the medical certificates of those junior sophs. who may be prevented by illness from attending the previous examination on Monday, the 11th of March, to the Vice-Chancellor and proctors, at Christ's College Lodge, on Friday, March 8, at 10 o'clock.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. W. Watkins, to the rectory of Bedwas, Monmouth. The Rev. John Burdon, to the rectory of Welsh Bickner, in the county of Monmouth. The Rev. Henry Walker Yeoman, to the rectory of Monkton Moor, Yorkshire. The Rev. William Joseph Whately, to the rectory of Cawthorne, Yorkshire. The Rev. R. Cooper Black, to the rectory of St. Mary's, Huntingdon. The Rev. W. T. Pearse Meade King, to the rectory of Norton-cum-Twycross, Leicestershire. The Rev Samuel Thompson Mosse, to the rectory of Ashfield, Suffolk. The Rev. Thomas Yard, to the rectory of Ashwell, Rutlandshire. The Rev. James Downing, to the rectory of Dodbrooke, Devon. The Rev. C. J. Champneys, to the vicarage of Wendover, Bucks. The Rev. Edward Hamond, to the vicarage of Bilton, Gloucestershire. The Rev. Arthur Henry Brereton, to the vicarage of Mendham, Norfolk and Suffolk. The Rev. Wm. Robbins, jun., to the vicarage of Shropham, Norfolk.

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have recently had testimonials of esteem and affection presented to them:—The Rev. J. N. Pocklington, curate of St. Matthew's, Manchester, on the occasion of his being ordained a priest, by the teachers in the school, the officers of the church, and the ladies of the congregation.—The Rev John Williams, curate of the parish church, Preston, Lancashire, by the congregation, on his departure to another sphere of duty.—The Rev. Joseph Dale, upwards of thirty-eight years curate of Donington, in the diocese of Lichfield, by the inhabitants of that parish, and his friends at Albrighton and in the neighbourhood.—The Rev. T. Ratliff, curate, by the inhabitants of Betworth.—The Rev. Henry Newland, by the congregation of St. Simon's Church, Salford.

VACANCIES.—Marsk V., county and archdiocese of York; value £91, with residence; patron, Earl of Zetland; Rev. H. W. Yeoman, promoted. Owersby w. Kirkby-Osgodby V., county and diocese of Lincoln; value £372, with residence; patron, J. Angerstein, Esq.; Rev. W. J. Whately, promoted. Fobbing R., Essex, diocese of Rochester; value £564, with residence; patron, the Crown.

UPTON CHURCH.

Of late years, many appeals have been made to the public in aid of the restoration of certain of our ancient churches, which, from various causes, have fallen into decay. An effort is now making to extend this restorative hand to the fine old Norman church of Upton, near Eton. Foremost in the good work appears Mr. Edward Jesse (Surveyor of her Majesty's Woods and Forests), who, in a letter to the Times, dated Richmond, Feb. 22, thus explains the perilous state of the structure:

"Upton Church has now been closed for some years, and its dilapidated state renders it unfit for public service, for which it is much needed, owing to the more rapid increase of the modern parish church. Independent of its interesting character, there is so much of interest attached to the old church, its architecture is so ancient and so beautiful, and the groined roof of its chancel so much to be admired that it is hoped a sufficient sum may be raised to complete the necessary restoration. Towards this the sum of £380 has been subscribed, including a liberal donation of £50 from her Majesty. £1200 will be required to restore the whole of the church, and £800 for the body of it only, supposing the steeple sum cannot be raised." We hope, with Mr. Jesse, that the knowledge of these circumstances will aid in raising the requisite funds for the work of restoration; the anxiety for which will, doubtless, be increased by a more general acquaintance with the architectural character of the Church.

INTERIOR OF UPTON CHURCH, BUCKS.

Upton, which has the affix of cum-Chalvey, lies on the border of Buckinghamshire, about a mile distant from Windsor. The village is small, but the parish is of great extent. It is in the hundred of Stoke, and deanery of Burnham. The manor, which belonged to Merton Abbey, was on lease to the family of the Barkers in the reign of James I. It then became the property of the Lanes, and subsequently belonged to George Edwards, Esq., of Hendon, in Bedfordshire, whose family possessed it as early as the year 1725.

The Church (which isthe parish church of Slough) is a very small but interesting edifice; and, with the exception of the porch and upper stage of the tower, is of Norman architecture. The exterior has no pretension to enrichment, save the elegant doorway forming the entrance to the nave, and which is the subject of one of our Illustrations. The present entrance is through a small door in the tower, which is "ivy-mantled;" and, being near Stoke Pogeis, the occasional residence of the poet Gray, Upton Churchyard has been fancifully considered as the subject of his beautiful Elegy.

The interior presents a sad picture of desolation. The view we give is taken from within the tower, looking towards the chancel—the tower, we should observe, being open its whole height; and on the north side there remains part of a rude wooden staircase, which once, doubtless, led to the roof.

The massive character of the chancel arch is very striking; the chancel itself has a waggon-headed roof, ornamented with simple groining. There is a dwarf screen of oak—once enriched with tracery, as the marks on the wood-work testify—spanning from pier to pier of the chancel arch. The nave roof is arched, but totally devoid of ornament. The wall of the western or nave side of the tower has a small archway in it, to communicate with the chancel, but of much smaller dimensions than the chancel arch itself; and on its northern side is an arch of enriched Gothic tracery, the pillars supporting it bearing evident marks of having been coloured in the olden time. On the southern side of the nave arch are the remains of a large archway, now filled up with brickwork. The nave has a blocked-up Norman window in the west gable, and two on either side, small and plain. The two north windows are perpendicular, as is also the east window; and above the latter is a Norman loop.

At the eastern end of the chancel is a beautiful brass, to the memory of Edward Bulstrode, Esq., and Cecil his wife, dated 1599. A monument, erected in 1631, to Henry, the son of the said Edward Bulstrode, disfigures the beautiful Gothic arch in the nave before mentioned. On the north pier of the chancel arch is the tablet to Sir William Herschel; and near it is that to dame Mary his wife, both of the simplest style. The monument of the great astronomer is delineated in our View, and the readerwill not fail to observe how lowly is the final resting-place of the most gifted man of the present century.

Many years since, some farmers in the neighbourhood proposed to strip the tower of its ivy, as the harbour of the noxious sparrow; but the mantling evergreen was saved by the fostering protection of Archdeacon Heslop.

The Rectory, whichwas given to Merton Abbey by Paganus de Beauchamp, became the property of Eton College by an exchange many years before the Reformation. The Vicarage is in the gift of the Crown.

DECORATIVE ART.

(From a Correspondent.)

THE most certain and the readiest way to improve national taste in the Fine Arts is to familiarize all classes (from the working man upwards) with works characteristic of the peculiar artistic genius of various periods.

The judicious study of a single good work of original design, will produce more profitable results than any quantity of high theory; and must render essential service to the artistic manufacturer and decorative artisan, as well as more art-instruction to the public generally.

There are still vast hidden treasures of the ornamentist's art in this country, which it would be of incalculable benefit to publish in such a way as would render them most extensively available and instructive. We speak particularly with reference to the decorations of ancient domestic architecture, articles of furniture, old plate, jewellery, tapestry, embroidered and figured stuffs, &c.

To do something by way of example, we give two Engravings of part of an elaborately ornamented and picturesque ceiling, from the principal hotel in Barnstaple, Devon, which has never before been figured. The frames of the four Scripture subjects afford of themselves valuable lessons to various classes of ornamentists; indeed, whether we examine the details or consider the designas a whole, it will be admitted that this is a choice specimen of old English taste and skill. The date (cut on the little figure seated within one of the pendants) is JVLY, 1629.

The arched design represents that end of the room which is unmutilated. The ornaments of the other end, together with a small part of the ceiling, have been destroyed in forming a passage.

Lyson, in his "Magna Britannia" (Devon), says, "The Golden Lion, in Barnstaple, is said to have been a town-house of the Earls of Bath. The arms of the Earl of Bath and other arms are in a large room of this house which has an ornamented ceiling." * It was certainly the property and the residence of Sir Nicholas Hooper, Serreant-at-Law in the reign of Queen Anne, and from whom it passed to the Bassets, and was sold by the late S. Basset, Esq." It is now the property of J. H. Maw, Esq., of Hastings.

In Gribble's "Memorials of Barum," the Earl of Bath is mentioned as Recorder, and as taking a great part in town affairs, about the year 1600; so it does not seem at all improbable that he had a house here.

* There is also another enriched ceiling of the same period, and of excellent design, in one the bed-rooms.

"OUR SAVIOUR AFTER THE TEMPTATION."—PAINTED BY SIR GEORGE HAYTER, M. A. S. L.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

"OUR SAVIOUR AFTER THE TEMPTATION."

This important contribution to the Exhibition, painted by Sir George Hayter, R. A. S. L., deservedly occupies a prominent position in the middle room: its dimensions are six feet nine inches in height; five feet eight inches in width.

The holy Evangelists who have related the miracle of the Angels Ministering to Our Saviour after the Temptation, vary as to the locality of its last scene; but the statement of St. Mathew, that it took place on "an exceeding high mountain," has been here adopted by the painter; and the view of the Valley of Jehosaphat, with the site of the city of Jerusalem, has been studied, so as to give a true general idea of the country in which the event took place. This miracle must be considered the first great triumph of Jesus Christ on earth; and therefore, although the extreme exhaustion from having fasted forty days rendered the ministering of angels necessary when his human strength was nearly annihilated, still the moment must have been one of intense joy to the heavenly host; and has, therefore, been treated in the colouring so as to avoid any sad or melancholy impression on the spectator, by appropriating such colours for the wings and garments of the angels as were frequently given by the early painters of holy subjects.

The several Angels in this composition are intended, each by their action, to represent some passage connected with the Temptation—as, "He shall give his Angels charge concerning Thee; and in their hands they shall bear Thee up," is exemplified by two of them: "Man shall not live by bread alone," by another: and the Angel pointing upwards at the departing Evil Spirit, seen dissolving into a dark mass of cloud, which hangs portentous over Jerusalem, with his right hand repels the darkness, as "Get thee behind me, Satan:" whilst the lower Angel personifies these words, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God."

Of the general merits of this picture we took cognizance in our first notice of the Exhibition. The composition is, for the most part, excellent, and the drawing admirable. In the principal figure, the painter has attempted to portray divine resignation and exhaustion, free from the more acute bodily suffering under which the Saviour is generally represented. In light and shade, as well as in high finish, the picture is a masterly work.

OBVERSE OF THE "WREN" MEDAL.

THE "WREN" MEDAL OF THE ART-UNION OF LONDON.

We are this week enabled to give two Engravings of the Medal commemorative of Sir Christopher Wren, just issued by the Art-Union of London. Our Illustrations are nearly one-third larger than the actual size of the Medal, which is 2½ inches in diameter. The reverse bears the west front of St. Paul's Cathedral, by Mr. Benjamin Wyon, and is considered to be one of the most successful representations of a building on a medal ever achieved. The head of the great architect on the obverse is by Mr. Wilson.

The medallic series, illustrating the history of British art (to which the Wren Medal belongs), was undertaken by the Art-Union with a view to give encouragement to an art hitherto much neglected among us; and the specimens already issued form valuable mementos of our most distinguished artists, and of some of their chief works. Reynolds, Chantrey, and Hogarth are given on the medals hitherto published: Flaxman and Inigo Jones are far advanced towards completion; and one of Banks, the sculptor, is in contemplation.

We may mention, as another instance of the efforts of the Art-Union to encourage native art, the statuettes in iron of "Thalia," lately delivered to those members to whom they were allotted as prizes. The casting of this figure is an example of great difficulties in point of manufacture, most successfully overcome.

We are glad to learn that the subscription list of this year promises to be very large. The admirable pair of prints of the "Smile" and the "Frown," after Webster; Maclise's beautiful illustrations of the "Seven Ages," cannot fail to attract many new subscribers, and more firmly to attach the old members of the society.

REVERSE OF THE "WREN" MEDAL.

COMPOSITE GREAT CIRCLE SAILING.

NEW AND SHORTER ROUTE TO AUSTRALIA.

THE mercantile marine, and those interested in commerce with our distant colonies, have, within the last week, been taken by surprise by the account of the use of the unprecedentedly short passage made by Captain Godfrey, emigrant ship Constance, in seventy-seven days from Plymouth to Adelaide; having made her departure from England on the 20th of August, and arrived at the latter port on the 5th of November. The interest excited by this voyage is not only on account of the shortness of the time occupied, but also from this advantage being the result of a scientific discovery, which has now been tested, and is open to all navigators. The result is most important, since it will tend to shorten the voyage one month. Availing ourselves of the accompanying outlines, we will endeavour briefly to explain the principles of this voyage, which to most seamen appears to be a complete enigma.

The mariner, if he will know, traverses the ocean by the aid of charts; by their aid he determines the position of distant ports, and shapes his course to the most remote regions of the earth; and, to such an extent has he been accustomed to confide in his chart, that, for all practical purposes, he disregards the globular form; if such a route appears the shorter on his chart, he cannot conceive any other to possess that advantage.

Now, the earth being a globe, in order to describe its surface on a plane, requires a distortion of surface. The regions towards the poles are distended; and it is impossible to avoid this, and one of the consequences of these distortions is, that the most direct lines on the earth's surface are represented as curves, and curves are represented as straight lines. We have engraved a perspective view of a globe, with the same two tracks laid down on its surface. The change of the appearance of these two lines is surprising. On the chart, the old track appears the shorter: on the globe, this advantage is shown to belong to the new route: on the chart, both lines are convex towards the south; on the globe, they are both concave in that direction.

The theoretical principle on which this shorter route is founded, was published by order of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty about eighteen months since, in a work entitled "Tables to facilitate the practice of Great Circle Sailing," which work had previously received the sanction of the men of science. This voyage has been conducted on the principles which the author, Mr. Towson, of Devonport, has denominated "Composite Great Circle Sailing," and is applicable to voyages in conducting which Great Circle Sailing is not available. Our readers will at once perceive, by referring to the representation of the globe, that the direct track passes across the South Pole, and the Great Circle track leads to latitudes too high for navigation. Under such circumstances, the best thing that mariner can do is to trace the shortest track which is compatible with a favourable latitude. On his former voyage, Captain Godfrey determined by experience that the most favourable parallel as a maximum latitude is 50°, since in higher latitudes the wind is not so strong as the mariner could desire; and although the whole track from the point marked a to Adelaide, the winds through the year are uniformly favourable.

The composite route to Australia does not differ from other voyages until the mariner has reached about the latitude 34° south. Having cleared the trade winds, he then shapes his route on the arc of a great circle, varying his course by compass according as the latitude of the ship varies, as shown below; or he sails as near to these courses as the direction of the winds will permit. The courses are as follows:—

Lat.	Course.	Lat.	Course.	Lat.	Course.	Lat.	Course
20.0 .. S.	E.	29 50 .. 32 0 .. S.	E ¼ S.	46.0 .. 47 0 .. S.	E.	49.0 .. 49 30 .. S.	E ¼ S.
30 0 .. 34 0 .. S.	E ½ S.	41 30 .. 43 0 .. S.	E ¾ S.	47.0 .. 48 30 .. S.	E ½ S.	49 45 .. 49 57 .. S.	E ¾ S.
34 0 .. 37 0 .. S.	E ¾ S.	43 0 .. 44 30 .. S.	E S.	48 15 .. 48 30 .. S.	E ¾ S.
37 0 .. S.	E ½ E.	44 30 .. S.	E S E ½ S.	48.30 .. S.	E S. ¾ E.	49.57 .. S.	E ½ S.

This part of the voyage is about 3480 miles, and brings the ship 68 degrees of longitude nearer her destination. She then runs due east on the parallel 50, about 72 deg. 40 min. of longitude, being about 4360 miles, and then leaves that parallel by the route of a great circle for her destination. This last-named part of her voyage is 1865 miles, and about 43 deg. longitude—making altogether, from the commencement of the composite track, 8145 miles; whereas the same voyage by the Cape, and thence to Adelaide, by Mercator's sailing, is 9080—making a saving of distance to the amount of 935 miles, besides an equal saving of time, from the uniform favourable winds that blow in these latitudes.

INTELLIGENCE OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

(From the Globe of Thursday.)

With reference to the article in this day's Morning Herald, in which it is stated "The writer of the letter states that he had seen a gentleman from Kamschatka, who informed him that he had seen Sir John Franklin—that he and all his party were quite safe, and coming through the North-west passage"—we have been furnished with the following copy of a letter from Mr. Samuel Peck to the Lords of the Admiralty; by which it will be observed that no mention is made of Sir John Franklin having been "seen" by any one:—

(COPY.)

"Liverpool, March 6, 1850.

"To the Lords of the Admiralty, London.

"My Lords,—I hasten to give the intelligence that I received regarding Sir John Franklin and his Expedition, which I believe to be the first, and I trust will prove correct, as I can give full evidence of the honour and truthfulness of the writer, my son.

"Herewith a full extract of the letter, dated San Francisco Bay, California, Sunday, December 30, 1849:

"'There was a gentleman on board this ship yesterday that has just arrived from Kamschatka, with the news of the discovery of Sir John Franklin and all his party; they are all well, and have come through the North-West passage.

(Signed) 'CHARLES PECK.'

"My son writes from on board the English ship Blakeley, of Liverpool. I trust, my Lords, that I shall have been the first to give intelligence of the missing Expedition. The truth or erroneous information conveyed by the gentleman alluded to by my son must shortly become known. I give also a postscript to my son's letter

"P.S. This is favoured by Captain Askew, late of the barque Chilian, of London, who has kindly offered to post it for me at Panama, to clear the Yankee postage. (C. W. P.

(Signed) "SAMUEL PECK."

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Major-General Grant, C.B., has just been placed on the list of general officers receiving rewards for distinguished services.

Captain H. B. Wynyard is to succeed the late Major Canch as the fort-major at Edinburgh Castle.

PROMOTION FROM THE RANKS AND ANNUITIES.—A circular has been issued by the Secretary at War to commanding officers, to the effect that, "In being necessary to regulate the course of proceeding for obtaining the good conduct rewards, sanctioned by the Royal warrant of 1st July, 1848, Article 3, p. 4, and stating that, if the officer promoted from non-commissioned officer shall be serving abroad when such promotion shall be notified, the regulated allowance for his outfit may be inserted at once in the regimental accounts, provided the charge be supported by a certificate from the officer commanding the regiment, that the officer promoted has provided himself with the necessary outfit, and has paid for the same; and the commanding officer shall, in every such instance, specially notify to the War Office that he has sanctioned payment of the account. If, on the other hand, the officer shall be at home at the time of the notification, a previous application for the allowance should be made to the Secretary at War, through the commanding officer, accompanied by the certificate above required. In regard to the annuities and medals sanctioned for distinguished and meritorious services, the names of the individuals deemed worthy of the same being forwarded by commanding officers to the Commander-in-Chief, the payment of the annuities, when sanct oned, will be provided for by the Secretary at War. No charge whatever, under this head, is therefore to be made in the regimental accounts."

THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—At Woolwich, the preparations for the Arctic Expedition progress with moderate activity; the officers who have been appointed to the command of the vessels have the greatest difficulty to enter men and to make the necessary arrangements for the outfit. The Pioneer, st.-v., still remains in dock, the shipwrights being busy in strengthening her timbers and the engineers in making the assurance of her safety, so far as it rests on engines and boilers, complete. The Intrepid, st.-v., formerly the Free-Trade, has not yet arrived from the Mediterranean, but is expected daily. Both vessels will be fitted with Mr. Sylvester's warming apparatus; and every improvement that science or experience can suggest, to promote the comfort and safety of the officers and men, will be adopted. The Resolute and Assurance remain in dock, the one at Mr. Wigram's, the other at Mr. Green's yards, at Blackwall, where the work of strengthening and rigging them progresses rapidly. The Jasper, st.-v., runs to and fro between Woolwich and Blackwall, conveying the riggers who are employed in fitting the vessels. Both of the sailing-vessels are to have crews of 90 men, of whom 30 will be attached to each steamer, which will act as a tender.

PRIZE MONEY.—Notice is given to the commodore, officers, and ship's company of her Majesty's ship Actæon, George Mansel, K.q., captain, that they will be paid their respective proportions of prize money arising from the Brazilian brigantine Maria Theresa, on the 9th September, 1847, on the 22nd inst., at 10, John-street, Adelphi; and all shares not then claimed will be re-called every Tuesday and Friday, pursuant to act of Parliament. Commodore, £21 10s 9½d.; 1st class, £96 5s. 7d.; 3rd, £69 0s. 6½d.; 4th, £64 10s. 3½d.; 5th, £4 1s. 3d.; 6th, £2 14s. 9d.; 7th, £2 5s. 1½d.; 8th, £1 16s. 1½d.; 9th, £1 7s. 1d.; 10th, 18s. 0½d.; 11th, 12s. 6½d.; 12th, 9s. 0½d.; 13th, 6s. 9½d.

IMPORTANT FOR EMIGRANTS TO THE UNITED STATES.—We have much pleasure in publishing the following:—"British Protective Emigrant Society, in union with the St. George's Society of New York (an incorporated society). Office, No. 17, Rector-street, New York. John C. Beales, Esq., M.D. (president of St. George's Society), Anthony St. Sauveur (British Consul), Thos. Dixon, Esq., Joseph Fowler, Esq.; Edward F. Sanderson, Esq., James Boorman, Esq.; Richard Irvan, Esq. (president of St. Andrew's Society); William D. Cuthbertson, Esq.; James B. Eldman, Esq.; John S. Bartlett, Esq., Edward W. Corning, Esq.; Charles B. Eldman, Esq.; M. Rusdall, Esq.; Charles Edwards, counsellor and solicitor to the British Protective Emigrant Society; Rich Ball, Esq.; John Cannah, Esq.; Septimus Crooks, Esq.; W. O. Pickersgill, Esq.; Charles H. Webb, superintendent of the British Protective Emigrant Society. The British Protective Emigrant Society was established in 1844, for the purpose of protecting emigrants from fraud and imposition, and it urges upon them the necessity, on arrival at New York, of making immediate application to the society, at the office, 17, Rector-street, New York, where they will receive correct information and advice, free of charge, relative to routes, expenses of travelling, and all matters connected with their future prospects in a strange land. Emigrants are particularly cautioned against persons whom they first meet on arrival at New York, especially those who would endeavour to prevent their applying to this society; as by lending an ear to these pretended professions of assistance and friendship, they are certain of finding themselves imposed upon. The society desires to impress upon the minds of emigrants that its object is simply to give advice, free of charge, and to caution them against the numerous frauds and impositions to which they are subjected, and to direct them how to proceed to their respective places of destination safely and economically. Neither the society nor any of its members have anything to do in promoting emigration, nor with any agent or company connected with the purchase or disposal of lands to emigrants, before or after their arrival; nor is it associated, either directly or indirectly, with any party engaged in the business of forwarding emigrant passengers. The applicants to the 'British Protective Emigrant Society' for situations, from its commencement, have been as follows:—English, 2268 employment obtained for 1751; Scotch, 630 ditto, 467; Irish, 1702—ditto, 1193; Welsh, 120—ditto, 97; Canada, Nova Scotia, and West Indies, 75—ditto, 48; besides 70,000 who have applied for advice, and whose names are registered. -New York, April 23, 1849."

THE STANFIELD HALL PROPERTY.—Since the family of the late Mr. Jermy have left their residence at Stanfield Hall, it has remained tenantless, the gatekeeper being left in charge. On Saturday last, however, two men, named Jermy and Larner, who had previously put forward claims to the estate, contrived to gain an entrance into the Hall, and remained possession until the police were sent for; but the intruders prudently withdrew before the arrival of the authorities.

Preparations are in progress for the erection of galleries to witness the launch of the Nankin, 50 gun frigate, which will take place at Woolwich, on Saturday, the 16th of March. She measures 2,000 tons, 226 ft. 2 ins. and 51 in., and one of the common anchors made at Portsmouth dock yard, in 1825, of 48 cwt. 2 qrs. and 21 lb., have been supplied, and will be suspended at the bows of the vessel when she is launched.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English Funds have steadily advanced since Monday's opening, registering an improvement of one per cent. upon the closing prices of the preceding week. Consols on Monday started 95¾ to ¾, and the probability of an easy solution of the Greek question caused a further improvement on Tuesday to 96¾. The Continental news on Wednesday, in reference to the Swiss and Prussian affairs, added to Lord Palmerston's explanation in the House of Commons on the preceding evening, gave a firm tone to Consols at the opening, and a steady advance to 96¾ for money and account succeeded, closing at 96 to ¾. Some realising on Thursday slightly depressed prices, Consols quoting 95¾ 96 during the day. Exchequer Bills advanced 5s. on Wednesday. London Railways remained at former quotations. The books for the transfer of Bank Stock will close on Tuesday next, opening on the 11th of April. Reduced closes on the same day, and opens on the 18th of April; also Long Annuities, and Annuities 1859. New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents close on Tuesday, and open on the 19th of April. India Stock is closed, and will open on the 11th of April. The official return of the week gives the following particulars:—Bank Stock 207¾: Reduced, 96⅞; Consols, 95¾; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, 98⅜; Long Annuities, to expire Jan. 1860, 8¾; India Stock, 265¾; India Bonds, £1,000, 27s.; Exchequer Bills, £1,000, 1s. premium; Ditto for Account, 96¾; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 88 p.; Ditto Advertised, 54 p.

Business in the Foreign House has been rather inactive, Peruvian and Portuguese displaying the greatest amount of fluctuations. Peruvian advanced on Monday from 71 (the last price on Saturday) to 74 to 73¾; this Deferred, 32¾ 33. Increased business on Tuesday again improved the price to 75¾, and the Deferred to 35¾. This improvement was well maintained on Wednesday; but some depression prevailed on Thursday, being understood that the Government had asked authority from Congress to anticipate the sums arising from the guano contract up to next June. Portuguese advanced 1 per cent. on Tuesday, maintaining their rise. The Spanish, in the other various securities have not been material, as the following prices will show:—Brazilian Bonds, 89¾; Ditto, New, 1843, 83; Danish Bonds, 1826, Five per Cent., 96; Mexican, Five per Cent. 1846, ex. Jan. Coupons, 25¾; Ditto, Account, 25¾; Peruvian Bonds, Four per Cent., Account, 74¾; Ditto, Deferred, 32¾; Portuguese, Five per Cents, 84; Ditto, Four per Cent., 33½; Russian Bonds, Scrip, 1¾ pm.; Spanish Five per Cent., 1840, Account, 17¾; Venezuela Bonds, Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent., 59¾.

Railway Shares are firmer, prices in several instances having advanced. The following are the last quotations of actual bargains:—Bristol and Exeter, 69¾; Ditto, Thirds, 9½ ds.; Buckinghamshire, 17; Calstonian, 11¾; East Anglian, £25, l., and E. SATURDAY MORNING.—The Market opened rather heavily yester day, Consols quoting 95¾ 96. Some large purchases by the Government broker afterwards gave confidence, and the closing price of Consols was 96⅛ to ¼ for account. There were no alterations of moment in the Foreign or Share Market.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—During the present week the arrivals of English wheat for our markets, coastwise, have been confined to 1720 quarters. The quantity fresh up to-day, by land carriage, was small. Notwithstanding that the show of samples was trifling, the demand for all kinds of wheat of home produce proved exceedingly heavy. Fine qualities were mostly held at Monday's prices. In the middling and inferior qualities, though in some instances offered at 1s per quarter less money, next to nothing was doing. Foreign wheat: the imports of which have been only 2350 quarters—moved off heavily, but we have no actual decline to notice in the quotations, which were almost nominal. Very little foreign barley was on offer. The show of English was extensive. General speaking, the trade ruled inactive, at barely stationary prices. We had a large quantity of malt on show. The demand for that article was extremely heavy, at the late prices. Oats, beans, peas, and Indian corn were sparingly noted. The top price of flour was 38s per 280 lbs. The trade continued heavy ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 1720 qrs.; barley, 4740; malt, 1460; oats, 6060; flour, 5180. Irish: oats, 1000. Foreign: wheat, 3350; barley, ——; oats, 410; flour, 3000 quarters.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 38s to 42s; ditto, white, 40s to 45s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 38s to 40s; ditto, white, 42s to 44s; rye, 23s to 25s; grinding barley, 18s to 21s; distilling ditto, 22s to 23s; malting ditto, 23s to 27s; Norfolk and Lincoln malt, 53s to 56s; brown ditto, 45s to 48s; Kingston and Ware, 54s to 57s; Chevalier, 57s to 58s, Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 14s to 16s; potato ditto, 17s to 20s; Youghal and Cork, black, 13s to 15s; ditto, white, 14s to 16s; tick beans, new, 24s to 26s; ditto, old, 28s to 30s; grey peas, 30s to 32s; maple, 28s to 29s; white, 26s to 27s; boilers, 27s to 29s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 35s to 38s; Suffolk, 28s to 30s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 28s to 32s per 280 lbs.—Foreign. Barley red wheat, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s, per quarter; flour, American, 24s to 24s per barrel; Baltic, 22s to 24s per barrel.

The Malt Market.—Canary seed moves off freely; yet prices are not supported. Rapeseed is rather dearer. In other articles we have no change to notice.

LINSEED.—English, sowing, 54s to 56s; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 42s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 43s; Hempseed, 32s to 36s per quarter; Carraway seed, 16s to 23s per cwt.; Rapeseed, Mustard-seed, 8s to 11s; white ditto, 6s to 9s 6d. Tares, 4s 9d to 4s 9d per bushel. English rapeseed, new, 40l to 42l per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £7 to £7 5s; ditto, foreign, £6 2s to £7 10s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £4 5s to £4 5s per ton. Canary 78s to 79s per quarter. English Coco-nut, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; mace, up to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s, extra, —s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6d to 7d; of household ditto, 6d to 5½d, per 4lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 38s 6d; barley, 23s 9d; oats, 14s 11d; rye, 21s 11d; beans, 34s 6d; peas, 35s 1d

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 38s 6d; barley, 23s 9d; oats, 14s 11d; rye, 21s 9d; beans, 35s 1d; peas, 35s 9d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 1s 0d; barley, 1s 0d; oats, 1s 0d; rye, 1s 0d; beans 1s 0d; peas, 1s 0d.

Teas.—For all kinds the demand is in a very inactive state, at barely last week's quotations. Common sound congou is selling at 9½d to 10½ per lb. A public sale of 1010 packages Assam is advertised for the 13th inst.

Sugar.—Fine parcels of West India, Mauritius, and Bengal are in moderate request, at full prices. Other kinds of raw sugar are little doing. Foreign qualities dull. Refined goods move off slowly.—Brown lumps are 42s; and fine, 44s per cwt. Bonded sugars, 27s 6d to 30s per cwt.

Coffee.—The nominal price of ordinary Ceylon is 58s per cwt. In other kinds of coffee very little is doing, at last week's quotations.

Provisions.—Since our last report, the demand for most kinds of foreign butter has ruled extremely heavy, at 2s per cwt. less money. Fine Friesland, 104s. In other kinds, 90s to 96s per cwt. We have a moderate inquiry for Irish butter, at fully late rates. The transactions for the inland markets are small, and the stock on hand is limited. Carlow, firsts, landed, 74s to 84s; seconds, 68s to 72s; Clonmel, 76s to 82s; Cork, 72s to 76s; Belfast, firsts, 74s; seconds, 68s to 70s; Waterford, 66s to 70s; Sligo and Tralee, 62s to 66s per cwt. Fine new Dorset movers off freely at 100s to 112s per cwt. Bacon and hams are neglected. Fine qualities are nominally unchanged, at 56s to 58s per cwt. The supply of lacon being on the increase, the demand for that article is heavy, and prices have declined 2s per cwt. Waterford, landed, 48s to 49s. Cork, 46s to 48s per cwt. Hamburg bacon steady, at 42s to 44s per cwt. In the value of other kinds of provisions no change to notice.

Tallow.—Fine P Y C on the spot is steady, at 36s 6d to 36s 9d per cwt. The nearest quotation for delivery is unchanged up to the end of the year, at 36s. Town tallow, 35s 6d to 35s net cash.

Hops and Straw.—Meadow hay, £2 8s to £3 10s; clover ditto, £3 3s to £4 10s; and straw, £1 1s to £1 5s per load. Trade dull.

Spirits.—In transactions in brandy are still small, yet previous rates are fairly supported. Rum is in good request, at full prices. Geneva is dull.

Wool.—The demand by private contract is very firm, and late rates are well supported in every instance.

Potatoes.—Owing to the immense importations from abroad, the demand for all kinds of potatoes is heavy in the extreme, at a decline in the quotations of from 3s to 10s per ton.

Coals (Friday).—Eden Main, 14s; Hetton, 14s; Hilda, 14s; Belton, 16s 6d; South Kelton, 15s; West Hilton, 16s; Seymour Tess, 15s; and Lumley, 15s 6d per ton. A large supply at market. Trade very dull.

Hops (Friday).—The demand for all kinds of fine hops, the supply of which is extremely small, rules heavy, at almost nominal prices. In all other qualities very little is doing, and late rates are not supported.

New Kent and East Kent pockets, £5 6s to £11 11s; new Weald of Kent ditto, £5 3s to £8 8s; new Sussex ditto, £5 8s to £8 10s; new Farnhams, £12 0s to £18 0s; Yearling Kents, £3 3s to £4 4s; Sussex ditto, £3 3s to £4 4s; old hops, £1 1s to £3 13s.

Smithfield (Friday).—Our market to-day was tolerably well, but not to any heavy y, supplied with beasts as to number. Their general quality proved middling. The attendance of buyers was but moderate, at the commencement of the trade was dull, and a clearance was not effected by the close of business. Prime Scots, Devons, and other crosses, were in request, at full prices. In other breeds the demand was heavy, at 2s to 4s per head lower than on Monday last. The primest Scots realised 3s 8d per 8lbs. Otherwise the supplies trade was heavy. From the Isle of Wight 40 oxen and 30 sheep came to hand. Sheep were in a dull state, at 2s per head below Monday's currency. In pigs very little was doing, at previous prices. Calves moved off slowly, at late rates. In pigs very little was doing, at 2s per head lower.

PRICE OF MEAT.—Per 8lbs. to sink the offal:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 3s 4d; middling ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime large ditto, 3s 8d to 4s; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 4d; large coarse mutton, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, 4s; and prime Southdown, 4s 4d. Large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s; prime small ditto, 4s to 4s 4d; large hogs, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; neat't small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 5s 6d to 6s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s to 24s; and quarter old store pigs, 14s to 21s each. The supplies on Monday last were:—Beasts, 740; sheep, 7,000; calves, 120; pigs, 280. Foreign supplies: Beasts, 195; sheep, 660; calves, 120. Scotch beasts, 150; sheep, 40.

Newspaper and Leadenhall (Friday).—These markets were heavy to-day, and late rates were barely supported.

PRICE PER 8LB. by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 8d to 3s 4d; middling ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime large ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime small ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; large pork, 2s 10d to 3s 4d; inferior mutton, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; small pork, 3s 6d to 4s 0d.

NEW SONG.—"ONE CARELESS WORD,"
by ALEXANDER LEE, price 2s (sent postage free). This is one of the happiest efforts of this celebrated composer: the words, of a novel and pleasant character, have evidently inspired him to compose a song without rival in public estimation his favourite ballads, "The Soldier's Tear," "I'll be true to thee," "The Rover's Bride," "The Gondoliera" &c. It is in the range of most voices, the highest note being F

A WONDERFUL WORK-BOX.
—According to an Enigma published in No. 8 of THE FAMILY FRIEND, for March the 15th, an ordinary Work-box is exactly represented by the letter A. Open it, and you find a Magpie, a Peacock, a Toad, and numerous other animals all alive, and to each one may be given a cage. In addition to these, there may also be exhibited, within the Work-box, a Magic Lantern, by which may be shown a living Lion!
And as uncommon things the most make common people stare,
(And giants are uncommon) great Goliath shall be there!
A Gold Watch and Ten Guineas, is offered for the person who produces the best Solution: there are two or five prizes for the second and third best Solutions. The Conundrums, with the Solutions to the Enigma and this interesting Enigma and the Conditions of the Award, by order of say twenty-one, prize Conundrums, the competition will be made open until the 40th of April. The Editor guarantees that the Award shall be that of a fair umpire.
THE FAMILY FRIEND is published upon the 1st and 15th of each month, and enjoys a circulation of 85,000. New subscribers are added to it every month. Price 1s 6d; and Nos. 13 to 18, price 2d. each; they will thus have the Work complete up to the present date.

LANCET-EDGE RAZOR (Registered Jan. 27, 1848.)—Gentlemen are invited to try not this unequalled and scientific invention, which is the best of the present day. It possessed the only two points necessary to a good razor, viz. an edge of surpassing keenness and lasting durability. This article of utility is warranted the best ever produced. "New Razor."—Messrs. Mappin, of Sheffield, have registered a "Lancet-edge razor," from their having succeeded in ob aining an edge possessing the keenness of the ancient lancet, whilst it retains the temper and lasting qualities of the steel a combination long sought in razor manufacture."—Vide Illustrated London News, Dec. 1, 1849 Manufactured by JOSEPH MAPPIN and BROTHERS, 32, Norfolk-street, Sheffield. Sold retail by all venders of cutlery throughout the United Kingdom, and wholesale at Joseph Mappin and Brothers' Warehouse, 14, Fore-street, City, London.

SCULPTURE OF THE NEW FRONT OF BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

THE sculptural enrichment of the new east front of Buckingham Palace having been completed (as regards the exterior façade towards St. James's Park), we have engraved the four principal figure groupes, which partake of that national character which has been regarded as the distinctive recommendation of the other portions of the Palace sculptures.

Hereafter we shall illustrate the new elevation, which projects but slightly beyond the face of the old building on either side, and occupies in the whole about 360 feet. The height to the top of the balustrade is about 77 feet. Our present purpose is, however, to describe the sculptural embellishments, which we have here engraved.

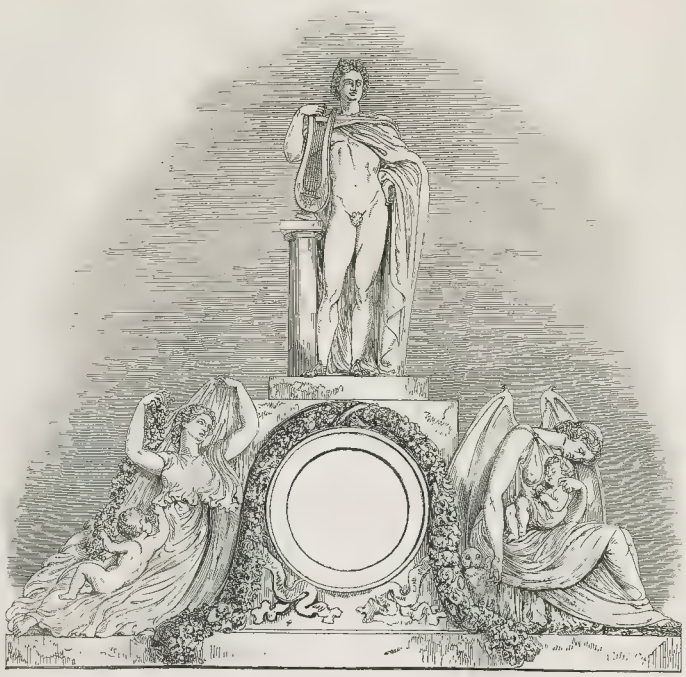
These sculptures adorn the centre and two wings of the Park façade. In the former is an arch opening with a balcony supported by bold trusses, and surmounted by scroll-work, enclosing a shield bearing "V.R., 1847;" whilst on the lateral turrets are placed colossal figures of our old tutelar favourites St. George and the never-to-be-conquered Dragon, and Britannia with the British Lion. These figures are sculptured by Turnouth.

Over the north wing is a group of the Hours, upon a pedestal pierced with a circle intended for a wind-dial, flanked with recumbent figures.

Upon the corresponding or southern wing is a circle for the reception of a clock dial, flanked by Morning and Night, the latter with bats' wings and her characteristic bird, the centre figure of Apollo being an impersonation of Noon. These two groups (upon the wings) ormed part of the original sculptural decoration of the Palace.

Military trophies and festoons of flowers are distributed over various parts of the building, where ornament has been required to give effect to the design.

It may be interesting to recapitulate the circumstances under which this east front has been added to the Palace; and this we do by aid of Mr. Cunningham's "Handbook for London."



SOUTHERN WING.

CENTRE.

In the spring of 1846, Sir Robert Peel informed the Lords of the Treasury that her Majesty had been for some time past subjected to great inconvenience "from the insufficient accommodation" afforded by the Palace. A letter was, consequently, written (May 23, 1846) to the Commissioners of the Woods and Forests, by whom Aug. 3, 1846, Mr. Blore was called upon to report on "the nature and extent of the insufficiency of accommodation, together with such plans, elevations, and estimates as would best provide for its improvement and enlargement." Mr. Blore, in his reply (August 4, 1846), observed that he had "long been aware of the extreme inconvenience to which her Majesty personally, the juvenile members of the Royal family, and the whole of the Royal establishment, had been subjected in consequence of the insufficiency of Buckingham Palace in point of accommodation." Among other inconveniences enumerated by Mr. Blore, it appears that the private apartments in the north wing "were not calculated originally for a married Sovereign—the head of a family;" that the nursery department was confined "to a few rooms in the attics of the same wing;" and that the basement story of the wing was used "by the Lord Chamberlain's department for stores and workshops;" that there was a constant noise and a continual smell of oil and glue; and if these were not enough, he adds, "the kitchen again is a nuisance to the Palace." Mr. Blore's estimates amounted to £150,000, and for this he was to make a "new east front to the Palace, clear out and re-arrange rooms in the south wing; make alterations in the north wing, new kitchens and offices, with ball-room over, take down the marble arch, decorate, paint, and alter drains." The sum was large, but the nuisances complained of were so great that the work was commenced forthwith, and is now approaching completion.

The Marble Arch remains to be removed; this delay having been caused by the want of a fit site for this very costly yet ineffective work of decorated architecture. It is curious to note how many new localities have been suggested. More than three years since, a Correspondent of the Builder said, remove the arch to the extremity of the Mall, to form a public entrance to St. James's Park, at Spring Gardens, and then, how fine will be the effect, as it is seen terminating the vista, from the Palace windows, or what a regal entrance will it be to the Royal avenue. Another asks, why not shift the arch to the fine area opposite the Horse Guards? this suggester forgetting that although the structure is copied generally from one of the triumphal arches of Imperial Rome, there are no figures of captives or groupes of military trophies to tell the proud tale of triumph: hence, on the score of inappropriateness, this location is objectionable. Yet, this suggester proposed that the arch be "brought down and placed in front of the landscape garden interior of St. James's Park, to which it would serve as a Royal entrance, and would seem to keep up a connexion with the Palace, which would be seen in the distance beyond it. Placed here, and in the vicinity of the Horse Guards and the Admiralty, it would also serve exceedingly well as an arch commemorative of the valorous doings of our army and navy, and would occupy an analogous position to the arch of the Tuileries at Paris."

"It is to be regretted," says the critic in the Companion to the Almanac for 1848, "that Mr. Blore did not endeavour to retain the marble arch, by incorporating that mass—of course, greatly modified as to design—in his own façade, where the state entrance into the court behind will be a comparatively small and by no means very handsome arched gateway." (This, we think, would have been an adaptation of no easy accomplishment.) The same writer, in the Companion to the Almanac for 1849, says:—"The marble arch is still standing, and will, perhaps, continue to do so up to the very latest moment that it can be allowed to remain, there being, it seems, considerable difficulty in determining how best to dispose of it. Now, it strikes us, that unless it be better disposed of, the marble arch at the Palace might be transferred to the British Museum, and re-erected as a portal, it being, of course, adapted to such purpose by the addition of a room to it on each side, for the porter's habitation. It would not at all obstruct the view of the portico too much; perhaps rather set it off than the contrary, and produce piquant combination and effective grouping."

Still, another suggester advocates for the arch the top of Portlandplace; and another, the broad central walk in the Regent's Park. To the latter we do not demur: there, the sugar-like structure would correspond with the architectural confectionery of this locality, and be uniformly characteristic of the taste of our Fourth George.

Lastly, as if to get rid of the metropolitan excrescence, some of our anticipatory contemporaries have sent the arch to Windsor—where, by the way, there is not a single feature to keep the rejected classic in countenance, if we except Tobias Rustat's Romanised statue of Charles II., or the historical sculpture in the garden of the eastern terrace of the Castle.

CENTRE.

Until the Arch be removed, the new Palace front must appear to great disadvantage. It is, however, presumed that the taking down of the Arch and of the hoard will be simultaneous, and will be connected with the commencement of some plan for laying out the ground in front of the Palace. To aid the artistic effect it has been proposed to introduce groupes of sculpture, a balustraded terrace-walk, &c.

ENTOMOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—At the monthly meeting of this society, held on Monday, G. R. Waterhouse, Esq., President, in the chair, Mr. Bond exhibited a piece of the stem of an ash-tree, from near Whittlesford, Cambridgeshire, covered with pupæ cases of a Galeruca; and also some web formed by the larvæ of Galleria cerenella, which he had found between two planks of wood. Mr. S. Stevens exhibited specimens, from Venezuela, of Agrotis saucia and suffusa, identical with the British species. Mr. Stainton exhibited some Micro-Lepidoptera he had recently bred, and six new species of British Tineidæ. Mr. Westwood exhibited a British specimen of Opilon undulatum, identical with an Albanian species.

THE LORD-LIEUTENANCY OF IRELAND.

There was a time when the bare hint from any Ministry of a scheme for the abolition of the Lord-Lieutenancy of Ireland would have raised a storm from one end of the kingdom to the other. The thunders of Conciliation Hall would have been heard, both loudly and long. The greatest and burliest of modern agitators would have had a monster grievance—sufficient to fill a thousand epistles to his fellow-countrymen, all commencing with "Hereditary bondsmen," &c., and containing the usual aspirations for the welfare of "the first flower of the earth and first gem of the sea." Every Roman Catholic pulpit would have resounded with maledictions upon the head of the despotic Sassenach; nay, we question whether the Black North itself would not have vented, in its own way, its fierce dissatisfaction at an insult which it might have represented to be so glaring. Nor would there have been wanting sympathetic spirits on this side of the Channel to swell the chorus of ill-will, if the tune had only been given by the master-musician of Repeal. In fact, had the thing been broached five years ago, Europe and America would have rung with the oft-repeated story of the wrongs of Ireland, and Ministries and Parliaments might have fallen amid the crash of the angry warfare that would have been excited. But now Daniel O'Connell is in his grave, and his memory has not found sufficient favour among his countrymen to excite them to so small a piece of gratitude as the building of his monument. Funds are wanting to raise an inexpensive stone cenotaph; and a frail wooden memorial, and that alone, marks the spot where his bones are laid. The fiery agitation which was fanned by his breath has flickered out: fuel and bellows are alike wanting. The pulpits of Catholic Ireland, St. Jarlath's excepted, are silent upon political topics. The young and fool-hardy successors of O'Connell in the business of agitation expiate in penal colonies their folly in believing that the Irish people were ripe for a revolution. Misery, in its most appalling shapes, has decimated the land. Plague and famine, by their demands upon the sympathy and aid of the often-abused but always generous Sassenach, have shown the Irish that the heart of England was in the right place; and that, if it had not been for English charity—spontaneous in its origin, kindly in its display, and munificent in its amount—the fate of Ireland in 1846-47 would have been deplorable indeed. Repeal has, in consequence, gone the way of all delusions, and fairly died out, for lack of breath as well as of brains. In these circumstances, it has been officially announced, that the Earl of Clarendon is to be the last of the Lords-Lieutenant, and that his reign is to be brought to a premature close. Instead of disgust and anger, the announcement has excited a feeling of satisfaction in Ireland—not because such a man as Lord Clarendon is to be removed, but because contending parties, having opened their eyes to the vanity and folly of the Repeal agitation, see in the abolition of the Lord-Lieutenancy a necessary step to the complete fusion and amalgamation of the two countries. In England the satisfaction is still greater. The Lord-Lieutenancy, instead of being a mark of favour to Ireland, or any proof of its importance and dignity—as it was once supposed to be—was, in reality, but a sign of its degradation—a daily testimony to the fact that Ireland was not what Scotland, Wales, Yorkshire, or any other English county was—an integral portion of a truly United Kingdom. The very shopkeepers of Dublin—the persons who profited most by the presence of this deputy Sovereign—confess that the Castle, with its petty jealousies, its vindictive intrigues, and its back-stair gossip, did more harm in other ways, than good in the amount of money it caused to be circulated. Though opinions are divided amongst them on the subject, the sensible majority are only too happy that the phantom Royalty, which was always with them, is to be replaced by the occasional and more beneficent and splendid visits of the real Sovereign. Were it not for the remembrance of Dolly's Brae, we might believe that the reign of good sense had begun in Ireland, and that the satisfaction caused by this great step towards the union of the Empire was the best possible proof that reason had resumed her sway over the distracted minds of our suffering fellow-countrymen.

It was long an opinion very generally entertained in political society out of Ireland, but not often expressed in the public prints, that the Irish Viceroyalty was one of the great causes of the factious animosities that prevailed, and the one which most seriously baffled all the efforts of the best friends of Ireland to secure for her the advantages of repose and good government. It is of good omen for the future welfare of the country, that the Roman Catholic South and the Protestant North have come to the same conclusion, without having had it forced upon them by angry polemics; and that Belfast and Cork are agreed that it is well for Ireland to stand upon the same footing as Scotland and Middlesex; and quite as unnecessary to have a sham King in Dublin, as it has been found to be in the Castle of Holyrood. The abolition of the office has been exceedingly well timed in this as well as in every other respect. Not only was it made known at a period when hostile factions were worn out or paralyzed, but when the office was held by a man of such distinguished ability, and such eminent services, that no one could imagine any slight to him in the circumstance of its abolition. To have decreed during the rule of an incompetent, a partial, or a blundering Lord-Lieutenant, that the Viceroyalty should cease altogether, might have awakened the sleeping, or invigorated the harassed and weakened, parties that still exist. But to decree its abolition at a time when the Lord-Lieutenant has acquired greater renown than any of his predecessors for strict impartiality, for thorough honesty, for indomitable courage, for unfailing tact, and for the uniform success which always attends genius, but which flies from the path of incompetency and mediocrity, is to testify in the most striking manner to the uselessness of the office. If not even a Clarendon could, in such a position, continue to be of service to Ireland, what would have been expected of an inferior successor? But no inferior is to come after him.

THE GOLDEN HORN, CONSTANTINOPLE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

The last of the Lords-Lieutenant was the best and ablest, and surpassed all his former services to Ireland by recommending and supporting the abolition of the office upon which he threw such lustre. He held the scales of justice evenly; he never swerved from the broad path of duty; he suppressed a civil war without bloodshed, and he effected a real union between Great Britain and Ireland. These are Lord Clarendon's claims to the gratitude of the present generation and to an honourable name in history. He has received the one already, and the other will not be denied to him.

The visits of her Majesty to Ireland, as often as convenience or policy may dictate, will more than make amends for any temporary check which the trade of Dublin may receive from the absence of the petty court of the Viceroy. Royal example will make Ireland fashionable; and the wealth scattered about by thousands and tens of thousands of tourists will be of infinitely more advantage than the pageantries of a provincial capital. And these, too, will be but a portion of the benefits likely to accrue from the change. The increased intercourse between the eastern and western portions of the kingdom—if accompanied, as we trust it will be, by the subsidence of the storms of provincial faction—will tend, if anything can, to the large development of material prosperity. When we remember the deplorable condition of Scotland in the year 1745, and look at the progress it has since made, we cannot, though the condition of Ireland is far more deplorable at the present day, permit ourselves to doubt of the ultimate prosperity of that naturally far richer portion of the United Kingdom.

THE GOLDEN HORN, CONSTANTINOPLE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, which occupies, perhaps, the most commanding site of any city in the world, is, at this moment, a focus of extraordinary interest. One of our artistic correspondents, profiting by a very recent visit, has sketched the great harbour, which we have engraved upon the preceding page.

The Sketch was taken on the 19th of February.

The pontoon bridge was then opened, to allow two fine Turkish frigates to pass from the dockyard. This bridge consists of a number of parts, each supported by four barges. On this occasion two of the divisions of the bridge were removed, leaving a large open space. Most each extremity of the bridge is a wooden arch, high enough to allow boats and barges to pass. This bridge was erected about four years ago. Some distance further up the Golden Horn is seen the only other bridge across this remarkable inlet of the sea. It was constructed some time before the bridge of boats, and is on a different plan, being supported by a sort of long rafts instead of pontoons. Within this bridge is the arsenal. The appearance of the Golden Horn is extremely animated. Without the outer bridge are to be seen large steamers and sailing-vessels constantly arriving and sailing, men-of-war, coasting vessels of every build and rig, and myriads of light and graceful form passing to and fro for hire. The number of these boats has much diminished since the open up of the bridges. Latterly, too, several small steamers arrive every 1 ream with passengers from the neighbouring towns, and leave with them again after the business of the day is over, reminding the Englishman of the river boats at home.

Within the bridges great numbers of vessels are moored in tiers, frequently three deep, giving the appearance of a forest in winter

On February 16th, two frigates sailed from Constantinople for the south, one report being that they were bound for Athens, and another that they were sent to quell the disturbances in Candia.

Two fires have lately occurred, one on the 13th and the other on the 16th, in Stamboul; only ten houses were burnt altogether—a small loss compared with what so frequently occurs here.

The weather has been more severe during the present winter at Constantinople and Smyrna than ever remembered. Fahrenheit's thermometer was as low as 8 degrees above Zero at Constantinople, and 14 degrees at Smyrna. Great quantities of snow fell at Constantinople. Two Turkish sentinels were found frozen to death: several fish-men suffered a similar fate Vast qua tities of fish were caught by hand floating in a torpid state on the surface of the water in the Golden Horn and Bosphorus. The quantity of game in the vicinity of the capital was very large.

The very large forces recently quartered at Constantinople has been broken up, and distributed in the different stations throughout Turkey.

At Smyrna, two shocks of earthquake have recent y been felt.

A feeling was prevalent here in favour of the British movement at Athens. The French line-of-battle ship Inflexible was expected on the 20th, and it was said that as the Sultan steamer was leaving there on the 22d, a large man-of-war, bearing a comm dore's pendant, supposed to be the Inflexible, was entering Smyrna anchorage.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

EXPERIMENTS IN THE MARSHES AT WOOLWICH.—Major-General Parker, CB, Lieutenant-Governor of the Royal Military Academy, Major-General Lacy, Colonel Dundas, and Colonel Boxer, Commandant of the Arsenal, with the select committee, with a number of officers of the Royal Artillery, assembled in the Marshes at two o'clock P M., on Monday, to witness experiments. The first carried on were with shells, the invention of Mr. Greener, Birmingham, the aim ing for their object, when burst amongst troops, to scatter a quantity of prepared material, which would set their clothes on fire, and destroy the enemy by that means. The shells, four in number, were fired from a 5-pounder howitzer, but they all burst at the mouth of the howitzer, evidently owing to the thinness of the shell, being unable to resist the charge of powder usually required for 24 pounder shells. The composition with which the shells were filled did not take fire in either of the four rounds, owing to the shells bursting at the mouth of the howitzer, when they were calculated for 1100 yards range, and, consequently, the nature or effect of the composition they contained was not ascertained. The contents of the shells appeared to be oakum, strongly saturated with a liquid which smelled strongly of turpentine, or an essential oil of an inflammable nature. The next experiments were with a 10-inch and 8-inch mortar of a new construction, the former capable of carrying a shell weighing about 92 lb. a range of 2400 yards, when fired at an angle of 45 decrees; and the latter, 2000 yards at the same elevation—the 10-inch mortar charge of powder being 4 lb., and the 8-inch 2 lb. The mortars are made one half longer than those hitherto used, and the beds one-fourth greater base. The firing of six rounds from each, with shells filled with sand and p ugged, was made at an elevation of 75 degrees, to test the strength of the beds: the new gun, and they answered in a most efficiently. The beds were made from a plan of the Royal carriage department.

CAPTAIN AUSTIN'S ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have granted permission to the officers of every grade engaged in the Arctic expedition to allot one moiety of their pay, if desirous of doing.

REDUCTION IN THE ARMY.—The following circular memorandum, issued from the Horse Guards, respecting the reduction in the army, has come into operation on the 31st instant:—The 5th, 22d, 46th, 55th, 57th, 67th, 69th, and 76th, and 2nd battalion Rifle Brigade, are to be converted into regiments of one battalion of 1000 rank and file each, with a recruiting depôt, similar to regiments serving in India. The 11th, 36th, 58th, and 95th regiments (now serving in New Zealand and Australia) are to be reduced to 700 each, and to be thus divided:—service companies, 640; depôt, 210: total rank and file, 750. It may be added with regard to the regiments in New Zealand and Australia to be reduced, that men are to be discharged on the spot, so as to allow such desire to colonise; but such as desire to return home will be obliged to pay their own passage. The 6th Foot (hitherto 1200 rank and file) is to be reduced to 750. The following depôts of regiments serving in the Co onies are to be reduced 90 rank and file each—viz. 1st battalion 1st Foot, 7th, 16th, 19th, 34th, 38th, 54th, 66th, 73d, 73d, 79th, 88th, 96th, and 1st battalion Rifle Brigade. The above will give a reduction of 3680 rank and file. With respect to officers, the lieutenant-colonels, c-p ains, and subalterns are to remain in full pay on the strength of their regiments (as second) until their services are actually required; but the quarter-masters and medical officers are to be placed upon half-pay from the 1st of April next. The saving to the country by this reduction will be about £140,000 for the present year

UNFOUNDED RUMOUR OF SIR JOHN FRANKLIN HAVING PASSED BEHRING'S STRAITS.—With reference to the report of Sir John Franklin's discovery having passed through Behring's Straits, and which report came from a person on board the ship Blakeley, dated San Francisco, Dec. 30, we are requested to state that letters had been received by Messrs. Leftwich and Co., of Liverpool, the owners of the Blakeley, from the commander of that vessel, of the same date, viz. Dec. 30, in which no mention whatever is made of the circumstance; and which, from his intimate habits of correspondence with Messrs. Leftwich, he considered would never have allowed such news to have remained unnoticed if it had come from an authentic source.

ROYAL MARINES.—The corps of Royal Marines is to consist of 102 divisional and 10 artillery companies; each divisional company to consist of 1 captain, 2 subalterns, 5 sergeants, 5 corporals, 3 drummers, and 76 privates; total, 92. Each artillery company to consist of 1 captain, 4 subalterns, 7 sergeants, 7 corporals, 3 bombardiers, 3 drummers, 125 gunners; total, 150: making the whole establishment 9384 men; divisional companies, 9360; ditto, 4 buglers and staff, 70: total, 10,954 men. The 102 divisional companies to be thus distributed:—Chatham, 31 division, 25 companies; Portsmouth, 2nd division, 27 companies and 10 artillery ditto; Plymouth, 3rd division, 25 companies; and Woolwich, 4th division, 25 companies of Royal Marines.

Colonel Campbell, of the Queen's Bays, now stationed at Jock's Lodge barracks, Edinburgh, met with a very severe accident last week while out hunting with the Berwickshire hounds, at Marchmont. His horse fell with its rider underneath, and in rising kicked him and cut him severely. He was brought to the barracks, where he was attended by the regimental surgeon and Dr. Douglas Maclagan, and is in a fair way of recovery.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The elections, which commenced on Sunday in Paris, have resulted in a manner so completely the reverse of what was expected by the "friends of order," that the vexation and misgivings about the continuance of tranquillity are considerably lessened with the disappointment. Although the electoral returns had not, up to Thursday morning, been officially declared, it is quite certain that the Socialists, Carnot, Vidal, and De Flotte, have obtained the victory over the Conservative candidates, La Hitte, Foy, and Bonjean.

The following numbers of the votes given, though not officially announced, are stated to be pretty correct:—

Carnot (Socialist)	..	..	..	..	132,881
Vidal	Do.	..	..	..	128,527
De Flotte	Do.	..	..	..	126,834
Foy (Conservative)	..	..	..	..	123,673
La Hitte	Do.	..	..	..	120,163
Bonjean	Do.	..	..	..	124,009

When this result became known on Tuesday evening, a panic seized the frequenters of the Bourse. The success of the three Socialists soon spread through the capital, to the great delight of the 3rd Republic, and to the sore dismay of the Moderate party. On Wednesday morning the greatest excitement prevailed respecting the probable effects of such a return, and rumours of all kinds were in circulation, amongst which was one that Ministers had tendered their resignations, and that they had been accepted. This statement, however, has not been corroborated. Another report was, that a new line of policy was to be adopted, which was to be announced to the Assembly. These rumours, however, must be received with great caution, as, in moments of political excitement, ingenuity is never wanting to fabricate reports for selfish purposes.

Amongst the rumours generally credited, there was one to the effect that the Legitimists, by order of the Duke de Levis, had given ten or twelve thousand votes to the Socialists, in order to create a storm, and this, it is added, would accord with an observat on made in Legitimist circles, that it was necessary to pass through the Red Sea in order to reach the Land of Promise.

In Paris the contest was severe; and though party feel ng ran high, not the slightest disturbance took place So much interest was excited, that not less than seven-eighths of the electors recorded their votes.

A good deal of uneasiness was produced on Sunday by large groups of persons in blouses assembling round the Column of July, who announced that numerous deputations would come to deposit funeral wreaths in memory of the dead. The Prefect of Police immediately issued a proclamation prohibiting such proceedings, and the offensive inscriptions and seditious emblems that had been placed round the Place de la Bastile were removed by the police. Great numbers of people continued to loiter about the Column of July during the whole of Monday and Tuesday, some of whom loudly censured the authorities for the act of vandalism they had committed. Such had been the number of crowns and emblems brought together that they formed a vast pile, artistically arranged, of red and yellow flowers, around which the idle and curious assembled to admire and wonder. However, as the pilgrims had not confined themselves to the mere funereal offering, but had interspersed with the flags and other Republican and Democratic ornaments, the police were furnished with an opportunity to interfere.

About 100 soldiers, belonging to several regiments of infantry, were amongst the most conspicuous of those who deposited the crowns and emblems. These men remained silent, whilst the crowd around occasionally cried out, "Vive Farmée! Vive la Montagne!"

The accounts from the departments are conflicting; some affirming that the elections will prove favourable to the Socialists, others declaring that the Conservatives have obtained the greater majority.

The National Guard of Montpellier has been disbanded, by order of the President of the Republic

The National Guard of Meze and Gignac has been dissolved, in consequence of the extreme violence of its political opinions.

A duel was fought on Saturday, in the Bois de Boulogne, between two representatives—MM. Perreut and Schoelcher, both representing the colonies. The bail of M. Schoelcher took off a portion of the hair of his adversary's right hand, and then passed through his cravat. The affair was then terminated. M. Schoelcher will have to fight another of his colleagues, who has taken offence at a pamphlet written by him.

ITALIAN STATES.

From Rome—the only quarter at present, in the Peninsula, which furnishes political intelligence—we learn that the Pope, having expressed his desire to return to the capital on the 8th, and at the same time to have some Austrian as well as French troops in garrison there, preparations were being made for that purpose. The Austrians have a very strong camp at Spoleto; and it was understood that on the instant they would march for Rome. A small French garrison, according to this account, was to occupy the Castle of St. Angelo, another to be placed at Civita Vecchia, and the rest of the French troops were to return to France. Baron d'Aspré was to command the Austrian army at Rome.

Prince Musignano has entirely recovered from his wounds, and appeared again in public.

Accounts from Naples of the 1st inst., and Florence, states that the British Government had forwarded a note to the Neapolitan Cabinet concerning the Sicilian Constitution, the rigorous measures enforced there, and certain indemnities due to British subjects. The Consul at Palermo, according to this account, was still assembled, consulting on the subject, at the time the steam-packet left.

AUSTRIA.

From Vienna, under date of the 8th instant, we learn that it was confidently expected that the state of siege in that capital would be raised in May, or at latest in June.

The Emperor, it was said, intended to perform the usual ceremony of washing the feet of a certain number of old men on Maunday Thursday, in person, and not by deputy, as has been the case of late years.

From Hungary, we learn by the Pester Zeitung of the 6th, that long lists of newly condemned have been published. The unfortunate men are in the prime of life, between twenty and thirty years of age, who now see before them a long term of imprisonment, varying from eighteen to twelve years. Those judged worthy of death were reprieved, with the exception of one Louis Hank, who appears to have been a desperate character. He was hanged at Arad.

GERMAN STATES.

A project has been published by Saxony, Bavaria, and Wurtemburgh, of a union in opposition to that of Prussia, by which it is proposed to unite all the States that were members of the old Confederation. It is simpler than that of Erfurt. The Executive is to consist of seven members, and the representative of 300 deputies, of whom a third are to be returned by Austria, a third by Prussia, and a third by the other States collectively. There is to be no Second Chamber. If the assent of all the States to the plan can be obtained, its executive is to take the place of the present interim commission, and its future code of fundamental laws of the acts based on the treaty of Vienna, which established the old Confederation.

DENMARK AND SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

According to intelligence received from Schleswig-Holstein, hostilities are on the point o recommencing. The Swedes and Norwegians have received orders to retire, General Hahn having issued an order for them to go to Kiel. Preparations of a very warlike character are being made in the duchies; in consequence of which General Rauch has been charged with a mission to the Lieutenancy of Kiel. The negotiations with Denmark are in a complete state of stagnation, the Prussian Government not having received any reply to the note sent to Mr. Usedom. It is hoped, however, for the sake of humanity, that the renewal of this insane and murderous struggle will be prevented by the principal European Powers.

GREECE.

THE ENGLISH AND PRUSSIAN POST-OFFICES.—In consequence of the want of a proper understanding between the English and Prussian Post-offices on a practical point, persons who receive letters from England are exposed to an annoyance which an explanation, it is to be hoped, will be sufficient to prevent. Notwith-tanding the issue of shilling postage stamps by the English Post-office, with the decision that when affixed to a foreign letter they cover the postage of it, the stamps alone are not recognised by the Prussian office as a proof that the postage is paid, and it is invariably demanded again in full in Berlin. It may be as well to state, at the same time, that no private inscription on the letter is of any use, whether it be "p." or "pd." or "p. pd." or any combination of initials, or even the words "paid" or "pre-paid" in full. It is of no account. A corresp ndence with the Prussian Post Director has elicited the fact, that by the Prussian Post-contract those letters only are delivered in Berlin which charge that bear on the cover a capital P stamped at the English office (and in such a manner that nine times out of ten it is scarcely visible). There appears to be a want of uniformity in the practices of the English post in this respect that necessitates the payment of the postage over again. Letters with the shilling stamp do not have the capital P that contains the spell required to obtain the demand of the Berlin Brief-träger; the Queen's head has only the cancelling mark, which is not enough. Again, letters pre-paid in full in the provincial offices in England, have often a stamp that there means "paid," but it is not that essential capital P on which the Prussian office insists with such tenacity. Letters posted in London are all provided with the valuable form of the consonant; but from the country (there are two instances, to my knowledge, in the last three days from Birmingham and Oxford), they use a vile series of small p's, which are not recognised, therefore, which in Prussia certify nothing. It is utterly useless to argue with a Prussian Beamter, and prove the moral certainty that his Majesty has no right to your 10 groschen; the absence of that particular P makes down your case. The remedy is surely very simple. Could not Colonel Maberly appr se the Prussian Post-office of all the marks that are accepted in England as proofs of payment, shilling stamps included, and make the despot-sm of that single capital letter; or direct all addresses to Prussia to be stamped with the form of the letter that has acquired such significance? Times Correspondence.

THE "CRIMP" SYSTEM.—A tradesman at Manchester, who professed to undersell his neighbours, has been convicted of having a 2-oz. weight attached to his scale by means of half an ounce of wax. A placard in the window described him as "the poor man's friend!"

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

Lord BROUGHAM presented a petition on the subject of Sir Thomas Turton's defalcations. In answer to the Duke of Wellington, the noble and learned Lord stated that he had no doubt the Indian judges were bound by law to take security; and that he understood they were liable to make good the deficiencies.

RAILWAY AUDIT.

Earl GRANVILLE moved the second reading of the Railway Audit Bill.

Lord STANLEY said he had that morning been waited on by a deputation of delegates from all the principal railways in the kingdom, who objected to the Government bill, and had entrusted him with the draft of a bill favoured by them, which he should be able to lay on the table next day.

Lords MONTEAGLE, COLCHESTER, and BEAUMONT entered into the further discussion that ensued, after which the Government bill was read a second time, with the understanding that opportunity shou d be given for the consideration of the bill to be introduced by Lord Stanley.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

EXPENSIVE ANTIQUARIANISM.

Mr. HUTT moved for returns of the cost of preparing for publication, and of printing and publishing, the work entitled "Monumenta Historica Britannica, or Materials for the History of Britain;" of the number of copies so d, and of the price at which sold; of the names of the persons or parties to whom copies have been given gratuitously; of the names of the persons or parties who have applied for copies, but whose applications were not complied with; together with the number of copies remaining undisposed of; and also copies of the correspondence which took place in November and December, 1848, between the Secretary of State for the Home Department, the Lords of the Treasury, and the Master of the Rolls, regarding the sale and distribution of the said work.

Sir R INGLIS remarked that one of the most distinguished foreign antiquaries had declared the work referred to one of the finest ever published.

The return was ordered

Mr. BAILLIE stated, in reply to a question put by Mr. J. S. Wortley, that the Ceylon Committee had come to a unanimous resolution to renew its inquiry with closed doors, in consequence of the unwarrantable publication in some papers of incomplete and partial evidence.

On the motion of Sir G GREY, the Lords' amendments to the Party Processions (Ireland) Bill were agreed to.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

In reply to a question by Mr. Ogle, Lord J. RUSSELL stated that no picture in the National Gallery had been ordered by the trustees to be cleaned during the last two years, and no order for cleaning the pictures of the old masters had been made of late. at the same time it would not be fair to say that the trustees were satisfied with the condition of all the pictures. No final arrangement had been made with respect to the National Gallery, but the Government had under consideration the question of providing further room for such works as might be presented to the nation, especially for the Vernon collection.

GREECE.

In reply to questions put by Mr. G. S. Smythe, Lord PALMERSTON stated that a despatch relative to the affair of Don Pacifico, that published in the newspapers from Count Nesselrode had been communicated by Baron Brunnow not many days ago, with another despatch of a subsequent date. He (Lord Palmerston) was preparing a continuation of the documents already laid before Parliament relating to the Greek question. The documents already laid on the table of the House came down to the making of reprisals. There were other papers connected with the same question, which would have to be laid before Parliament probably at no distant period. At present the state of affairs was this—the French Government had offered its good offices, which were accepted, and the negotiations had not, as far as he was informed, made any progress, and until the negotiations should be brought to some point it would obviously not be conducive to the public interest to give the House information which would be necessarily incomplete.

Mr. ANSTEY inquired if it were true that the orders for the withdrawal of Russian troops from Moldavia and Wallachia had been countermanded?

Lord PALMERSTON replied that he had stated on a former occasion that the excess of Russian troops would evacuate the Principalities, and he had no reason to suppose that any change in the intention of Russia respecting those troops had taken place.

SUPPLY.—ARMY ESTIMATES.

The House went into a committee of supply on the estimates.

Mr. F. MAULE moved that the number of men for the land service for the ensuing year, exclusive of those engaged in India, should not exceed 99,178, that number being 4126 less than the number voted last year. One of the principal points upon which he tested his application for the vote, was the great difference between our numerical force and those of France, Prussia, and Austria. The number of men in the French service was 500,000; in the Prussian (independent of the extraordinary number of officers), to 325,000; and in that of Austria, 539,000. After going through a lengthy statement, composed principally of figures and details relating to our colonial armaments, he proceeded to show the very satisfactory state of the army the working and effect of various reforms which had been introduced into the service—also the reductions which had taken place in the expenditure, by authority or by the deaths of officers.

Mr. HUME said he could not help congratulating a state now as ever. He, however, contended that very considerable reductions ought to be made, and which might be effected by stopping the recruiting, and not by discharging the soldiers. He concluded by moving a reduction of not less than 10,000 men.

Major Blackall, Captain Boldero, Mr Macgregor, Mr. Stanford, Col. Chatterton, Mr. Ayrton, Col. Sibthorp, Col. Sidney, Lord J. Russell, Col. Dunne, Mr. V. Smith, and Mr. Reynolds (who said that in respect to Ireland he considered this a Church question) followed in support of the motion

Sir W. JOLLIFFE, Sir R. Inglis, Mr. Cobden, and Alderman Sidney opposed the vote, and supported the amendment proposing a reduction of 10,000 men.

Lord J. RUSSELL said that, instead of making wholesale reductions, the proper course was to ask the military force to the requirements of the places where it was located.

Sir J. WALSH (who had to contend for a hearing amidst cries of "Divide" and "Oh!") supported the motion.

The committee then divided, when the numbers were For the original motion, 223; against it, 50: Majority in favour of the original motion, 173.

A vote was then taken of £1,700,000 for the army.

NAVY ESTIMATES

The committee then passed to the navy estimates, and

Sir F. BARING made a general statement of the votes proposed, and of the reductions made upon the estimates of last year. The whole expenditure for the effective and non-effective naval service, for the conveyance of troops and the packet service, calculated for the year 1850-51, was £6,613,000, which, compared with the analogous expenditure for the year 1848-49, and including the naval excess, was a reduction of £1,332,000; being a reduction on last year's estimate of £480,000. The reduction proposed in the number of men was 1000 of the marine force, making a practical reduction during the last year and a half of 7000 men.

On the first vote, for 39,000 men for the sea-service for the year, including 11,000 marines,

Mr. HUME moved, as an amendment, that the number of men be reduced to 31,400.

In the course of a short debate on this vote,

Lord PALMERSTON stated that the number of Greek vessels detained, according to the last account received, was between forty and fifty, and they were merely held as pledges for satisfaction of the claims upon the Greek Government.

The committee divided—

For Mr. Hume's amendment	..	..	..	..	19
Against it	..	..	..	..	117
Majority					——98

The vote for 39,000 men was then agreed to, and the Chairman reported progress.

JUDGES' SALARIES.

Lord J RUSSELL obtained leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the Salaries of the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, and of the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas; the former to be fixed at £8000, and the latter at £7000 per annum.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

ROYAL ASSENT.

The Royal assent was given by commission to the Party Processions (Ireland) Bill.

Lord STANLEY laid on the table the Railway Audit Bill, framed by the delegates of the railway companies, which was read a first time; and the second reading fixed for Friday.

AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS.

Lord REDESDALE presented petitions complaining of agricultural distress, and praying for a return to the policy of Protection. The noble Lord said that petitions for relief from the people out of Parliament, by the assertions so boldly made by certain persons who were pledged to Free Trade, that a return to the system of protection to native industry was impossible. On the contrary, he and the people generally were fully persuaded that, in some shape or other, Protection should be restored. If the new commercial system had worked well for the country, it would not be right to change it; but when it was found to work ruinously for the general interest, it was but reasonable to suppose that we should revert to the old system under which we had been so prosperous. The object of the new policy was to lower wages, and it has actually reduced the wages of the industrious portion of the community on an average. It had glutted the markets with agricultural produce, and rendered it absolute y impossible for the farmer to cultivate the land with profit. As to the boasted prosperity of the manufacturing districts, he believed it rested on no sure fo dation. The noble Lord required the Government to state what were the opinions they entertained with respect to the cause of the agricultural distress; whether they had any reasonable hope of an immediate and considerable alleviation of the distress. Supposing no advance in the price of grain should occur, did they think the land would be cultivated to the extent it was? What did they calculate the average price of corn would in future be?

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said he was not surprised that such petitions were presented, knowing, as he did, that considerable agricultural distress existed in several parts of the country. He had not been induced to vote for the repeal of the CORN LAWS without believing that it would be attended by much difficulty, but he felt persuaded such a measure was inevitable sooner or later, for it would not have been possible to maintain the price of bread higher in England than in the other countries on the Continent. He could not pretend to prophesy as to the future price of corn, because all who had prophesied on this particular question of corn had signally failed. But if importation was the sword that hung over the heads of the farmers, it had a very blunt edge indeed. The diminution of importation of corn during the last month, as compared with the corresponding month last year, was very remarkable—being not less than 300,000 quarters. In February, 1849, the importation amounted to 380,000 quarters; in February this year it was only 100,000 quarters; and in the current month it was still decreasing. In fact, we had nearly reached that state of price that it was not worth the while of any country of Europe to send us corn. As to the cause of the agricultural distress, he admitted that it might be attributed in some degree to importation, but apprehension was the chief cause. There had been, no less speculation than was wholesome or desirable in this country. The present stock of corn was exceedingly low, as compared with that of last year. On the 1st of February, 1849, there were 1,324,000 quarters in stock, whereas on the 1st of February this year there were only 243,198 quarters. The noble Marquis asserted that the consumption of the necessaries and luxuries of the working classes had largely increased, was increasing, and was likely to increase. He thought it was the duty of Parliament to keep its eyes fixed on the progress of the great experiment of Free Trade—for an experiment it was—and by every practical means to assist the British farmer in his competition with the world.

The Earl of MALMESBURY considered that the noble Marquis had been himself deceived, or he would not have attempted to deceive their Lordships by the rose-colored statements he had made. He (Lord Malmesbury) had received communications that contradicted the noble Marquis's prosperity assertions. Importations were still going on, and though stocks might be low in the warehouses, they were not low in the farmers' yards. The noble Earl contended that agriculture produce had been depreciated thirty-three per cent. Then there were increased poor-rates and county-rates, which fell on the shoulders of the agricultural classes. It might be too much at present to expect those who were pledged to Free-Trade to agree to a return to Protection, but it was but reasonable to expect them to free the farmers from the unjust burdens that fell on them, and to place them in a position of equality with the foreigners and with their fellow-countrymen.

Lord REDESDALE derived this comfort from the discussion, that it had extracted from the Lord President the admission that Free-Trade was only an experiment.

Earl GREY insisted that, if an experiment, it was in the highest degree satisfactory.

The petitions were laid on the table.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

SIR J. FRANKLIN.

Sir F. BARING stated, in reply to Sir R. Inglis, that the expedition about to sail in search of Sir J. Franklin consisted of two steamers, under the command of Captain ANSON, and of two ships, which were a separate expedition, under the command of Captain PENNY, and that no charge was being made to experts their departure; and that the whole would sail, at the latest, in the last week of April.

PROTECTION.

Mr. WODEHOUSE gave notice of his intention to move resolutions, as an amendment to Mr. Cayley's motion for the repeal of the malt-tax, affirming the existence of agricultural distress, and the necessity of re-establishing a system of Protection.

CHARTIST LAND SCHEME.

Mr. F. O'CONNOR gave notice of his intention to move, after Easter, for leave to bring in a Bill to wind up the National Land Company.

MERCANTILE MARINE BILL.

Lord J. MANNERS gave notice that, in the event of the Mercantile Marine Bill being read a second time, he would move that it be referred to a select committee.

FINANCIAL REFORM.

Mr. HENRY DRUMMOND moved for, in order that the present taxation of the country depressed all classes, and especially the labouring classes, by diminishing the funds for the employment of produ tive labour, it was the opinion of the House that adequate measures should be forthwith adopted to reduce the expenditure of the Government. The hon. member said he did not ask the House to go back on the policy of Free-Trade—if policy it could be called but he asked them to follow it up to its legitimate consequences. His proposals were to reduce the expenditure, especially the salaries of persons holding office under the Crown, and to take off all the burdens imposed on raw produce. He also proposed to do away with the tax for the sake of the malt tax, to reduce the duty on bricks, and to take off the hop duty.

Mr. CAYLEY seconded the motion.

Mr. FOX MAULE contended that the system of Free-Trade, by which the Government were prepared to stand, had greatly alleviated the burdens of the working classes. He considered the motion as an attack upon salaries; but upon looking over the lists he could discover no margin for retrenchment consistent with the maintenance of the public faith. The right hon. gentleman made the motion by moving the previous question.

Mr. HANDLEY had not sufficient confidence in Mr. Drummond's political consistency to support the motion.

Sir R. PEEL considered that the resolution, if adopted, would end in a delusion, and therefore he could not advise the House to affirm it. After the votes of the House in favour of the army and navy Estimates proposed by the present Government, it would be most inconsistent to pass a general resolution such as that submitted. The right hon. baronet condemned the extravagant military forces kept up by the powers of Europe, by which they paralysed their commercial energies, and declared that, in his opinion, no greater benefit could be conferred on the human race than a general agreement of all the great powers to proportion their armaments to their relative strength, and to reduce their armaments and their expenditure

Mr. NEWDEGATE, Mr. EVELYN, and Colonel SIBTHORP supported the motion.

Mr. Cobden and Colonel Thompson objected to the resolution as vague, and as framed with the design of embarrassing Ministers in favour of Protection.

Mr. A. STAFFORD denounced the one-sided Free-Trade now in operation, and insisted either on giving the farmers the benefit of the system, by allowing them to grow tobacco, and for a large diminution of the malt-tax, or else that the Government had taken the best course for effecting those objects, he could have no reason for affirming the resolution, and he should therefore agree in meeting it with the previous question. With respect to the claim for the farmers of this country to grow tobacco, it was the opinion of those competent to judge, that, even should the duty be taken off foreign tobacco, the farmers of England or Ireland could not grow it to compete with it. Much misapprehension prevailed as to the interpretation of the dogma, to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market. He understood that, as applied to the Legislature, to mean, that nations should endeavour to affirm any such general resolution of economy as members endeavoured to make it appear

Mr. HENLEY said that throughout the country one universal cry against taxation was heard, and when that was the case it was the strongest proof of general distress, and more or less put in peril every institution in the land. As a decided friend to economy, he heartily supported the motion.

Mr. Hey wortH and Mr. HUME, Mr. F. BENNET, and Captain HARRIS supported the motion.

Mr. B OSBORNE maintained that the motion was a Protection motion in disguise, and he was determined not to be made a cat's-paw like his hon. friend Mr. Bright, or fall into the trap laid for Free-Traders by gentlemen opposite.

Mr. LABOUCHERE considered that it would be most unseemous and unfair to call upon the Government to affirm any such general resolution of economy as that proposed, after an the Government had done, and all they were doing, in the way of retrenchment. He maintained that the country was as well able to bear taxation now as at any former period.

Mr. MUNTZ and Lord DUNCAN saw nothing in the motion that was not perfectly fair and incontrovertable; they, therefore, supported it.

Mr. BROTHERTON could not vote for a sham motion, however specious in appearance.

Mr. DRUMMOND replied, the object of his motion simply was to affirm the proposition, that the taxation which pressed particularly on the labourer and on the small trader should be lightened.

The House d vided

For putting the previous question	..	190
Against it	..	156
Majority for the Government	..	—34

The effect of this division was, that Mr. H. Drummond's resolution was not put from the chair. The announcement of so small a majority was loudly cheered by the supporters of the motion

Sir H. HALFORD moved for leave to bring in a Bill to relieve the occupiers of lands and tenements, not being owners thereof, from payment of County Rates and county police rate:

After a short conversation, leave was given to bring in the bill.

ADMISSION OF JEWS TO PARLIAMENT.

Mr. P. Wood moved for a Select Committee to search the journals of the House for precedents relating to the right of Jews and other persons to take their seats without being sworn upon the Holy Gospels: to inquire into the manner in which Joseph Pease, the Quaker, took his seat in 1833: and to inquire into the manner in which Jews and other persons, not being Christians, are permitted to make oath in courts of justice.

Sir R. PEEL said that he had voted for a legislative measure to admit Jews to Parliament, and was prepared again to support such a measure. On the understanding that the proposed committee would not prejudice the question, he would not object to its appointment; but, should any attempt be made to supersede the right of the House of Lords to deal with the question, he pledged himself that no gentleman who had opposed the admission of Jews to Parliament should watch such attempt with greater jealousy than he would.

Lord J. RUSSELL considered that the committee was desirable, in order to obtain accurate information.

After a few remarks, the committee was agreed to.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock.

NEWSPAPER STAMPS, DUTY, &c.

On the motion of Mr. BROTHERTON, the following returns were ordered, viz:—Return of the amounts of stamp duty, and other duties, on the several Editions in England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland for the last ten years, stating also the totals for each year. Returns of the aggregate number of stamps issued for newspapers in the year 1848, in England and Wales, Scotland, and Ireland, respectively, distinguishing the number at one penny and at one halfpenny; showing the number of London newspapers, the number of advertisements in them, the sum and amount of advertisement duty paid by them in the year 1849; and similar returns as regards the English provincial, the Scotch, and the Irish newspapers (all in continuation of parliamentary paper No. 160, of session 1849).

COUNTY RATES.

The adjourned debate on Mr. M. GIBSON'S County Rates and Expenditure Bill was resumed.

Sir J. PAKINGTON moved, as an amendment, that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the present mode of levying and expending the county rate in England and Wales, with a view to ascertain whether any more satisfactory mode of levying the rates, and giving the ratepayers more effectual control over their expenditure, could be adopted. The hon. Baronet contended that the principle and details of the bill were objectionable, and it would, if carried into law, throw all the county business into confusion.

Mr. WILLIAM PATTEN supported the second reading of the bill, though he admitted that the details were open to many objections.

Sir J. GRAHAM was desirous to take a step towards the establishment of some efficient system of popular control of the county funds, and therefore he was prepared to give his support to the second reading, trusting that the details would undergo material amendment in committee.

Sir G. GREY believed that the principle of the bill was the establishment of a control over county funds on the basis of representation, and therefore he was favourable to the second reading. He, however, thought it would be advisable to refer it to a select committee to consider its details.

After a debate in which many hon. members took part, the amendment was withdrawn, and the bill was read a second time, and ordered to be refe.red to a select committee.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Mr. EWART moved the second reading of the Public Libraries and Museums Bill, the object of which was to give a permissive power to town councils to levy a small rate for the establishment of public libraries and museums. The power was exclusively permissive, and was founded on the same principle as that contained in the bill. which was brought in four years ago to enable town councils to establish museums, as well as on the recommendation of a select committee and the express wishes of the inhabitants of several of the largest towns in the kingdom.

Colonel SIBTHORP opposed the taxing principle of the bill, and moved, as an amendment, that it be read a second time that day six months. He could not consent to give the town councils the power of taxing the inhabitants against their will.

Mr. WORTLEY also opposed the bill. He considered that it would be unjust to allow town councils to tax the inhabitants generally for the benefit of a few. He feared that the proposed libraries would soon degenerate into more political reading-rooms and clubs.

Mr. BERNAL thought that in the present impoverished state of the small boroughs it would be unjust to put on a new tax, even of the smallest amount. If the bill required the assent of two-thirds or three-fourths of the rated inhabitants, he might be induced to support it; but, as it gave the town councils the absolute power of taxation, he should oppose the second reading.

Sir G. GREY and Mr. LABOUCHERE cordially supported the principle of the bill, though they thought it would require considerable alteration in committee.

Mr. Hamilton, Lord J. Manners Mr. W. Miles, and Mr. Spooner had every wish to see good useful libraries and museums, and every other species of sound intellectual enjoyment, provided for the people; therefore as the objects of the bill they were favourable, but could not consent to the principles of taxation on which the bill was based.

Mr. ROUNDELL PALMER believed that this bill was introduced with ulterior views, and that, should the second reading be carried, the limited power of taxation would be extended in committee, and a clause would be introduced under which the town councils would be empowered to turn the libraries into lecture-rooms, mechanics' institutes, and other political institutions. He should feel it to be his duty to oppose the second readi g.

Mr. Hume, Mr. Bright, Mr. Slaney, Mr. Heywood, and Mr. Wyld supported the bill.

Sir R. Inglis, Mr. P. Howard, and Mr. Oswald opposed it.

Sir J. GRAHAM required Mr. Ewart to pledge himself to introduce a clause requiring a population from the majority of the inhabitants previous to the establishment of the rate.

Mr. EWART declined to give the required pledge, though he thought there should be some check on the town councils.

Sir G GREY did not think reasonable to ask Mr. Ewart to give a decisive pledge on the subject. He thought the House should be satisfied with the hon. member's general assurance that he was favourable to the principle.

The House divided—

For the second reading	..	118
Against it	..	101
Majority in favour of the Bill	..	—17

The Bill was read a second time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

CONVICT PRISONS.

The Earl of GREY moved the second reading of the Convict Prisons Bill, the object of which was to render imprisonment in this country a portion of the punishment to be undergone by persons sentenced to transportation. He proposed that the imprisonment should be solitary, and that its duration should be shorter or longer according to circumstances—18 months being the maximum term. Arrangements had been made in Pentonville and Millbank prisons, 2000 cells were available, which he considered would be sufficient for the purpose of carrying out the separate system of confinement. After imprisonment, the convicts should be sent to Gibraltar, Bermuda, or Portland, to be employed on the public works, under a reformatory system of discipline. The last stage of punishment to which the convicts should be subjected was, that they should be sent to various distant colonies, through which they should be dispersed as much as possible. Australia and other colonies originally established as free colonies ought not to be considered to be forced against their inclination to receive convicts, but Van Diemen's Land and Western Australia, and to a small extent Norfolk Island, should be the colonies especially selected for the reception of convicts after undergoing the above-mentioned combination and separate discipline. This bill applied especially to the prisons of Great Britain; but it was the intention of the Government to apply a similar convict policy to Ireland.

The bill was read a second time.

BURIAL CLUBS.

In reply to Lord Monteagle, the Marquis of LANSDOWNE said that the subject of burial clubs, and the abominable system of secret poisoning to which they gave rise, was under the consideration of the Government, and he trusted that a clause in the general measure contemplated with respect to burials would reach those clubs; but, if not, he would not object to a short bill to put a stop to those clubs.—Adjourned

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

CHURCHYARDS OF THE METROPOLIS.

Mr. C. LEMON rose to put a question to the noble Lord the member for Bath, a question of which he had given him a preliminary notice because the cause which gave rise to it had only come under his notice within the last half-hour. When he came to the House this evening, he passed through St. Margaret's churchyard, and under the tower of that church, and within a few yards of that House he saw an open grave, ready for the interment of a corpse. Now it being in evidence that interment in St. Margaret's churchyard was injurious to the health of the members of that House, and also to society in general, he begged to ask the noble Lord whether he had any power to check or put an end to a nuisance, which was not only injurious to hon. members and to nearly all in London, but also condemned by the general voice of the community at large?

Lord ASHLEY hoped that hon. members would give their attention to the report which had been laid on the table of the House, in order that they might see in its length and breadth the enormous mischiefs that arise from the system of intramural interment. Under the Nuisances Act, he and others attempted to close some of the graveyards in the metropolis; but the magistrates thought they had exceeded their powers, and that they had no means of interfering with graveyards, beyond ordering now and then that certain disinfecting substances should be scattered over them.

Mr. GOULBURN said that when he was Chancellor of the Exchequer, he was informed by the churchwardens of St. Margaret's that they were then about to buy a piece of land for a burial-ground away from the church.

Sir G. GREY said, with regard to the question of the hon. Member for Westminster, the report had not been long in the hands of the Government. That report was now under their consideration; a bill had been prepared on the subject, and very soon after Easter the Government expected to bring in a bill founded on the report.—(Hear, hear).

RUSSIA.

Mr. ANSTEY wished to ask the Noble Lord at the head of the Foreign Department a question with respect to the withdrawal of the excess of the Russian troops which at present occupied the Danubian provinces. The noble Lord had stated that, in accordance with the convention, that excess of number would be withdrawn. Would such be the case? If so, would any portion of Sir W. Parker's squadron be withdrawn?

Lord PALMERSTON had already declared that he had received the most positive assurances of the Russian Government that the troops would be withdrawn. With respect to the latter part of the question, the conduct of the squadron would depend upon circum tances.

Mr. ANSTEY wished to know whether it was the intention of the noble Lord to withdraw the squadron, or any part of it, from the Greek waters?

Lord PALMERSTON: The service on which they were engaged would prevent that.

BLOCKADE OF ATHENS.

Mr. G. BANKES wished to ask the noble Lord whether the blockade of Athens had actually ceased?

Lord PALMERSTON said that a blockade, properly interpreted, meant the prevention of any vessels going into or coming out of a port. The squadron before Athens had only prevented the passing of Greek vessels from the Piræus. Sir W. Parker, on the list of the present month, had withdrawn a portion of the squadron, on receiving instructions from her Majesty's Government, and an intimation that they had accepted the good offices of the French Government.

Mr. HUME wished to know why it was that would have to pay the value of the ships which had been detained by the British squadron?

Lord PALMERSTON said that the ships had been detained in pledge for certain sums due to English subjects, and would be detained until those claims were satisfied, but no longer.

TEN HOURS' BILL.—RELAY SYSTEM IN FACTORIES.

Lord ASHLEY moved for leave to bring in a bill to declare the' intentions of the Legislature in respect of the hours and mode of working under the Factory Acts. The circumstances which led him to do so, he said, were very simple, and he would be brief in stating them. In 1843, a bill for regulating the time of labour in factories was introduced. By the act of 1845, it was enacted that labour in factories should be confined between the hours of half-past five in the morning and eight in the evening—a period of fifteen hours; but by a clause it was provided that the labour of all young persons should be calculated from the time when they first commenced in the morning, and those persons should work for more than ten hours. The result was, that, under the interpretation of that Act, the system of relays and shifts was altogether impossible. After the passing of the Act of 1845, it was discovered that the section limiting the labour of young persons was not so stringent as to entirely exclude the system of relays. Great discontent was consequently produced among factory operatives, cross and contradictory decisions were given by magistrates on the clause, and no one knew exactly what the clause was. To prevent further litigation, a case was referred to the Court of Exchequer for its decision, and the result was, a decision adverse to the interpretation put upon the act by the factory inspectors; and M. Baron Parke declared that the words of the act were not sufficiently strong to carry into effect what the Court strongly suspected was the intention of the Legislature. (Hear, hear) Believing himself that the object of the Legislature, in passing the act, was to interdict shifts and relays, he now asked for leave to bring in a bill to more effectively carry out that object.

After some discussion, leave was given to bring in the bill.

On the motion of Mr. FITZ, leave was given to bring in a bill to render more simple and effectual the titles by which congregations or societies, for purposes of religious worship or education in England and Wales, hold property required for such purposes.

The Highways Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed.

The Titles of Religious Congregations (Scotland) Bill passed through committee.—Adjourned.

COUNTRY NEWS.

ST. HELEN'S SAVINGS-BANK.—The trustees of the St. Helen's Savings-bank are preparing to pay a first dividend of 6s. 8d. in the pound. It is expected that there will be funds to pay all legal demands in full. Persons who had deposited money beyond the legal amount, can only claim the surplus, if there is any money remaining from the property of the Johnsons after the legal claims are satisfied

SAILORS' HOME AT PORTSMOUTH.—A public meeting, over which Vice-Admiral Dacres presided, was held at Portsmouth on Tuesday, to consider the means of establishing a Sailors' Home for seamen in the port irrespective of the receiving ships. There were present Lord George Lennox, Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, Admiral Sir F. Austen, Admiral Douglas, and many other naval officers. Several resolutions were passed for carrying the project desired, and several gentlemen addressed the meeting on the necessity of the proposed Home and the benefits likely to result from it. It appeared that application had been made by the friends of the project for assistance and co-operation; but the Lords declined interfering in their capacity as a board; the Admiralty had, however, as member for Portsmouth, promised his assistance to the measure.

GARDEN ALLOTMENTS FOR THE WORKING CLASSES.—The Right Hon. Lord Kinnaird has taken the field belonging to the town of Inverkeithing from the Newtyle Railway tunnel eastward to the top of Hilltown, to be laid out in garden allotments. It comprises nine acres, and is laid out in ten sections, 24 lots in each section, and is to let at 5s. Lordship's purpose to invest the property in trustees, who will see that the scheme is properly worked out. The price to be charged for the allotment is about 1s. 6d. per pole.

EXTENSIVE EMIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES.—The tide of emigra ion seems again to have set in from Liverpool. Six vessels from New York alone lay in the Mersey on Tuesday awaiting the tide. The aggregate number of their passengers was upwards of 2000. Meanwhile hundreds of other persons are waiting to depart by other ships.

ACCIDENT AT A NAPHTHA MANUFACTORY.—On Monday evening week a dreadful accident occurred at the naphtha manufactory belonging to Mr. James Bapty, manufacturing chemist, New Wortley, near Leeds. It appears, that, in order to divert the disagreeable fumes from the vapour generated in the process of making naphtha, Mr. Bapty had a pipe fixed by which the offensive fumes were conveyed from the still into a tall chimney. The pipe was defective, and a new one was ordered, but had not been got ready; meanwhile the old pipe had been repaired, and all went on safely till about ten minutes before six o'clock on Monday evening, when, in discharging the still, a quantity of the gaseous product escaped through chunks in the pape, and as the fire, through mistake, had only been partially extinguished, in an instant a violent explosion took place, resembling one of heavy cannon in the distance. The roof of the building was lifted up perpendicularly, one of its sides, adjoining a yard, was driven down, and when the roof fell the flames were forced out laterally for several yards, and Mr. Bapty, Mr. John Bapty, and one person named Joseph Wrigley and J. hn Williamson, were completely enveloped in a sheet of fire, and had to make their way out or it as best they could. A larger building, to which that in which the explosion took place was adjoining, was also set on fire. The building was a new one, and we understand that the entire damage will amount to between £400 and £600. Neither the building nor the stock is insured. Mr. Bapty is one of the injured parties, expired on Wednesday morning week.

COCKFIGHTERS.—On Monday last, about four hundred persons, from various counties in England, assembled at Holcombe Hill, near Bury, to witness a cock battle. The police having been made acquainted with the intentions of the gentlemen assembled on the hill, their unwelcome presence so intimidated the cockfighters that no attempt was made to carry out their intentions, and the crowd left the place, greatly chagrined in consequence of the disappointment.

NEW DIORAMA.—This evening will be given a private view (to be opened to the public on Monday) of a Moving Diorama of her Majesty's Visit to Ireland, painted by Mr. Philip Phillips. The picture will be exhibited in the Chinese Gallery, at Hyde Park Corner. The programme announces no fewer than sixty-eight prominent features. Mr. Phillips, in October last, had the honour of submitting his drawings for this Diorama to her Majesty, who was most graciously pleased to express her approbation of their fidelity, and to command the artist to prepare a series of sketches from the subjects.

THE RELAY SYSTEM.—At a meeting of the cotton spinners of Glasgow, held there on Friday evening week, for the purpose of considering the system of working by relays or bands, and the recent decision of the judges in Scotland, that the system is permissible under the Act for the Regulation of Factory Labour, resolutions were agreed to expressing their regret at the decision come to by the judges, and stating that it was the opinion of the meeting that one uniform principle of working ten hours would be of mutual advantage to employers and employed; and that they, therefore, did not approve of any of factory workers to exert themselves to secure the long sought-for ten hours, as a check to the many evils incurred under the late factory system.

YORK AND LONDON INSURANCE COMPANY.—On Tuesday the Master in Chancery Blunt settled the list of shareholders to the extent of 200. Mr. Goodchap, the official manager, reports that the liabilities are estimated at £3000 upwards, and that the probable amount of assets to meet them will be £3900.

EELS.—A correspondent assures us that last week there was caught at the over fall of Mr. Compton's, Water Newton, near Peterborough, an eel, full of spawn, which has been preserved by Mr. Baker, chemist, Stamford, and is now in the possession of Mr. Compton, and is important as settling the long-disputed question as to the propagation of the eel.

EQUALISATION OF POOR-RATES.—Mr. Shafto Adair has prepared and brought in a bill to provide for the more equitable distribution of the charge for the relief of the poor in certain cities and towns. The bill provides that, from and after the 29th of September in the present year, the majority of the guardians, nominated or elected in any city or town of more than one parish, having a population, according to the last census, of not less than 20,000 persons, may (with the consent of the Poor-law Board) direct that all the costs and charges for the relief and maintenance of the poor of and in the several parishes contained in the union, shall be borne by the common fund of the union, to which the several parishes shall contribute in proportion to the annual rateable value of the property in such parishes. Power is also given to the guardians to cause a survey and valuation of the unions for the purpose of making such assessment as may be made.

FOREIGN HOPS.—Large importations of hops have taken place: from January 50 bales, the growth and produce of Belgium, and from the United States above 100 bales.

BAY AND SETTLEMENT OF NATAL, NOW D'URBAN.

EMIGRATION TO NATAL.

GREAT exertion is making at this moment to direct the great stream of emigration towards the new colony of Natal, which may be described as a long strip of fertile country in South Africa, along the coast and inland as far as the Drakensberg, or Quathlamba Mountains, its port lying 1000 miles to the north-east of the Cape of Good Hope.

Among these efforts is the establishment of an association known as the Natal Company, which is stated to have been established for "the purpose of promoting emigration, for the acquisition and sale of land, and for the cultivation of cotton, &c." To afford an opportunity for explaining these objects a public meeting was held at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street, on Monday evening; Mr. G. E. Cotterell in the chair. The secretary stated that the company had had selected and surveyed by the Colonial Government a large tract of country, the best undisposed of; and that they propose to bestow upon any respectable family going to Natal, fifty acres of good open land. A man and wife will be considered a family, whether with children or not. The passage money in the steerage is £10 for each adult, with twenty-five acres; in the intermediate, £19, with twenty-five acres, or £22 10s. with fifty acres; and, in either case, five acres for each child: cabin passengers, £35.

The principal feature of this association, however, is that £10 worth of land, equal, at the Government price of 4s. per acre, to fifty acres, will be allowed to the Company for each emigrant conveyed out; and the Government condition, with reference to the grant of land, being that the Company shall give twenty acres to each emigrant, a profit of thirty acres might thus be secured to the Company; but, as the Company propose allowing twenty-five instead of twenty acres, the net land profit will be reduced to twenty-five acres.

Mr. J. S. Christopher, one of the promoters of the company, and who has resided some time in Natal, then explained the advantages of the colony, which he stated to possess one of the finest climates in the world, capable of producing tobacco, cotton, flax, silk, indigo, &c., in greater abundance than any other British colony. Mr. Christopher, after urging the importance of Government assistance, proceeded to state that the temperature of Natal ranged from 55 to 100 degrees, but the air was so pure that the heat was not so oppressive as in this country. The soil was so productive, that two, and even three, crops were frequently obtained from the same lands in a year without any dressing. Natal was intersected throughout with a great number of rivers. There was nothing at all to fear from the native population, and the colony would easily support from 2,000,000 to 5,000,000 emigrants. In the capital of the colony, Pietermaritzburg, there were already about 1500 inhabitants; and D'Urban, the port, contained about 600 inhabitants. There was a postal communication between the two places twice a week, and fortnightly, by the Cape, with England. The colony already exported a considerable quantity of horses, buffaloes, oxen, butter, corn, &c., to the Mauritius. It was true wheat would not grow on the coast; but a little inland it grew luxuriantly, without any dressing. The horses which had been introduced into the colony by the Dutch farmers, cost about £10 each, and would easily travel 100 miles a day. Indigo grew indigenous in the colony, and was sold at 3s. 4d. the pound in this country. A company was about to be formed for the purpose of cultivating the white mulberry, for silk. Iron, coal, copper, and plumbago are found in the colony; and there is abundance of wood of every description. The Dutch colonists are hospitable, religious, and moral; and the Zoolus, a native tribe living in Natal, are intelligent, docile, and shrewd.

After further explanation, a series of resolutions were passed in support of the proposed company; and, after thanking Mr. Christopher for his information, and the chairman for his services, the meeting separated.

Mr. Christopher has in the press a volume entitled "Emigration for One Thousand Families to Natal," containing a variety of useful information for emigrants. The key to the country is a harbour or bay, of which we annex two views, as well as of Port Natal, now called D'Urban, in honour of Sir Benjamin D'Urban.

The Rev. Mr. Archbell states that the contiguity to the bay, its superabundance of fuel as well as large timber, its inexhaustible supply of water from four rivers, one of which has ten times more than supplies the whole of Cape Town (with 25,000 inhabitants), all point out the great importance of the locality. Two of these rivers run into the Bay, and a third (the Umlazi) within four miles of its margin. The stream of this river is considerable, and may be conducted over a rich and fertile flat leading to the present town and bay.

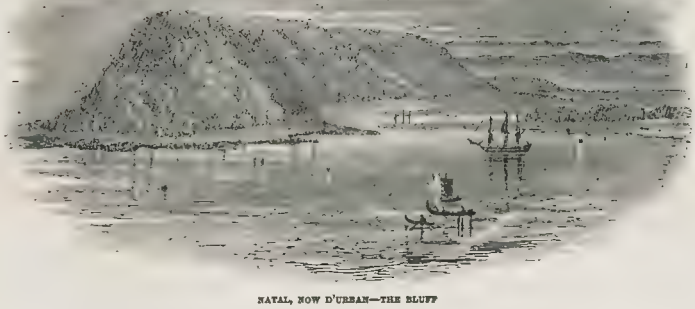
Upon reference to the nautical directions for entering the harbour, and a comparison with Dampier's account of it in the year 1684, the quantity of water on the bar appears to have undergone little change. Vessels drawing ten feet of water with a leading wind can safely enter the harbour at all times of tide. At high water there is from thirteen to fifteen feet of water; and there is no doubt that with a steam tug and a dredging machine that fifteen feet of water and double the present width might always be found in the channel. This being done, a finer harbour could not exist.

With regard to the bar, a Correspondent states:—The captain of the John Steward, 198 tons, belonging to Aberdeen, took me from Algoa Bay to Natal. We hugged the coast going up, and being able to see the land well, he remarked that it must be a fine country; but when the pilot took the vessel into the inner harbour next morning, he was delighted, and said, "This will become the capital of South Africa. It is now what Aberdeen was before the harbour was improved. It will be a splendid place."

D'Urban is forty-eight miles from Pietermaritzburg, the capital, and the residence of the Governor. It has not a municipality. The consequence is that the streets are sadly neglected. After rain they are better than when dry. The ground is sand, without a stone being upon it.

The streets were laid out by the Dutch farmers at right-angles, with market-square, &c. Town lots of £100 each may be had from the Government. The town is a full mile from the anchorage for the sake of water, but no doubt water will shortly be carried to the landing-place. But for a difficulty by no means insuperable, the Umgazi in a large stream would ere this have been conducted close to every one's door. The streets are wide, to admit of extensive waggon traffic. A new custom-house is building, an episcopal church, and a new Wesleyan chapel.

ZOOLU MAN.



NATAL, NOW D'URBAN—THE BLUFF

The bay, with islands in the centre, is very beautiful at high water, and indeed at all times. It is well stocked with fish, and crabs are very abundant and numerous in species. The whole commerce of Natal must go through this port, as well as that to the Zoolu Country; and also a considerable portion of that with the Dutch farmers over the Drakensberg and beyond the Orange River, together amounting to about £90,000.

In a small work by Jacob Erasmus Methley, and entitled "The New Colony of Port Natal, with Information for Emigrants," we find the following glowing picture of the above district:—

"The entrance to the bay or harbour is a channel, which gradually expands into a magnificent sheet of water, in extent about three miles by twelve, having all the peculiar characteristics of lake scenery, the beauty of which is considerably enhanced by a cluster of islands covered with mangroves. On one side is the high land called the Bluff, which is clothed with the forest to the water's edge; on the other side is the landing-place, where the vessels anchor within a few yards of the shore; here a new custom-house has been erected, and on an elevated point near, a strong block-house or fort has been built, surrounded by a palisade. It has a pretty effect when first seen upon entering the bay.

"D'Urban, the sea-port town, is situated a little more than a mile higher up, on the banks of the lake, embowered in trees and flowering shrubs in endless variety.

"The road from the town to the beach, at high water, leads through the forest, and the stranger must be struck with the number and variety of the creepers and parasitic plants; they are twining round and clinging to everything which will yield them support, festooning the branches of the trees, and matting together the underwood, so as almost to render the bush impenetrable. The convolvulus and passion-flower, together with a kind of honeysuckle and nasturtium, are plentiful, as well as many rare exotics, which would be highly prized by the horticulturist in England, but which, being here constantly before the eye, soon cease to attract the attention. When the tide is out you can reach almost any part of the town by the sands, which are firm, but in some parts rather wet.

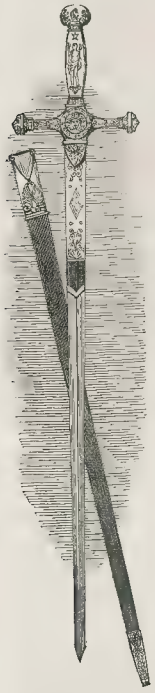
"Perhaps nowhere can a greater variety of fruits be obtained than in Natal. Tropical plants flourish here well, which are not grown on the higher lands near the metropolis. Pine-apples grow in the open air, and ripen at all seasons, without irrigation, and with no more care, or as much, as a bed of cabbages. There is also the banana, peach, apricot, guava, orange, lemon, fig, almond, mulberry, &c., and in the other districts are the apple, pear, strawberry, raspberry, &c., together with the walnut-tree and grape-vine, as well as the native fruits, many of which are very delicious. Wheat will not grow in this neighbourhood, although oats, barley, beans, peas, &c., do well; neither in this district adapted for the rearing or grazing of cattle; sheep will not live here, and the horse sickness, which prevails more or less throughout the colony, is generally the most virulent in the vicinity of the coast. Fish of various kinds are plentiful, and delicious oysters (similar to our natives) are procured from the rocks at the foot of the Bluff. Great quantities of cattle and produce are regularly shipped from this port to the Mauritius, which is distant between two and three weeks sail, and always offers a ready market for stock of every description. Madagascar has for some time supplied the Mauritian market with cattle, and the Cape and Australia with rice, corn, fish, &c.

"Near the upper end of the bay are the mangrove islands, the wood of which is used in the construction of houses; there are also great quantities of shells, which are burnt for lime. It is exceedingly pleasant, on a summer's evening, to sail round this noble bay. As the boat proceeds on its course there is an ever-changing panorama of nature's brightest pictures; profuse and lovely vegetation margins the water; and as you near the islands, flocks of flamingoes, pelicans, and cranes, large white-plumaged birds, rise on the wing, startled by your approach. Soon you glide into a canal-like passage, the trees on either hand arching above, forming a fairy-like vista, through which the evening breeze comes cool and refreshing. Underneath the clear water you see the fish darting to and fro between the matted roots of the mangroves; and as the rich flood of light from the setting sun leaves the waters of the bay, you hear the song of the Kaffir, or far off on the hills the distant howl of the hungry jackal: sometimes a vulture or long-legged crane goes sailing overhead, the short twilight dies away, and the fire-flies dart around, enlivening the gloom; night throws her mantle over sleeping nature, and the bright constellations of the Southern Hemisphere appear, but seldom look down on a scene of greater loveliness or beauty."



SWORD OF THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON, AT WINDSOR CASTLE.

CURIOSITIES.—XV.

SWORD OF THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON.

This interesting relic of the Emperor is preserved in the magnificent collection of arms in the north corridor at Windsor Castle.

The hilt and guard of the sword are of or-molu, beautifully chased, the style of ornamentation being in the classic taste which arose after the first Revolution: the head of Medusa, the thunderbolts of Jupiter, figures of Neptune, &c., being amongst the enrichments. The blade is engraved for a short way below the hilt, and gilded, and a small shield-formed part is blue. The scabbard is of black leather, the chape, &c. being of or-molu.

A sword similar in character to this is, we believe, in the possession of the Duke of Wellington, and it was taken at Waterloo.

THE NEW LORD CHIEF JUSTICE.

On Monday morning, Lord Campbell took his seat at Lincoln, for the first time, as Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, to which high office he has just been appointed. It is usual for the Corporation to meet the Judges on their arrival in Lincoln; but, as Lord Campbell did not arrive with Baron Parke, the new Lord Chief Justice missed his "reception," and entered the city privately on Saturday evening.

On Sunday, his Lordship attended divine service in the magnificent cathedral. He was accompanied by the High Sheriff (—— Fane, Esq.) and attendants and the congregation was very large.

On Monday morning, Lord Campbell was conveyed from his lodgings to the Castle, in the High Sheriff's carriage. At ten o'clock, his Lordship took his seat on the nisi prius side of the Castle-hall; Mr. Baron Parke presiding in the Crown Court.

On Lord Campbell entering the court, the members of the Bar rose and made their obeisance. An Artist of Lincoln sketched, for our Journal, the accompanying Portrait of his Lordship, listening to Mr. Humfrey, Q.C., in the first cause tried, "Penlston v. Dawber and others," an action for debt to recover the price of a boiler, in which a verdict was returned for the plaintiff to the full amount claimed. The cause-list was very heavy for the county of Lincoln. His Lordship sat till half-past nine o'clock at night.

We append a sketch of the legal life of the new Lord Chief Justice:

John Lord Campbell, the second son of a distinguished minister of the Scotch Kirk, was educated at the University of St. Andrew's, where he took the degree of M.A. He was called to the English bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn, in Michaelmas Term, 1806, and soon attained a considerable common law practice. From 1809 to 1816 he published a series of successful law reports, known as "Campbell's Nisi Prius Cases." He travelled the Western Circuit, where his indefatigable industry and his great forensic acumen soon gave him a leading position. His career was most prosperous. As an advocate, he in some measure resembled his father-in-law, the late Mr Scarlett (Lord Abinger), in his fame and good fortune. Few counsel were more successful in the obtaining of verdicts for their clients than Mr. Campbell; and, with such a reputation, his profits were naturally very great. It is said that in some years he made the largest income ever known at the common law bar. In 1827 he became a King's Counsel; in 1832 he was appointed Solicitor-General, and received the honour of Knighthood. He was made Attorney-General in 1834, and retained that office (a short interval of retirement excepted) until 1841, when he was named Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and created a Peer. He held the Irish seal but for a short time, having seceded from office with his party. On their return to power, he took a seat in the Cabinet as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; and, on the recent retirement of Lord Denman, he has been appointed Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench. Lord Campbell, during the term which elapsed from his retirement from the Irish Chancery to his assumption of the service of Chief Justice, has acted with incessant assiduity as a Judge in the Privy Council and in the House of Lords. His "Lives of the Chancellors," and of the Chief Justices, are also the fruits of that period of laborious leisure. Lord Campbell, although two years older than Lord Denman, who has just retired from the Chief Justiceship, bears every indication of a green old age.

In the British Quarterly Review we find the following notice of the legal attainments of Lord Campbell:—

"Campbell, though a better read lawyer than any man of the older school, with the exception of Scott, Abbott, Sugden, Holroyd, Richardson, Hullock, Park, Tindal, and Patteson, possessed no one gift or attribute of the advocate. His person was awkward and ungainly; his countenance heavy, dull, and unimpressive; there was 'the cheek of parchment and the eye of stone;' his voice was creaky and unmelodious; his style—if style it could be called—bad, disjointed, and graceless. Though a tolerable Latin scholar and a passable historian, the ex-leader of the Oxford circuit had no pretensions to deep or elegant learning. Yet by perseveringly plodding on, Lord Campbell, though at little brilliantly employed as any man we know, has risen to be Solicitor and Attorney-General, to be Lord Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and one of her Majesty's Ministers; and now, while we write, he aspires to be Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench."

THE RIGHT HON. LORD CAMPBELL, LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.—SKETCHED AT LINCOLN ON MONDAY LAST.

The Grand Jury of the county of Lincoln have presented an address to Lord Denman, who has forwarded the following reply:—

Gentlemen,—Baron Parke has transmitted your address to me, with a letter of his own written in the true spirit of a gentleman, a scholar, and a friend.

But the uncommon kindness of that unexpected address places me in no small difficulty. No words can express my sense of its value. I doubt whether it is most honourable to yourselves or to me—to yourselves, as embodying those noble sentiments which naturally spring up in generous minds at the painful close of a long judicial career; to me, as a testimony to the honesty with which that career has been run. I trust I am not wrong in believing that you give me full credit for exercising my office on every occasion, according to the best of my understanding, in conformity with truth and justice, and are satisfied that no personal feeling whatever could have diverted me from the path of duty.

To the last hour of my life it will be among my best consolations that twenty-three of the most distinguished gentlemen of the great county of Lincoln, who have known me long and well, should have sent me such a document and I trust the beneficial effects of a cordial good understanding between the people and the judges of the land will be perpetual.

With sincere thanks and fervent wishes for the prosperity and happiness of yourselves and your county,

I have the honour to be your grateful humble servant.

London, March 13, 1850. DENMAN.

CHURCH OF THE HOLY TRINITY, AT WESTMINSTER.

The first stone of this church was laid on November 8th last, by Mrs. Frances Elizabeth Bentinck; and an Illustration of that interesting ceremony appeared in our Journal for November 17. The building is now in progress.

The Church of the Holy Trinity is designed in what is called the early or geometrical decorated style which prevailed at the time of Edward the First and Second. The plan of the Church is in the form of a cross, with a tower at the intersection of the four arms. The length of the nave, including the space under the tower, is 84 feet, and the width 19 feet 6 inches. The aisles are 62 feet 6 inches long, and 12 feet wide, including the thickness of the columns. The transepts are 19 feet 6 inches wide, and the whole length across the two is 73 feet. The chancel is 43 feet 3 inches long, and 22 feet 3 inches wide: it has an apse on each side about 5 feet long; the vestry extends beyond the north one. The entrances to the Church are through the north and south porches, and there is also a private door to the chancel on the south side, and a door to the vestry on the north. The height of the nave to the point of the roof is about 53 feet, and the height of the chancel and transepts about 41 feet from the ground; the height of the tower is 94 feet, and the spire itself about 100 feet; together making a height of 194 feet to the top of the vane. Bargate stone from Surrey is used for the outside surface of the walls (its first introduction in London), with Anston stone quoins. Bath stone is used for the dressings, and Kentish rag for the body of the walls. The chancel and porches are faced with Kentish rag from the sills, which is varied materially to the effect; and it would be very desirable that the whole Church were faced in the same way. The spire is to be carried up to the height of 54 feet; and to form a kind of lantern, pierced over its stone, and lighted on three sides by a two-lighted window. The east end has a window of seven lights, occupying nearly the whole space; the side windows are of three lights. The buttresses form a part of the building, and give much of a rich character, about midway up; the end ones are surmounted by crocketted pinnacles. The west end is shown in the view, as also the south transept and porch, and the tower and spire. The roof, therefore, requires no description; they are to be relyoned, having arched ribs resting on richly carved corbels: they are designed in such a way as to produce a very rich and striking effect in the interior. Red tiles to be used, and the coverings of the buttresses tiles. The seats are all to be open and free, and will accommodate on the floor there being no galleries, 850, including 200 children.

The site of the Church is a triangular piece of ground, close to Vauxhall Bridge, with a road on each side, close up to the building. The cost of the Church will be about £6,000; some considerable portion of this sum is expended upon the foundations, which, owing to the nature of the ground, are about twenty feet below the level of the roads. It is to be hoped that individuals, who may feel interested in this great and noble work, will be induced to meet the liberality of the Committee, by supplying what is still wanted in the decorations and furniture, and in painted windows, for these are necessary to give a full effect to this handsome building. Arch deacon Bentinck having engaged to complete the substantial portions only. The font and one painted window are already promised.

The architect is Mr. John L. Pearson, of Bedford-square, Westminster, and the builders are Messrs Smith and Appleford, of Pimlico.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A YOUNG PLAYGOER.—Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield" was dramatised (with songs), and produced at the Surrey Theatre August 29, 1847, with great success. Another version (by Mr. Oxenford) was performed at the Haymarket Theatre in September 1803 but it has not been published.

ANTIQUARIAN.—Apparently, you have not seen the observations of the late Sir Frederick Madden on the subject of the Magna Charta of King John, preserved in the British Museum. The difference between these two times is called the "equation of time."

A REGULAR SUBSCRIBER.—The security, given under the circumstances stated, would be held valid.

THE QUEEN.—The expression "Great Britain was in common use" in the reign of James I., and for some years of the preceding century. Mr. Hinton commenced the publication of his History of England in 1790, and published the first volume in 4to. in 1793.

J. B.—Mr. Hunt's work on Tea is published by Longman and Co., Paternoster-row.

J. S. M.—"The Castle to the Stage" may be had of Cowdroy, Cambridge-street, Strand.

A CONSTANT READER.—Lemon's Jest Book.

ANXIOUS.—If you state, will not be valid, unless witnessed.

A CONSTANT SUBSCRIBER.—In the Pit Gallery," No. 13, you will find a humorous illustration of the subject of the Wedgewood biscuit-pigh—" The Willow Pattern."

DANCING GIRLS.—We have not received the Sketch.

CHARLES.—See Hogarth's "Principles of Gothic Ecclesiastical Architecture."

VATES.—It is no sober error to boast of having had a friend to carry an antique thought to the Parnassian mount, and to have returned with the borrowed treasure, and to have made it one's own.

OMEGA.—The passage "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" is used by Sterne in Hafley, but not without quotation marks. We have been told that it is a proverb in French.

A CONSTANT SUBSCRIBER.—There is no court of arms registered in Lyon Office. The only register of the names in the county we can find is the marriages of Richard Mosheim, Esq. of Bedford, Essex, with Fanny, only child of the middle of the sixteenth century.

A.S.—Craig's Dictionary of the Scottish tongue" is a new edition of "The Commonalty," much more comprehensive and complete than the original work.

BETA.—We deem the usage of a crest and motto by a clergyman perfectly correct. In fact, the Kings of Arms are constantly granting arms, crests and mottos to persons in holy orders.

BRECONIAN.—The offer is not worth 10s. 6d.

J. M. Guernsey.—We applied to the Secretary of Mr. Murray's was born in March 1793.

THE CLERGY AND THE MARRIAGE BILL.—On Tuesday, a meeting of the clergy of the archdeaconry of Colchester was held in the library of the old castle in that town, for the purpose of deliberating on the best means of opposing the Bill, now before the House of Commons, for legalising marriage with a deceased wife's sister. The Venerable Archdeacon Burney, D.D., presided, and the attendance was very numerous. The principal speaker was the Rev. C. Forster, of Stisted, near Braintree, who quoted a letter received by him personally from the Archbishop of Canterbury, in which the right rev. prelate expressed his own feelings as strongly opposed to the alteration of the law contemplated by the bill in question, and mentioned an individual case in which, before the present agitation of the question, one of the other three other prelates were requested by a party interested to give their opinions upon such a marriage, and those opinions, though given separately and without concert, were unanimously against it. Petitions to both Houses of the Legislature were agreed upon with complete unanimity, praying that the bill might not pass into law.

COLLEGE OF THE FREEMASONS OF THE CHURCH.—The EXPOSITION or Object of the members of this society met on Tuesday evening, at the College houses, 10, Carlisle street, Soho-square, the Rev. Samuel French, the Grand Master, in the chair They detailed many interesting particulars connected with science and art; and that, as mediæval art was in possession of means not now employed, attention should be turned to them for the advantage of the exhibition so nobly proposed by Prince Albert. An address to the Royal Commission, embodying these points, was then proposed and carried. The business of the evening commenced with Sir Walter James reading a paper on the nature and use of imagination in works of art, in which he made some remarks on Mr. Wordsworth's and Mr. Ruskin's theories, and proposed a view intermediate between them and the point assumed by Dugald Stuart. Though questionable in its principles, the essay was undoubtedly clever.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 16, 1850.

THE result of the elections that have taken place in France, to fill up the vacancies caused for Paris and the departments by the trial and conviction of MM. Ledru-Rollin and Caussidière, Serjeants Boichot and Rattier, and other conspirators, is a signal defeat of the Government. The Socialist candidates have almost everywhere carried the day; and in Paris the Conservatives have not even managed to carry one out of the three. M. Carnot—famous for his circular to the schoolmasters immediately after the Revolution of February, 1848; M. Vidal, clerk or secretary to M. Louis Blanc when the last-mentioned theorist held sway at the Luxembourg; and M. de Flotte, formerly an officer in the French navy, and an insurgent in the sanguinary days of June, 1848, whose punishment was mercifully commuted by the President these are the three men who have found favour with the populace of Paris, and who will take their seats in the Legislative Assembly. Their colour is deepest red, in words, they are ultra-Republican and ultra-Socialist. Seven eighths of the adult male population of Paris registered their votes on this occasion. In the departments a similar effort has been made, and in some instances with the like success, to return only the most extreme Socialist candidates. The Republicans of the moderate school of Marrast, Lamartine, and Cavaignac have made common cause with the Ultras to embarrass the Government; and the result is a state of affairs highly perilous and menacing. The sensitive Bourse feels already taken the alarm; and Louis Napoleon is confronted with one of the greatest difficulties he has had to encounter since his elevation to the unenviable dignity which he holds. We do not imagine, however, that the peace of the capital will be seriously disturbed. An insurrection would be of too much value to the present Government, in gathering around its banner the now divided party that loves repose better than any form of government whatsoever, to be lightly undertaken by the Socialists. Wild as the ultra-democrats are, they know that in an insurrection at the present time they have not the slightest chance against the immense military force and the skilful Generals that would be employed against them; and they will doubtless bear much provocation, before they try their fortune in the streets. We anticipate, therefore, that the successful candidates will avoid placing themselves in the position of the men whose vacant places they have been elected to fill. But these events are nevertheless the prolific germs of future troubles. The prospects of France are but gloomy. There is no union among the friends of order. Legitimists, Orleanists, and Bonapartists fail to coalesce, when their coalition would be of the utmost service in defeating an anarchical faction; but Socialists and Democrats, split up into a thousand sects, and brimful of hatred towards each other, manage to forget their differences when it becomes necessary to show the Government how powerful they are. Should the Government manage to quell this rising storm, it is to be hoped they will at least learn this lesson from it:—never again to postpone the elections. Had these vacancies been filled up within three weeks of the affair of M. Ledru-Rollin and the Socialist sergeants, the result of the elections would have been a victory to the Moderate party. To strike while the iron is hot is good policy in most cases, but especially so in revolutions.

MR. LABOUCHERE'S Bill for the Regulation of the Merchant Service does not appear to give satisfaction to the parties most interested. The shipowners make loud complaints of an interference which they represent as both unconstitutional and unnecessary, and assert that the Government has no more right or occasion to pry into and regulate the affairs of shipowners, with regard to the employment of their captains and seamen, than it would have to meddle with the affairs of omnibus proprietors and the conduct and capabilities of their drivers and conductors. But this argument will not stand. The commercial marine of Great Britain is an important element of our national greatness and power. Weaken us in our navy; and in the convulsions and wars that may arise in the world, the position of this country may not be such as to give us either satisfaction or security. Already, it is alleged that the best men of the British merchant service, allured by higher wages, better treatment, and more able and gentlemanly commanders, have gone over in large numbers to the Americans; and that America, in fact, has the pick and choice of British seamen. We believe the fact not only to be as it is stated, but to be notorious. The Government would, therefore, be guilty of a gross dereliction of duty if it neglected to take all just and reasonable means to remove this evil. The first method is to improve the general condition of the British sailor by the establishment of homes and registries, where he may live while he is ashore without being robbed, and where the best men may hear of the best chances of employment; and the second, and perhaps most important, is to institute such an examination for persons holding the responsible and despotic office of captains of merchant ships, as shall prevent the grossly incompetent and brutal man from being appointed to a command. The shipowners themselves, however much they may dislike a governmental interference with their concerns, cannot, upon cool reflection, object to a supervision such as this; especially when they remember that not only private but national interests are at stake, and that the time may come when our navy may be the best, and perhaps the only, guarantee of our security against foreign aggression. The chief difficulty is as to the degree of supervision necessary, and as to the persons who shall exercise it. The shipowners object to the control of the Government, and the Government objects to leave the matter any longer in the hands of the shipowners. So the affair at present stands. The shipowners of Liverpool have had some correspondence with the Board of Trade, with a view to a more satisfactory understanding; and from the good feeling displayed on both sides, there is reason to hope that the Government, while preserving its own supervision, will not interfere unduly with local management and direction. The merchants and shipowners of our large ports may fairly claim to be the administrators of the new law, subject, of course, to their decisions, to an ultimate appeal to the supreme authority. Mr. Labouchere's bill will probably be modified in some particulars, but their can be little doubt that in one shape or other it will ultimately pass.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

RIGHT OF SYNODICAL CONVOCATION IN THE CHURCH.—At a very numerous meeting of the Bristol Church Union, on Monday last, a preliminary resolution was unanimously adopted, to the effect that—"Whereas, by the recent judgment of the Court of Appeal in the case of 'Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter,' it was asserted that two opposite doctrines with regard to the holy sacrament of baptism may be legally held in the Church of England, it is necessary that the Church should forthwith meet in Synod for the purpose of disavowing such assertion; and in the meantime, until such Synod can be moved, the Bishops and clergy are solemnly called upon, as far as in them lies, individually and collectively, to vindicate the Church from the imputation under which she lies, by repudiating the decision of the said Court, and by bearing distinct witness to the true Catholic doctrine of holy baptism on every occasion, and in the most public way." The meeting (a general one) was adjourned to Monday next, instead of that day month.

The Right Rev. Dr. Ollivant, late Regius Professor of Divinity in the University of Cambridge, and now Lord Bishop of Llandaff, was enthroned on Wednesday in the cathedral church of the diocese.

TESTIMONIALS.—The following clergymen have recently been presented with testimonials of esteem and affection:—The Rev. F. Coke, curate of Horsham, by the inhabitants and others; the Rev. E. F. Coke, perpetual curate of Priestfield, from the parishioners; the Rev J. Campion, on the occasion of his leaving the parish of Northchurch, by a few friends; the Rev. Benjamin Buckley Gifford Astley, late curate of Pusey, Wilts, from the inhabitants; the Rev. Richard W Darnell, late curate of St. Mark's, New Swindon, Wilts, from the parishioners; the Very Rev. Wm. Gordet Le Breton, formerly curate of St. Olave, Southwark, from the parishioners, the Right Rev Charles James, Bishop of London, by the churchwardens and a number of the inhabitants of Bethnal-green, in acknowledgment of his Lordship's regard for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the people," and the "liberality by which he had encouraged the building and endowment of ten additions churches" in that parish.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

Her Majesty the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, with the youthful members of the Royal Family, continue in the enjoyment of excellent health. Her Majesty and the Prince have several times appeared in public during the past week. On Saturday the Queen and his Royal Highness visited the Haymarket Theatre, after a dinner party, at which were present his Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Portuguese Minister and Viscountess de Moncorvo, the Austrian Minister and Mme. Laurence, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marquis of Donegall, Viscount Hawarden, the Bishop of London and Mrs. Blomfield, Lord Seaton, Sir George and Lady Grey, the Right Hon. Fox Maule, the Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, Lord Marcus Hill, and Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey.

On Sunday, the Queen and Prince Albert, the Princess Royal, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestics attended divine service in the private chapel in Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. Gerald Wellesley officiated.

On Monday, the Prince Consort, attended by Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps and Colonel Bouverie, left town at eight o'clock by the South-Western Railway, and crossed in the Fairy steam-yacht to Osborne Pier, arriving at Osborne shortly before twelve o'clock. His Royal Highness returned to town by the same route, arriving at Buckingham Palace about seven o'clock in the evening. Her Majesty and the Prince again honoured the Haymarket Theatre with their presence on Monday night.

On Tuesday the Duchess of Gloucester visited the Queen at Buckingham Palace. The Judge Advocate General had an audience of The Queen, and submitted to her Majesty the proceedings of some courts-martial. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, with the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice afterwards took an airing in an open carriage and four. Lord Alfred Paget and Colonel Bouverie attended on horseback. In the evening her Majesty had a dinner party.

On Wednesday his Royal Highness Prince Albert took equestrian exercise in the parks. In the evening the Court honoured the performance of the French Plays with their presence.

On Thursday the Queen walked in the gardens of Buckingham Palace. In the afternoon the Prince Consort presided at a meeting of the Royal Commission for the Promotion of the Exhibition of works of industry to be held in 1851. In the evening her Majesty had a dinner party, at which there were present his Excellency Baron Kent, his Excellency the Hanoverian Minister, the Baroness de Cetto, his Excellency the Danish Minister and the Countess Reventlow, the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, the Duchess of Marlborough, Lord and Lady Willoughby D'Eresby, &c.

The Hon. Matilda Paget and the Hon. Flora Macdonald have relieved the Hon. Eleanor Stanley and the Hon. Elizabeth Lennox in their duties as Maids of Honour in Waiting to the Queen.

THE QUEEN'S COURT.

The Queen held a Privy Council and Court on Saturday afternoon, at three o'clock, at Buckingham Palace. The Council was attended by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Lord President, the Lord Privy Seal, the Secretaries of State for the Home, Foreign, and Colonial Departments, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the President of the Board of Control, the Postmaster-General, the Secretary at War, and the Lord Chancellor of Ireland. Her Majesty gave audience before the Council to the Marquis of Lansdowne. The decision of the Judicial Committee on the appeal, "Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter," from the Court of Arches, was approved of by the Queen in Council.

At the Court, Mehmed Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador, had an audience of the Queen, to deliver a letter from the Sultan. Le Commandeur Marques Lisboa, the Brazilian Minister, had an audience of her Majesty, to take leave on temporary absence. M. Morales had his first audience of the Queen, to present his credentials on a special mission from the Republic of Nicaragua.

POLITICAL AND FASHIONABLE REUNIONS.

Viscount and Viscountess Palmerston gave a grand entertainment on Saturday evening, at their mansion, in Carlton-gardens, to the First Lord of the Treasury and Lady John Russell. The following were present at the banquet:—the Marquis of Salisbury and Lady Adelaide Paget, the Earl and Countess Granville, the Earl of Carlisle, Viscountess Jocelyn, Lord Elphinstone, the Lord Advocate, Mr. Tuffnell, M.P., and Lady Anne Teff-ell, and Mr. Norman Macdonald. Later in the evening the noble Viscountess had an assembly. The réunion was attended by all the members of the corps diplomatique resident at the Court of St. James's, as well as by nearly four hundred members of the fashionable world.

Lady John Russell had an assembly on Wednesday, at the official residence of the Premier, in Downing street.

Lady Peel opened the beautiful saloons of the family mansion in Whitehall Gardens on the same evening, for the reception of company.

THE COURT.—It is understood that the Court will leave Buckingham Palace for the Royal residence at Windsor, on Wednesday, the 27th, or Thursday, the 28th inst. It is expected that her Majesty will proceed to Osborne shortly after the holidays, remaining in the Isle of Wight for about ten days or a fortnight.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent returned to her residence, Clarence House, St. James's, at four o'clock on Thursday, from Frogmore. The Royal Duchess was attended by the Baroness de Speth, Lady Fanny Howard, and Sir George Couper.

His Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Hesse visited the Duchess of Gloucester on Tuesday.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge attended divine service on Sunday at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, where the Rev. Wesley officiated in waiting on his Royal Highness. The Royal Duke visited Christ's Hospital School the same evening.

The Duke of Wellington, the Duchess of St. Albans, and the Marchioness of Salisbury attended the early service on Sunday in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Rev. Dr. Wesley officiated and preached the sermon.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry and Lady Adelaide Vane have left Wynyard Park, Durham, where they intend to remain about a month, after which they will leave town for Paris.

The Earl and Countess of Winchilsea have left town for Lisbon.

We regret to learn that the Lord Chancellor is suffering from an attack of influenza.

Lady Brougham's soirée on Tuesday night was attended by upwards of one hundred fashionables.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer and Lady Mary Wood returned to town on Monday from Brighton. The right hon. gentleman's health is much improved.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION OF 1851.

The Lord Mayor, the Rev. Mr. Marshall (his Lordship's Chaplain), and Mr. W. D. Starling had an interview with Prince Albert on the 2nd instant, to submit to his Royal Highness a list of the Mayors, Royal Commissioners, and others of the great banquet given on the 21st instant, in honour of the Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations. His Royal Highness received his Lordship and the gentlemen who accompanied him with the most marked kindness and affability, expressed his warm approbation of all the arrangements pointed out to his notice, and signified his pleasure to hold a levee in the State Drawingroom for the company previously to the entertainment. The mayors and other municipal officers will attend in their official capacities. Evening dress will be prevalent, and it is believed some of the guests will appear in Court dresses. The Lord Mayor received the following note on Monday:—

> My Lord,—Deeply impressed with the generous and magnificent hospital by your are about to offer to his Royal Highness Prince Albert and others interested in the great work of 1851, I have the honour to request to your Lordship's favour of beef which shall be worthy the occasion, as a trifling acknowledgment of what myself in common with hundreds of my fellow-tradesmen feel at the ready and extensive patronage you are giving to one of the most noble designs that have ever emanated from this or any other country. Trusting your Lordship will excuse my request, at the same time an apology for the liberty I have taken.
> I subscribe myself, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient servant, JOHN BANISTER.
> Threadneedle-street, March 11, 1850.

A meeting took place on Monday afternoon, in the Council Chamber, Oxford, convened for the purpose of taking into consideration how the University and city should identify themselves with her Majesty's commissioners for the promotion of the Exhibition of the Works of Industry of all Nations, to be held in London in 1851. The meeting was very numerously attended. The Rev. the Rector of Exeter, as pro Vice-Chancellor (in the absence of the Vice-Chancellor), and the Mayor of Oxford, were called to be joint chairmen on the occasion. H. Dixon, Esq., deputed from the general committee, explained the nature of the object contemplated, and the results that were likely to be realised by it, in a very able speech, which was much applauded. The cause was cordially advocated by the Master of Pembroke College, the Principal of Alban, the Principal of Brasenose College, Archdeacon Browning, Thorpe, and other members of the council. Resolutions were unanimously passed for furthering the object by subscriptions, and a local committee nominated, with power to add to their number.

DESIGNS FOR THE BUILDING.—The committee appointed by her Majesty's Commissioners for all matters relating to the building having come to know that many contributors of suggestions for the building are taking much trouble in preparing plans and complete sets of working drawings for the building which, in the present stage of the proceedings, and pending the adoption of a general plan, it would be premature to consider, it is particularly attention to that party, the Royal Commission, which has called for suggestions as to the general arrangement of the ground plan, and to test outlines as to the present time, been put under embargo, are to be retained as pledges.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

AFFAIRS OF GREECE

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE expressed a hope that before the noble Lord opposite went into the subject of which he had given notice, he would consider whether it was advisable to discuss a matter relative to which negotiations were still pending.

Lord STANLEY felt the full extent of the appeal made to him; and in the observations which he should make he would confine himself strictly to such parts of the case as were to be found in the documents which were open to their Lordships and the public. The noble Lord then went into a detail of some of the circumstances connected with the present position of this country with respect to Greece, and referred to extracts from the correspondence which had taken place on this question. He expressed a strong expectation that nothing would shake the good understanding between France, Russia, and England, upon whose amicable relations the peace of Europe and the world so materially depended. He concluded by asking why the delay occurred in sending the order to suspend hostile proceedings?

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE, acknowledging that the noble Lord had strictly confined himself to the limits within which he had promised to keep, said that the first intimation his noble friend at the head of the Foreign Department had received of the intention of the French Government to offer their good offices was on the 5th of February, in a private conversation with M. Drain de Lhuys, who, however, acknowledged that he had not then been formally authorised to make that offer. His noble friend might, therefore, have declined to act on that information; but on the very same day he wrote a letter to Mr. Wyse, informing him of the expected offer of good offices on the part of France. The formal offer was made on the 7th, and on the 15th a formal despatch was sent to Athens, communicating the suspension of the blockade; and on the 16th another despatch to the same effect was sent by another channel. He believed the French Government were now perfectly satisfied on that point. It would be seen, thus, that all the haste possible was made in this matter.

The subject then dropped.

Some returns on the subject of Abuses on board Emigrant-ships were ordered on the motion of the Earl of MOUNTCASHELL.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The Speaker took the chair a few minutes before four o'clock.

EVICTIONS IN IRELAND.

In reply to a question from Mr. P. SCROPE Lord J. RUSSELL said the Government had no measure in contemplation to introduce immediately to check the wholesale evictions and house-levelling at present going on in Ireland.

THE BUDGET.

The House having resolved itself into a Committee of Ways and Means,

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER proceeded to lay before it the financial statement for the ensuing year. He had to lay before the House two estimates—one, that up to the 5th of April next, and the other up to the 5th of April, 1851. He had estimated the income for this year at £52 262,000, but he was happy to say that it would probably amount to £52 874,0.0. He could not, however, take the estimate for next year so high, as during the last quarter the returns had not been so good. He would, however, take them at £52,785 500. He had estimated the expenditure of last year at £50 853,622, but it amounted only to £50,050,641; and he calculated that next year there would be a surplus of two millions and a quarter. He had calculated last year on a surplus of only £104,000, whereas the increase amounted to £523,500. He did not, however, anticipate such favourable results from the Customs this year as last, for there would be a probable loss on sugar of between four and five hundred thousand pounds; on brandy, and likewise on corn, there would also be probably a loss. The right hon. gentleman then enumerated the various sources of revenue, from which he anticipated revenue as follows:—

Excise	14,045,000
Stamps	6,350 000
Assessed Taxes	4,300,000
Income Tax	5,5 0,000
Customs	20,000,000
Post-Office	820 000
Crown Lands	160.000
Miscellaneous	260,000
Old Stores	310 000

Making a total of £52,285,000. With respect to the expenditure, the interest on the

Funded Debt was	28,105,000
Other charges on the Consolidated Fund	2,630 000
Navy Estimates	6,614,000
Ordnance	2,434,417
The Militia	110.000
Commissariat	500,000
Miscellaneous	211 139
Excess of expenditure in former years	4,000,000

Making altogether an expenditure of £50,613 582. To this should be added the expenses of the new Houses of Parliament, and for a building to hold the records of the Houses. That, the whole he conceived, after arranging their expenses, upon an available surplus of fifteen hundred thousand, a round sum of two millions. The right hon. gentleman then adverted to the propositions which had been made to reduce the duties on windows, tea, timber, malt, soap, bricks, paper, advertisements, and attorneys' certificates, and also the proposition of the hon. member for Buckingham, to place on the Consolidated Fund certain charges which were provided for by the property tax, and said he would not assent to those propositions, for which no special case had been made. When he considered that, within the last few years, no less a sum than £148,000,000 had been laid out on railways, he could not help thinking that there was a strong symptom of a return to more pro-perous times. He admitted that the price of corn was lower than he had anticipated. But the price was also low in France, and yet it would not be said that the lowness of price there was owing to excessive importation. He did not think there was any reason to suppose that the present low price would be the average price hereafter, for the average price in France, Belgium, and Holland, for a series of years, was from 48s. to 49s. per qr. He felt convinced that the skill and industry of the British agriculturists would surmount the existing pressure, though he was willing to admit that many must fall in the struggle. This might be much to be regretted, but no one would on that account argue that there should be a stop to improvements, any more than they would contend that railroads ought not to be made because some innkeepers on the old road would thereby be ruined. He would now state his own views on the subject. He had thought that they should first direct their attention to a reduction of the debt, and he should state to the House the fact that since 1831 we had borrowed no less than £35 000,000, while in the same twenty years we had only applied £8,000.000 towards its re-payment, leaving a balance of debt of no less than £27,000,000. If they were always to borrow when the revenue was deficient, and never to pay when they had an excess, he could not see how they were to get out of debt at all. Neither could he see how they would get rid of the income-tax if they were to apply every surplus to the reduction of taxation instead of to the reduction of the debt. He felt it desirable, however, that some relief should be given in the way of taxation, and the first case to which he should apply the principle would be the small holders of land, by reducing the stamp duty on the sales of land up to £1000, and rendering it more equitable on transfers above that amount. Also a reduction of the duty on mortgages and bonds, and to repeal the malt duties, and on leases from one to half per cent. He also thought it desirable that the habitations of the labouring classes should be improved, and he should, therefore, propose the total repeal of the duty on bricks. He estimated the loss to the revenue at £300,000 on stamps, and at £455,000 on bricks, making a total of £755,000, which was about one-half of the surplus available. He thought, therefore, that he was making a fair distribution of the surplus, one half to the reduction of taxation and one half to the reduction of the debt. He proposed to make advances for the purpose of drainage and land improvement on an additional security to an expenditure of capital, which could not fail to be considered a national work, as an individual benefit. The plan proposed in Ireland was for England and Scotland. £2,000,000: and of this, owing to priority of application, the gentlemen north of the Tweed had got no less than £1,600,000 (Loud laughter.) He proposed to advance another £2,000,000, and to take care to reserve a fair share of it for England. He also proposed to advance for similar purposes £1,000,000 to Ireland, £800,000 of which should be for arterial drainage. He hoped to be able to make these advances without any additional charge to the public debt. These were the proposals he had to submit to the House He also proposed to apply £250,000 in order to get rid of the Perpetual Annuities. He hoped to be able to make the advances without having any additional charge over to the funded debt, if the House would leave him a surplus to do so. He proposed, by the payment of a sum of £250,000 out of the surplus in hand, to exin guish the Equivalent Fund, which was a charge on the public debt of £.,0,000 a year, since the junction of the debt of Scotland with that of England at the time of the Union. That would leave him £500,000; and that he thought the House should leave him as a re-serve fund. The right hon. gentleman concluded by moving a vote of £3,200,000, to be raised by Exchequer bills for the service of the year.

After some discussion, in which Mr. HUME, Mr. NEWDEGATE, Lord J. MANNERS, and several other members took part, the motion was agreed to.

The House then went into Committee of Supply, when several votes for the Army and Navy Estimates were agreed to.—Adjourned at half-past one o'clock.

ACCIDENT TO THE EQUIPAGE OF THE DUCHESS OF CAMBRIDGE.—Yesterday (Friday) morning, at ten o'clock, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, accompanied by a lady, was proceeding in her carriage to the Euston-square station of the London and North-Western Railway, when, on turning the corner of Whitelebury-street, some to the terminus, one of the horses stumbled and fell. The postilion was thrown from his seat, and was placed for a few moments in a most perilous situation, in consequence of another of the horses also falling between him and the horse first alluded to. Her Royal Highness, who was greatly alarmed, made a speedy egress from the vehicle, and was conveyed to Lamb's hotel, where she remained for a short time and had all possible attention paid to her by the proprietor thereof. All parties escaped without injury; and the Duchess, after a short delay, entered the railway carriage prepared for her, and proceeded on her journey by the express train, which started at a quarter past ten

SCOTCH REPRESENTATIVE PEERS.—The Earl of Airlie and Lord Blantyre have been elected Representative Peers for Scotland, in the room of the late Earl of Airlie and Lord Colville of Culross.

GENERAL POST-OFFICE, March, 1850.—All letters for Belgium, intended by the writers to be sent in the closed mail, by way of France, must be specially addressed either "viâ France," or "viâ Calais."

COURT OF COMMON COUNCIL.—At a Court held on Thursday, the Court of Aldermen agreed to move an address to Lord Denman upon his noble and learned Lord's retirement from the office of Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench. Mr. Brown brought up the report of the offices and clerks' committee on the office of Common Sergeant. It recommended that the salary of £1500 a year for the performance of the duties of the office should be continued, and that some slight change should be made as to the practice of Common Sergeant as a counsel. Ordered to be entered upon the minutes of the Court. The Lord Mayor appointed Thursday next for the election of a Common Sergeant, on which day no other business will be transacted in the Court.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

The official declaration of the poll had not been made at Paris at the date of our latest intelligence, but the further examination of the votes shows that, although it is undoubted that Carnot, Vidal, and De Flotte head the poll, the latter is only 341 votes ahead of the Conservative candidate; and as the votes of the gendarmerie have yet to be taken, a hope (but a slight one) is entertained that they will be recorded in favour of the Moderate party All sorts of rumours continued rife, such as the intended resignation of the President of the Republic, the retirement, or a modification, of the Ministry—the names of their successors, &c We believe, however, it is certain that General de la Hitte and M. Ferdinand Barrot have withdrawn from the Cabinet. It is also stated that M.M. Molé and Thiers have consented to accept office. They were both sent for to the palace of the Elysée on Thursday, and, after a long conference with the President of the Republic, it is said they agreed to enter the Cabinet and to form a Ministry. It is thought that Count Molé will be Minister of Foreign Affairs, and M Thiers Minister of the Interior The principal difficulty between the President and the new ministers has respect to the personal interference of the President of the Republic in the affairs of the government. It is thought that the President will make such concessions in this respect as will be satisfactory.

The advices from the departments state that 14 Socialists have been returned in various localities; while the Moderates have, on the other hand, won 11 seats formerly occupied by their opponents. The interest increases as the elections proceed, and the most various speculations are connected with their probable results.

GREECE.

Accounts from Athens of the 5th, via Trieste, state that the severity of the blockade has not been relaxed, and that the vessels which have, up to the present time, been put under embargo, are to be retained as pledges.

DISCHARGE OF SHIPS' CARGOES.—The collectors and comptrollers of the customs department, at the several ports and places throughout the United Kingdom, have received directions from the commissioners to transmit to the board, with all practicable despatch, the following account, so far as the same relates to their respective ports, viz. an account of the number of days in which vessels have not discharged their cargoes within the period required by the 16th section of the Regulation Act of the 8 and 9 Vic. c. 86 during the last three years, stating the length of time by which such period has been exceeded in each instance, and the amount charged to the parties for the day pay of the officials, and distinguishing the vessels which remained in port in consequence of the existence of any embargo or blockade.

EXPLOSION OF POWDER-MILLS, NEAR HOUNSLOW.

On Monday afternoon, a terrific explosion took place at the powder-mills of Messrs. Curtis and Harvey; and the catastrophe, it is deeply to be regretted, has been attended with a considerable loss of life.

In order to render the account of this intelligible, it is necessary to give some description of the manner in which the powder-mills are arranged. They are situated about a mile to the Hounslow railway station, and nearly about half a mile from the public highway. The buildings are nearly all placed at some distance from each other, and those in which the more dangerous processes of manufacture are carried on, are carefully secluded from the rest by thick belts of fir-wood, by mounds of earth, or by such other means as the position in which they are placed, suggests. Nearly all the works are constructed of the lightest materials, so that, if an explosion should happen, the least possible resistance may be offered to the shock which it occasions. Through the grounds, which occupy a considerable extent, runs the river Colne, a tributary of the Thames, the waters of which are applied to set the machinery of some of the composition and corning-houses in motion. The situation of the works generally appears to be unexceptionable, being thoroughly removed from the pub lic highway, and from those dangers to which an exposed situation leads. All these precautions, however, have been entirely failed in the moment of trial; and the explosion which took place on Monday must be regarded as one of the most devastating accidents of the kind that has happened for years in the country. It appears that one of the workmen was employed in what is called the "Table Dusting-house," i. e. the house for "dusting" or cleansing sporting powder, which was situate on the east ern margin of a fir plantation, with a field of turnips on the one side of it and the wood on the other The building had nothing no machinery of any kind was kept which could at all lead to such a catastrophe; two small spindles and a sieve of copper-wire being the only implements employed.

At half-past three o'clock in the afternoon, the first explosion, the noise of which resembled that following the discharge of a park of artillery, took place in one of these buildings. Immediately afterwards, a dense cloud of smoke was seen rising into the air; and before it had cleared away some persons were observed to fall in sundry directions amongst the trees. Two explosions of greater violence than the first quickly followed, by which the roofs of the corning-houses were driven high into the air.

The inhabitants near the station of the railway, generally, consisted of the men and their families working in the mills. Upon hearing the series of explosions they ran towards the mills, but they had not proceeded far on their journey, when another explosion occurred; and before the noise had subsided, two or three more of similar violence followed in rapid succession.

When the grounds were entered, a fearful spectacle presented itself, for no fewer than seven of the mills or stores were levelled with the ground, the whole of the contents destroyed, and many of the poor workmen were lying in various directions, some bleeding from wounds, and others burnt and blackened by the force of the explosion

The engines from Hounslow Barracks and other places were in attendance; but their services were scarcely required, as the work of destruction was complete.

The extent of the injury to life and property was not fully known until Tuesday morning, when it was ascertained beyond doubt that eight human beings had been killed, and that two more had been very seriously hurt. The names of the unfortunate victims are as follows:—Richard Glasier and Henry Savage, who perished in the sporting powder dust house; Robert Goddard, who was in the sporting-powder corning-house when the accident took place, and who lived for an hour and a half after the explosion. John Compton was with Savage, and, though much injured, still survives. James Perry, who was in the middle glazing-house at the time, was killed; and William Pierce, his companion, was seriously hurt, and is since dead. In the other corning-houses three men perished, their names being William Borrows, Thomas Penfold, and James Bookmaster. To this list the name of Henry Clifford, next in authority to the foreman of the works, must be added. When he heard the explosion in three timself into the river Colne, which passes close at hand; and in that position he remained while the roof of one of the buildings was blown right over his head. He was somewhat scalded and injured, and appears to have owed his life mainly to the shelter which the river afforded

How the explosion, or rather series of explosions, occurred, is a mystery. The two ill-fated beings who worked in the treble dusting-house, where the first explosion took place, have both been killed, and no direct evidence on the subject can, therefore, be obtained; but one thing at least is certain, that "dusting-houses" are not usually looked upon as the dangerous portions of powder-mills, or those where explosions are most likely to happen. The quantity of powder stated to have been in the dusting-house when the accident happened, is two cwt.—a small quantity, certainly, to have caused such wide-spread destruct on. The whole house has been blown away, and the scalded and blackened foundations alone remain. The trees for many yards on the western side have been either torn up by the roots or cut right through, or had their branches or bark stripped off; and one large tree has been traced in the same line-field. And so great was the shock of the explosion, that a house standing beyond this field, at a distance of about 300 yards, had its wind-ws broken, and a piece from one of the panes fell on the floor and was broken. This is the more remarkable, as the wind was at the time blowing from the east.

From the dusting-house, the evil consequences of the first explosion extended to the "charble," or sporting-powder corning-house, which was about one hundred yards westward in the plantation of wood, on the outskirts of which the dusting-house was situated. Whether the second explosion was caused by burning embers from the first falling upon the premises, or by a large body of flame carried through the trees by the wind, it is impossible to say; but the house is entirely destroyed, though the whole amount of gunpowder in the building at the time is stated not to have exceeded one cwt and a half The loudest of the explosions was that which came third. A view of the scene of the catastrophe soon shows how this happened. The building in which the third explosion occurred was the press-house, and was much more substantially constructed than the rest. In it, according to custom, about four cwt. of powder had been left to be pressed; and the resistance offered being greater, as well as the quantity of combustible material larger, the shock had proved more alarming Providentially, however, in this instance the loss of property is all that remains to be deplored. The men had left a few minutes before the accident, and thus three lives were saved. Nothing can be imagined more complete than the destruction of this building; the machinery with which it was provided being wrenched into pieces, and large square blocks of teak-wood, weighing several cwt., being carried right across a mill-stream which flows on the north side of the premises. To the press-house succeeded the glazing-house, also a rather substantial edifice; and the explosion there was followed by that in the roller corning-house, where three men lost their lives. These last-mentioned premises contained about two cwt. of powder; and such was the force of the explosion that a part of the machinery with which it was fitted, weighing nearly three cwt., was carried right over some high trees, and into a field beyond, thus travelling through the air a distance of several hundred yards.

Three of the houses stood in a south-easterly direction from the dusting-house, where the mischief commenced, and the supposition is that the wind exercised a great influence in the extent of the disaster caused. The desolation is universal, not one stone being left upon another, the foundations being laid bare, the trees for some distance around being shattered, overthrown, and scorched, and the ground being strewed with bricks, pieces of timber, and fragments of machinery. A portion of a water-wheel rested between the boughs of a fir-tree, near its summit; and several heavy rollers, after being hurled upwards to a great height, embedded themselves deeply in the earth. Besides the five great explosions, two smaller ones occurred in other portions of the works; but these did not do much damage, beyond displacing a few timbers in the roof.

Among the heavier disasters of the day, the composition-house, that in which the materials of gunpowder are brought together, took fire, and everything, except those solid portions of the machinery which would not burn, was reduced to ashes.

The roofs of nearly all the buildings within reach of those where the explosions took place have been almost entirely destroyed, the tiles being displaced as if by a hurricane. The windows have also been blown in and plaister shaken off the walls.

Our Artist has sketched the sad scene; and appended a plan of the grounds to aid the reader in understanding the main points of the catastrophe.

THE INQUEST.

On Thursday morning Mr. Wakley, M.P., and a jury of 17 inhabitants of the parish of Twickenham, assembled at the works, for the purpose of prosecuting an inquiry into the cause of the melancholy accident.

Mr. Curtis, with his son and another member of the firm, was present.

From the evidence adduced, it appeared that the two persons in the dusting-house, where the first explosion took place, were both killed instantaneously, and blown to fragments, so as to preclude the possibility of identification. Of the other deceased parties, none had lived long enough to give any explanation as to the cause of the accident; and the only presumption that could be entertained was, that Glazier—one of the men employed in the dusting-house—who was proved to have left the building a short time previously to the accident, might have re-entered without changing his shoes for the ordinary slippers provided for the workmen, and that the explosion was caused by a spark arising from the contact of a piece of grit or gravel adhering to them igniting the dust on the floor of the building.

It was proved to the satisfaction of the coroner and jury that every precaution was taken to avoid accident, and none of the men had ever been heard to complain.

After a full investigation of all the circumstances, the jury found that the deceased parties met their deaths by an explosion of gunpowder, but how that explosion occurred there was not sufficient evidence to show.

Only three of the seven bodies could be identified. A few fragments of the remaining four are all that have been recovered.

Six widows and sixteen children have been deprived of their natural protectors by the calamity. We believe that some provision will be made for the most distressing cases by Messrs. Curtis and Harvey.

The distance at which this tremendous explosion was heard is truly astonishing. It is stated by a correspondent of the Times, resident at Brighton, that a corresponding number of shocks were felt, so that the inhabitants ran out of their houses, imagining that they had felt shocks of an earthquake. At Brighton, Mr. Heslop, a teacher of languages, while walking near the mansion of Sir Isaac Lyon Goldsmid, at Hove, near Brighton, heard a noise as of distant thunder but, as the sky was clear, he imagined that he must have heard a roar of artillery. It was then twenty-five minutes to four by his watch. Mr. Smith, a gardener and nurseryman at the north part of Brighton, also distinctly heard the noise. The most conclusive evidence, however, that the explosion was felt between fifty and sixty miles from the spot, is furnished by the following paragraph, copied from the Sussex Advertiser of Tuesday, a paper which was printed and in town before the news of the explosion reached Lewes:—"Accounts have reached this office from several persons living in different parts of Lewes, who depose to having experienced a slight shock, as if of an earthquake, at about twenty minutes to four o'clock on Monday afternoon. There was no train passing through the tunnel at that hour. Moreover, the shock was felt in parts of the town not affected by the passage of trains. All the persons alluded to experienced the shock at the same period of time." At Petworth, in Sussex, upwards of forty miles off, three reports were distinctly heard. From various other places there are similar accounts, all agreeing as to time, but varying a little in description. Some heard a noise, others felt a shock, while still others both heard and felt the effects of the explosion.

THE GORHAM CASE.

THE Judicial Committee of the Privy Council gave judgment, on the 8th inst., in the long-pending suit, "Gorham v. the Bishop of Exeter." No ecclesiastical case has, in modern times, excited such intense interest. Parties in the Church have arranged themselves on the side of Mr. Gorham or on the side of the Bishop of Exeter, and numerous parties, beyond the pale of the Church, feel their welfare concerned in the decision. Accordingly, long before the hour fixed for pronouncing the judgment, the door of the council chamber was besieged by a great crowd, including many clergymen; and when the door was opened the rush was like that into the pit of a theatre on the night of some favourite performance. The members of the committee present were the Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord Campbell, Lord Brougham, Lord Langdale, Sir Edward Ryan, Dr. Lushington and Mr. Pemberton Leigh. The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of London, and Mr. Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, were members of the Committee and had heard the case, but were absent on the delivery of the judgment. The two Archbishops concurred in the judgment, the Bishop of London dissented from it, but less from the conclusion, it is said, than from the reasons assigned for it; Mr. Knight Bruce also dissented. Nine members concurred, two dissented. Lord Langdale read the judgment from a printed document, which was afterwards published in the morning papers, and from that exclusively the following outline of the case is drawn up.

On the 3rd of November, 1847, the Rev. Mr. Gorham, being at that time Vicar of St Just-in-Penwith, Cornwall, in the diocese of Exeter, was presented by her Majesty to the vicarage of Brampford-Speke, Devon, in the same diocese. On applying to the Bishop of Exeter for admission and institution to Brampford-Speke, the Bishop, on Nov. 13th, informed Mr. Gorham, that, before instituting him, he felt it his duty to ascertain whether Mr. Gorham were "sound in doctrine." On the 17th of December, the Bishop's examination of Mr. Gorham commenced, and was continued at great length for five days. It was resumed in the following March, and continued for three days more. At the conclusion, the Bishop refused to institute Mr. Gorham, because "he was unfit to fill the vicarage, by reason of his holding doctrines contrary to the true Christian faith, and the articles and formularies of the Church of England." Mr. Gorham thereupon commenced proceedings in the Arches Court of Canterbury, calling on the Bishop to institute him, or to show cause why he refused. The Bishop showed cause, "and alleged that Mr. Gorham was of unsound doctrine respecting that great and fundamental point of baptism, inasmuch as Mr. Gorham held, and persisted in holding, that spiritual regeneration is not given or conferred in that holy sacrament -in particular, that infants are not made therein members of Christ, and the children of God—contrary to the plain teaching of the Church of England, in her Articles and liturgy." The Judge of the Arches Court (Sir H. J. Fust) found the Bishop justified in refusing to institute Mr. Gorham; and from his decision Mr. Gorham appealed to the Queen in Council. The judgment above referred to was the decision on that appeal, and the final settlement, so far as the law can settle it, of the point at issue.

The Committee of the Privy Council complained that the mode of pleading supplied no distinct allegations, and joined no issue distinctly, but left the court to examine a long series of questions and answers on a subject of a very abstruse nature. It ascertained as far as it could the "general intention" of Mr. Gorham, and stated the doctrine held by him to be "that baptism is a sacrament generally necessary to salvation, but that the grace of regeneration does not so necessarily accompany the act of baptism, that regeneration invariably takes place in baptism; that the grace may be granted before, in, or after baptism; that baptism is an effectual sign of grace, by which God works invisibly in us, but only in such as worthily receive it—in them alone it has a wholesome effect; and that, without reference to the qualification of the recipient, it is not in itself an effectual sign of grace. That infants baptized, and dying before actual sin, are certainly saved, but that in no case is regeneration in baptism." The Committee examined these opinions at considerable length, in order to ascertain whether they "are contrary or repugnant to the doctrines which the Church of England, by its Articles, formularies, and rubrics, requires to be held by its ministers." In its examination the Committee was careful to adhere to the old-established rules of construction, and paid no regard to any tendency or desire to give a preponderance to either Calvinistic or Arminian doctrines. On the principle, the Committee, after examining and quoting passages from the Articles, &c., came to the conclusion that the point at issue, with other points of doctrine respecting the sacrament of baptism, are, by the rubrics and formularies (as well as the Articles), "capable of being honestly understood in different senses;" and that upon these points "all ministers of the Church, having duly made the subscriptions required by law (and taking Holy Scripture for their guide), are at liberty honestly to exercise their private judgment without offence or censure." The Committee holds that the "doctrines of Mr. Gorham are not contrary or repugnant to the doctrines of the Church of England, as by law established, though they may be contrary to the opinions of many learned and pious persons, and it therefore decides that the Lord Bishop of Exeter has not shown sufficient cause why he did not institute Mr. Gorham into the vicarage of Brampford-Speke." Finally, the Committee advised her Majesty "to remit the cause to the Arches Court, to the end that right and justice may be done pursuant to its declaration."

The single point raised before the Committee, and decided by it, is, that Mr. Gorham's doctrine concerning baptism is not contrary to the doctrines of the Church of England, as contained in the Articles, formularies, and rubrics, and legally interpreted. The Committee expressly disavows any jurisdiction or authority to settle matters of faith, or determine, in any particular, what ought to be the doctrines of the Church of England. It upholds the law, but leaves the Church at full liberty to form and define its own faith. We offer no opinion either as to the truth of the doctrine at issue between the Bishop and Mr. Gorham, or as to the justice and policy of the decision, which have been both praised and censured; neither shall we give any opinion as to the propriety of mooting such a question—nor as to the probable consequences which will ensue, now that it has been mooted. We content ourselves with stating the facts of the case, and remarking, though the question of regeneration by baptism has been left by the Church to the decision of private judgment, according to the view of the Committee, it is of vital importance—which explains the intense interest taken in the case—to Christianity.

St. Just, from which Mr. Gorham removes, is at the very extremity of Cornwall, not far from the Land's-end. It contains 7820 acres, and a population of 4667. It is remarkable for possessing one of those amphitheatres, sometimes made of stone and sometimes of turf, used in Cornwall in the olden times for the performance of what were called Miracle plays. It is a comparatively populous place in consequence of the mines in the neighbourhood, though the country round it is very wild. The gross income of the vicarage is £460, and the net income £449.

Brampford-Speke, to which the rev. gentleman is removing, is about five miles north-west of Exeter, being in the hundred of Wonford, of which the city also forms a part. It is a small place, containing 78 houses. The whole surface of the parish is only 670 acres, and it is so insignificant that we have found it difficult to get any information concerning it. The vicarage, according to the report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into Ecclesiastical Revenues, dated June 16, 1835, has a population of 374. The gross income of the vicar is £229, subject to a permanent yearly payment of £23; which gives a net income of £216.

THE NELSON COLUMN, TRAFALGAR-SQUARE.

The second alto-relievo has just been placed upon the Nelson Column, and occupies the side of the pedestal facing the National Gallery. It has been designed and cast in bronze by Mr. Woodington, and represents a scene commemorative of the Battle of the Nile. The point of time chosen is when Nelson, having received a severe wound on the head, is carried into the cock-pit. The event is thus related by Southey:—

"Captain Berry caught Nelson in his arms as he was falling. The great effusion of blood occasioned an apprehension that the wound was mortal: Nelson himself thought so: a large flap of the skin of the forehead, cut from the bone, had fallen over one eye; and the other being blind, he was in total darkness. When he was carried down, the surgeon—in the midst of a scene scarcely to be conceived by those who have never seen a cockpit in time of action, and the heroism which is displayed amidst its horrors—with a natural and pardonable eagerness, quitted the poor fellow then under his hands, that he might instantly attend the Admiral. 'No!' said Nelson, 'I will take my turn with my brave fellows.' Nor would he suffer his own wound to be examined till every man who had been previously wounded was properly attended to."

Mr. Woodington's group is extremely spirited, the sailors being thorough tars, and the various expressions on their faces being skilfully defined; and the work will add greatly to the fame of Mr. Woodington, as it evinces powers of a very high order. The relief has been admirably cast by Messrs. Moore, Fressange, and Moore, and is an able specimen of their skill in casting in bronze.

In height it measures 14 feet 3 inches; in width, 13 feet 7 inches. It weighs 2 tons 15 cwt. 2 qrs.; the thickness of the metal being three-eighths of an inch.

An Engraving of Mr. Carew's alto-relievo, the first placed upon the Monument, will be found in our Journal for December 15, 1849. In the notice appended, Mr. Woodington was erroneously stated as deceased.

BRONZE ALTO-RELIEVO, BY WOODINGTON, FOR THE NELSON MONUMENT, TRAFALGAR-SQUARE.—THE BATTLE OF THE NILE.

H.M. FRIGATE "NANKIN," 50 GUNS.

This noble and beautiful specimen of naval architecture, which will be launched this day (Saturday), at Woolwich, is built from the designs of Mr. O. U. Lang, the assistant shipwright at the Royal Dockyard, Woolwich. This gentleman is also son of the eminent master shipwright; and is the architect of the Ruby, Garland, Banshee, and other vessels that have been distinguished for extraordinary speed.

Great preparations have been made at Woolwich to witness this launch, which will take place about three o'clock.

The principal dimensions of the Nankin are as follow:—

	Ft.	In.
Length between perpendiculars	183	0
Length on keel for tonnage	153	0
Breadth extreme	50	10
Breadth for tonnage	50	2
Breadth moulded	49	6
Depth of hold	15	10½

Burthen, 3049 tons 5 cwt. 94 lb.

A considerable space has been fitted up as booths on both sides and under the bows of the vessel, and on board the hull of the Old Mastiff, surveying vessel, to afford the friends of the Admiralty and the authorities of the dockyard a fine view of the launch. The figure-head is a representation, carved by Mr. Hellyer, of Vice-Admiral Sir William Parker, Bart., G.C.B., Commander-in-Chief of the fleet at present assembled on the coast of Greece. The vessel presents a very fine appearance, and her weather and main decks have been payed with Jeffery's marine glue. The Nankin is to be christened by Miss Parker, daughter of the gallant admiral whose bust is so appropriately placed at the bows of the vessel.

An admirable and most commanding view of the launch will be obtained from the thoroughfare through the parish churchyard of Woolwich.

H.M. 50-GUN FRIGATE "NANKIN," TO BE LAUNCHED THIS DAY, SATURDAY.

TOWN TALK, AND TABLE TALK FOR THE WEEK.

A FORWARD and sunny spring-time is fast ushering us into the glories and the gaieties of our great annual social campaign—the London season. The West-end is like a camp upon the eve of battle. All the branches of the social service are making ready for the fray. Shop fronts have received their last finishing touches of adornment, and adventurous painters still cling to giddy scaffoldings, brightening and burnishing window and balcony. The street characters of the season have already begun to show. The dog fancier loiters upon the kerb of Regent-street, and the footman complacently sums himself on the bench, by the shawl shop door. In the afternoon the broad pavé is crowded. The regular flaneur has come forth from his home to his haunts. The mysterious foreigner has left his secret abiding-place in the dreary garrets; and the purlieus of dubious cafés, where shilling table d'hôtes abound. The pastrycook's counters are lined with lunch consumers. The new glossy engravings behind the print-seller's plate glass attract their ever-changing circle of admirers. Brilliant equipages flash through the dingy lines of omnibuses and cabs, and the annual spring migration of that class of metaphorical water-fowl, known as "ducks of bonnets," has sent its swarm of brilliant-hued vanities, flattering across the Channel, from their nests in the Boulevards, to their destined perches in windows of Regent-street and Rond-street modistes.

In many particulars does the eye of the man skilled in town signs and tokens recognise the growing features of the season. He can see it in the Senate as in the street. A bird's-eye glance at the House of Commons—as the hands of the clock beneath the Speaker's gallery point towards midnight—will show a tolerable index to the number and brilliancy of the parties in Belgravia and Tyburnia. The "white waistcoats" form the test. As the debate waxes late, and perhaps a little wearisome, the "white waistcoats" begin to drop in almost like snow flakes. Sometimes they scatter themselves on back benches, whence, immediately, lusty "Hear, hear's," or most emphatic and sonorous "Oh, Oh's," proceed. Sometimes they cluster together, like corks in a basin of water, towards the entrance; and then, amid the hum of whispered chat, and half-smothered laughter, the Speaker's "Order—order at the bar" is but an unregarded sound. As Mr. Drummond said the other night, "What's the use of calling 'order' to gentlemen with white waistcoats and sparkling dyes."

The amateurs of the debates in the morning papers will, doubtless, have observed how very industrious the Lords are this session. The reporters' gallery is vocal with indignation at the early awakening of their slumbering peers. "Never before," say the scribes of the gallery, "were such unconstitutional doings heard of. Why, the Lords used to take until after Easter to make themselves up from the slumbers of the recess, and used to speak only a dozen or so of them, at five o'clock—throw a petition or two on the table—say 'How do?' fine day' and then it was all over until to-morrow. But now, alas! regular debates—bills brought in—and what not, every night. There will be many, no doubt, rejoiced to hear that a common remark about the House of Lords is that not for many sessions has 'the Duke' seemed so hale, so fresh, and so sprightly. He now invariably occupies the seat of the chairman of committees, at one end of the clerks' table, where he listens, as is his wont, with eager attention. His brother "war peer," Lord Gough, on his introduction, took his place on the neutral ground of the cross benches; while the City Lord, Baron Overstone, at once ranged himself amongst the followers of the ministry.

The literary season promises to be a fruitful one. The crop of what I may call cheap domestic periodicals is particularly luxuriant. Never was the world so flooded with recipes for the manufacture and the conduct of all possible household requirements and appurtenances. Never was there such a tide of writing addressed to the ingle-nook—to be read with chat upon the rug and feet upon the fender. Never were the wants of young housekeepers and budding matrons more sedulously cared for. The Muses have surely merged themselves in the Penates. So be it—the tendency, if not an exalted, is a wholesome one; and ladies will not be a whit the worse for reading, marking, learning, and inwardly digesting, the advice of the whole tribe of domestic philosophers who write for the benefit of parlour, kitchen, pantry, and laundry. Is it worth while recording, under this head of "Town Talk," a very commonly-made remark touching the last number of Mr. Dickens's serial—to wit, that the author has entirely altered his views of the rôle which little Miss Mowcher is to play in the fortunes of David Copperfield? The curious in the construction of novels ought to compare recent numbers, to find that the redoubtable Alexander Dumas is to pay us a visit, in order, amongst other matters, to favour our stage with a few original pieces from his pen—one of which, at least, is to contain a part for Miss Helen Faucit.

In a club, the other day—I must not say where—sat two gentlemen, one of whom has attained fame upon canvass, the other upon paper. He of the pencil was remarkably complimentary to him of the pen on what, indeed, was the latter at length, with a good-natured laugh, exclaimed, "Why, my good fellow, you really show the versatility of your genius in the most striking light: you prove that you can paint out of your own head, like Dutter!"

The readers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS are aware that Sir William Allan, the President of the Royal Scottish Academy, has just departed from amongst us, full of years and of honours. A friend visited the late President last winter. He was then engaged upon a great historical subject—the battle of Bannockburn, and was labouring to depict the final charge of the Bruce upon the tottering English columns, with a patriotic gusto which would have been very far from edifying to Mr. Elihu Burritt. "I have another subject in my head," the gallant painter would say, a sister picture, the rout of the English on Stirling Bridge, where Wallace overthrew Cressingham. I shall grapple with that if I live." Allan was emphatically a battle painter. The Duke of Wellington possesses the principal picture of Waterloo. "Good," said the Duke, when he saw it; "good—not too much smoke." The President began his career by painting coach panels. Allan and Alexander Fraser were fellow-apprentices in the workshop of Mr. Crichton, an Edinburgh coach-builder. When my friend stood lately by Sir William's easel, a little rough terrier sat close to the artist, continually looking up in his face. "My constant and faithful companion," said the painter; "abroad, and at home, at bed and board, he is with me." The fidelity of the poor dog is since been sadly manifested. After his master's death, he refused food, and the morning of the funeral the mute mourner expired. This is a literal fact.

I saw a letter the other day from San Francisco. "It was written, no doubt," says the reader, "with a diamond-ribbed pen—the ink dried by the golden dust of the Sacramento, and the seal stamped by a cachet of Californian gold." Not at all. It was just such a letter as Dick Wintringham might have written, in the first blush of his disappointment, when he found that London paving-stones were not yellow ingots. My South American correspondent had been a city clerk; and, although he does not actually, in as many words, say so, evident were the yearnings of his heart after the old £80 a year and the back-parlour in Islington. "It is the rainy season" is the substance of what he writes—"all San Francisco is a sea of mud. No one can go dry-shod through it without huge boots, which cost forty dollars a pair, and I have not as many cents. I am dripping from morning to night. I am ill with ague, and I fear dysentery. No one can set out for the diggings until the fine weather comes again. I have been able to get no employment, for all the miners are pouring down from the gold regions and the town is overflowing. I sleep with 150 others, in a big room, in a big hovel, built of rough timber. The only employment I see going on is gambling gambling night and day. I believe that this is the only place in the world where the croupiers of gaming-houses play fair. The reason is simply this, that if they were caught cheating, their ears would be cut off then and there. Cutting off ears is a favourite punishment in this part of the world. If a fellow steal once, he is flogged—if he repeat the offence, he has his ears slashed out of his head with a junker knife—if he tries it on a third time, he is hanged. As the diggings get worked, it improved upon this code. There the effect of hanging is generally tried as a primary punishment; and the effect of the system upon society, in the promotion of honest industry, is quite miraculous."

In my catalogue of the features of the opening season, how came I to have omitted those grand signs of the times—the Operas? both of which this week lift up their unsefal voices. As your readers know, the classic and the statuesque triumphs in the Haymarket; the romantic and the picturesque at Covent-Garden. Let me, apropos of "Der Freyschütz," at the latter house, tell a story, which the world shall have exactly as Hector Berlioz told it to my informant:—

"When the 'Freyschütz' was first performed in Paris, I was young and enthusiastic—oh! enthusiastic à mourir." Weber took my heart by storm. I had never heard such music: it drove me out of myself—he ravished—it enthralled me. There was then a young medical student in Paris, my bosom friend—his name was Eugène Sue. The world has since known it. What Weber was to me, Weber was to him; we both enraptured, we both idolized, the great Carl. Night after night were we in the front row of the gallery. To us it was indeed Paradis. We never missed a representation. But faster differ, mon ami. There was a fellow in the pit—there are regularly as we; but, when we applauded, he hissed—when we burst into raptures, he sneered! The animal hissed and sneered at Carl Von Weber! Was it supportable? No! Three times did Sue and I fall upon him à coups de canne, and three times was he rudely ejected from the shrine which he profaned. En bien! nous le tenons marche toujours. Our first fervour for the 'Freischütz' abated, but not our friendship. Soo night, years after, Sue came to me; he was then in the Mots Deux. 'Guess, my dear friend,' said he, 'what to-day in your name.' A man with a strange disease of the brain, producing distortion of the skull.' 'Eh bien! and what then?' 'Why the man's name.' 'Who?' 'The old unbeliever in the Der Freischutz.' Again years passed over, and I had forgotten all about the matter. Sue was a great novelist. I had charge of the Grand Opera. I determined to get up the 'Freischütz.' The incantation scene was to be specially splendid. It was not until the last moment that I found I wanted—a skull. I went to my old friend Sue. The author had not forgotten the doctor, and his small cabinet of medical curiosities was at my service. 'Take that skull,' he said, 'but for Heaven's sake let me have it back—it was a fine specimen of a rare disease.' So off I went with the relic of mortality. Carefully did I place it in its position, among vampires, and owls, and fiery serpents, and skeleton horses. It was not until the casting of the seven bullets had commenced that a thought flashed upon me. 'The skull! Gracious powers! it may be—it must be—it is—it is—the skull of the man who hissed the Der Freischütz!' I flew round to Sue's box. I told him my thought, and he corroborated it. Marvellous is the course of retributive justice! We leaned over the cushion, we gazed at the mute grinning lasan of bone, and we said as with one voice, 'T..is is Der Freischutz! The music of Carl Von Weber is thundering around you! and now, skull, his hiss—his hiss—if you can!"

MUSIC.

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

There appears to be a strong tendency just now in favour of chamber music. Madame Wartel, the pianiste, has been very successful with her chamber concerts. M. Alard, a violinist of the first order; M. Franchome, the clever violoncel ist; Madame Farrene, a composer of grand symphonies; and M. Godefroid, the harpist and composer, have given some interesting matinées and soirées. Among the concerts announced are those of Batta, the violoncellist; Schigmann, also a violoncellist; M. Camille Stamaty, a pianist of note; Mademoiselle Guende, a pianiste, &c. The second concert of the newly-established Philharmonic Society will take place next Tuesday. The committee have elected, as honorary members of the Institute, several distinguished English composers and well-known amateurs, such as Sterndale Bennett, Macfarren, Benedict, Balfe, J. W. Davison, Chorley, Hogarth, Barnett, Grunesien, Holmes, Ella, &c. The committee invite the sympathies of foreign musicians and amateurs for their undertaking, which includes upwards of 200 resident musicians in Paris. Selections from the first act of Gluck's "Alceste," Berlioz's "Harold" Symphony; a violin concerto by Herman, Weber's "Freyschütz" overture, a chorus by Palestrina, a chorus from Rossini's "Mose," will be included in Tuesday's programme. Mdme. Ugalde, Mdme. Julienne, and M. Arnould will be principal vocalists.

Madame Viardot, in all probability, will not appear this season as Valentina in the "Huguenots." The attraction of the "Prophète" increases as the moment of her departure for Berlin approaches; it is given for the fifty-third time to-night, and every place is taken. Madame Julienne, the new Berthe, has a very fine voice, but she screams for effect terribly. Weber's "Der Freyschütz," with Berlioz's recitatives, will be revived in a few days. It is very much doubted whether Alexis Dupont's first opera, "L'Enfant Prodigue," for Madame Fodor, niece of the celebrated Fodor, MM Roger and Barrolhet, can be brought out before the end of the year. Scribe leaves Paris for London, to superintend the production of Halévy's "Tempesta," on the 15th of May. The composer will depart a month before to superintend the rehearsal at Her Majesty's Theatre. His work will be completed prior to the 1st of May; and at the end of that month will be ready for representation. Scribe has consented to the introduction of Shak-speare's play with great skill; an incantation scene, in which the voice of Sycorax (Caliban's mother) is heard, has been ingeniously introduced to place Miranda and Ferdinand in a position. Halévy is writing the music of the dainty Ariel for Miss Catherine Hayes; the happy blending of the Italian and German with the French style of declamation in this opera will, if I am not mistaken, detach Halévy's genius in a novel point of view. He is delighted with his libretto.

Ambroise Thomas's new opera, "Le Caid," has been written a new opera, "Songe d'une Nuit d'Eté," for Mdme. Ugalde. She will enact Queen Elizabeth; and that admirable actor Coudere is to be Shakspeare: there is a love story between the poet and the monarch. Coudere will be able to "make up" for the Bard of Avon capitally. Mdme. Ugalde's marvellous vocalisation will enable all Paris to the Opéra Comique whenever her name is in the affiche. Some of our London singers have been tempting her; but her congé is only for July and August. If she should appear in the original rôle of Zerlina in London, she will excite as great a sensation as Lind; but I doubt whether it would be politic for her to abandon the Opéra Comique: Roger has been ruined by going to the Grand Opera.

Vienna letters announce the complete triumph of Meyerbeer's "Prophète," produced on the 27th ult., and conducted by the composer himself. Madame Lagrange was the celebrated actress-singer for her voice, as she has not Viardot's comraito notes), and Ander, Jean of Leyden. Meyerbeer was crowned on the stage, by an actress representing Glory. The Emperor and all the Royal Family were present. Places are retained for ten representations at increased prices. A medal has been struck by the Society Concordia in honour of the event, with the bust of the composer. The opera was produced at the Karnthnerthor Theatre. On the 30th ult. the "Prophète" was produced at the Frankfort theatre, with Mdlle. Behrends Brand as Fidès, with equal success. I regret to state that at Vienna, Meyerbeer received the news of the dangerous illness of his only surviving brother, the celebrated astronomer; and the composer reached Berlin only in time to be present at his last moments.

The Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, brother of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, is composing a new opera, "Casseldia:" this will be the third lyric production of the Royal amateur. The Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, on his birthday (Feb. 18th), produced the "Prophète" of Meyerbeer at the Court Theatre.—A Conservatoire of Music is to be formed at Weimar, under the direction of Liszt, Ernst, Lenzard, &c.

The fifth Sontag concert was given last night at the Conservatoire. The accomplished vocalist sang "Casta Diva," from "Norma;" Adam's variations from the "Toreador," the Duke of Landa," from "Le Prophète," &c. The berg performed for the first time at this series. The sixth and last concert will take place next Saturday. The débuts of Mdlle. Ida Bertram, the contralto, at the third concert, was quite successful.

The season of the Italian Opera, having commenced a month later than usual, will not be terminated before the end of April. Mdme. Persiani has made a hit in Norma, in Don Giovanni, and Pasquale," in which Labiache was as potent as ever. On Saturday, Mdme. Ronconi will appear, for the first time this season, in Maria di Rohan

It is curious that the two greatest contralti in the world—Alboni and Angri—should not be included in the engagements of the London (Paris) Operahouses this year. The former is at Marseilles, singing the "Favorita," &c.; the latter is here making a great sensation in "La Cenerentola."

MUSICAL EVENTS.—On Monday, the second concert of the Amateur Musical Society, at the Hanover Rooms, and Mr. Willy's second Classical Concert, at St. Martin's Hall, took place.—On Wednesday, at Exeter Hall, the fourth of the second series of London Wednesday Concerts was given.—On the same evening, Signor Piatti gave his second Chamber Concert, at Hanover Rooms; and Handel's "Judas Maccabæus" was performed by the upper singing classes, under the direction of Mr. Hullah, at St. Martin's Hall.—On Friday, the Royal Society of Musicians celebrated their 124th anniversary festival, a report of which will appear in our next publication.—On Saturday, the Royal Italian Opera, with Weber's "Der Freyschütz," will be noticed in our forthcoming Number.—NEXT MONDAY will be the Second Philharmonic Concert.—On Tuesday will be the first meeting of the "Musical Union," and Mr. W. S Bennett's third Pianoforte soirée.—On Wednesday, Herr Molique and Hall, the Sacred Harmonic Society will perform Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Mendelsohn's "Lauda Sion."

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

INDEPENDENT AUDIT OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS.—The committee of representatives of various railway companies have finally agreed to the draft of a bill, which contains very important provisions for the future benefit of railways in many very important particulars the general powers of the shareholders at the election and dismissal of directors, the general constitution of the boards, &c. An executive committee, consisting of the following gentlemen, was appointed to carry the bill through Parliament, namely:—For London and North Western, Mr. Ewart and Mr. James; South-Western, Mr. Baker; Eastern Counties, Mr. Martin; Great Western, Mr. Norris; Brunswick, Mr. Hardwick, M. Douglas; Midland, Mr. Pope; Lancashire and Yorkshire, Mr. Mellor. A meeting of the railway committee waited on Lord Stanley on Monday, when his Lordship, at their request, agreed to take charge of the bill.

RAILWAY BALANCE-SHEETS AND DIVIDENDS.—The House of Lords has ordered that, ten days before the second reading of any railway bill, copies of the balance-sheets of each company for 1848 and 1849, together with copies of the scheme or distribution by which the dividends have been declared, with the date and amount of such dividends, shall be delivered into the office of the clerk of the Parliament.

IRISH RAILWAYS.—Sir John M'Neill's scheme of the construction of cheap railways in Ireland has been approved by the fourth grand jury. The main feature of this project is the constitution of county cess-payers into undertakers and proprietors of railways, to serve their respective localities, by permitting counties to put down for subscription four per cent of their rateable value, and to guarantee the repayment of the necessary advances. The grand jury of Cavan have come to a resolution to act upon this plan, by charging the land with the sums required

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH BETWEEN FRANCE AND ENGLAND.—The proposed submarine telegraph between Dover and Calais, conceded to Messrs. Brett and Co., by the French Government, is approaching completion. The tower for the battery, offices, and general works at Dover are nearly complete, and the insulated wires are in a forward state of progress, and are expected to be sunk across the Channel in the course of the next month.

YORK, NEWCASTLE, AND BERWICK RAILWAY.—The Admiralty have given their consent to this company's bill for alteration in levels of Bishop Auckland branch, being satisfied that the proposed crossing of the river Wear is unobjectionable

SOUTH-EASTERN: March 14: Half-yearly Meeting: London: J. M'Gregor, Esq., in the chair.—After a considerable discussion a dividend of three per cent. per annum was declared: the sum of £65,000 being carried over to next account, and the appropriation of way certain sum of £80 to £30 stock—a bill for increasing the capital by £1,200,000 approved—and the modified lease of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate line confirmed.

ROYAL MUNIFICENCE.—Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. Prince Albert have forwarded their munificent donation of 100 guineas in aid of the funds of the City Hospital for Diseases of the Chest. The second anniversary festival of the institution was held at the London Tavern yesterday week; the Lord Mayor in the chair; and during the evening the subscriptions amounted to the large sum of £4900.

BROMPTON HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION.—At the recent meeting of the board of management, the Hon. Octavius Duncombe, M.P., in the chair, it was stated that the building committee had come to a determination to proceed with the eastern wing forthwith, and that the plans and specifications were already under consideration.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

On Monday evening her Majesty the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert forwarded the munificent donation of one hundred guineas in aid of the funds for the erection of the intended new hospital for diseases of the chest, in Victoria Park.

Her Majesty has graciously presented to Mr. Batty, the enterprising proprietor of Astley's Theatre, a valuable pair of pure Arabian horses, that have recently been imported into this country, and which we are given to understand are in active training, and will, we have no doubt, form an additional attraction to his already much admired stud

On Saturday evening a meeting of the delegates from the manufacturing districts, who are to represent them in Parliament, held a meeting at the committee-rooms, Northumberland-court. Mr. Thomas Ilet, of Ashton-under-Lyne, presided. There were delegates present from Manchester, Leeds, Bradford, Bolton, Dukinfield, Blackburn, Oldham, and other places.

The Inverness Courier says: "The Culloden Monument has now progressed to some height; but the fund receives accessions so slowly, that the possibility is anticipated of seeing the monument stuck in a half-finished state, and so left, soon to become a shapeless heap of rubbish, not much to the credit of that enthusiasm out of which the proposal arose"

The Mayor of Bristol, Mr. Haberfield, has given 100 guineas towards the proposed great Exhibition of 1851

A clandestine manufactory of gunpowder was discovered last week at Rongères, near Moulins, France.

Accounts from Lyons mention that at no period were the commerce and manufactures of that city more flourishing than at the present moment, unaffected as they are by rumours of war or by political agitation.

The despatch of emigrants, the operation of which has been somewhat suspended during the winter months, is about recommencing with redoubled vigour to the British possessions in Australia. The Government Emigration Commissioners have just appointed several vessels to sail forthwith.

A vessel arrived from Coquimbo and Valparaiso has brought from the former place the very large quantity of 66,928 ingots of copper, consigned to a firm of commercial eminence in the metropolis.

On Tuesday evening last, the last down train, when between St. Ives and Somersham, ran over five out of nine fat bullocks, the property of Robert Peacock, Esq., three of which were killed on the spot, and the other two so seriously injured that they have since died; nine others, it appears they had strayed from their pasture, and unfortunately found their way on to the line of railway.

The Netherlands bride of the Crown Prince of Sweden, who is to bring a dowry of 30,000,000 florins, is expected at Stockholm in June, and is at present employed in studying the Swedish language, under professor Odde.

Mr. Lobnuette, one of the Gentlemen of the Bedchamber to Charles X., is mentioned as the person appointed to attend on the solitary confinement for 10 years, for having defrauded the Duchess Dowager of Rochefoucauld Doudeauville of a sum exceeding 600,000f. during his administration of her affairs.

At Dover, last week, a meeting was held at the Old Town-Hall, for the purpose of taking measures to establish a Chamber of Commerce in that town. A temporary committee to carry out this object had been previously appointed, and the Mayor (who presided) now proposed that they should be approved of by the meeting. The proposition was agreed to.

The brother of the reigning Duke of Mecklenburgh-Schwerin, who is now in the Prussian body-guard, is, according to report, about to enter the Russian service, and to be united in marriage with the only daughter of the Grand Duke Michael of Russia, the Grand Duchess Catherine.

Owing to the swollen state of the Tay since the salmon fishing season commenced, there has been little done in rod fishing. On Saturday last, however, a Perth gentleman had the luck to hook one in the river, a little below the Linn of Campsie, a fine salmon of 17½ lb. weight, which had made a quick run up, as the sea has here still upon it. This is the most successful angling this season.

The report of the committee of the committee for managing the affairs of Lloyd's, G. R. Robinson, Esq., M.P., has, owing to continued ill-health, resigned his seat at the board. Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P., has been nominated to fill the vacancy. Mr. Robinson has for a long series of years presided over the committee of Lloyd's, and his absence for some time past has been a source of deep regret to the members.

A trial of ploughing by steam was made at Grimsthorpe, on Thursday, the 7th, by Lord Willoughby d'Eresby. The machinery employed consisted of a small locomotive engine, with a special steering apparatus, moving on a private railway. An improved plough, following each subsoil plough, was drawn by a team from the engine. Many gentlemen and farmers who were present expressed themselves highly satisfied with the performance of the machinery.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE AMENDMENT OF THE LAW.—A general meeting of this society was held on Monday, at their offices in Regent-street; Lord Brougham in the chair. A report of the special examination on the plan for the establishment of a law school was read by Mr. Bethell, Q.C. It stated that the inquiries of the committee had been directed not only to the sub ject of legal education, but also to the affording those persons who did not intend to follow the law as a profession such an acquaintance with it as would tend to fit them for the discharge of any political or legal obligations which they might be called on to perform. It was proposed to establish on the present system, by which students of law were nominally instructed in the chambers of equity draftsmen and special pleaders, the practice of class and tutorial instruction, by members of the profession, such a course as would be calculated to bring the teacher and pupil into frequent and familiar intercourse, so that their progress might be watched and tested from time to time by examinations. This plan had been adopted in America by Mr. Justice Story and Professor Greenleaf with much success, and was found to work admirably as a preparatory training for the law student previous to his entering the chambers of a practising lawyer. The report also recommended the establishment of a series of popular lectures on English law, explanatory of the fundamental principles, for the benefit of trustees, executors, and trustees, and in relation to the registration of deeds, &c. A discussion then took place, and the plan met with the unanimous approval of the members present. It was agreed that, in order to prevent anything like professional edium attaching to any barrister who should be willing to establish classes with moderate fees, for the tutorial and preparatory instruction of law students, means must be taken to obtain the public sanction of the judges of court to such a proceeding; and it was proposed that this society should also add its sanction to the measure. The proposition of any formal resolutions was postponed until the next meeting, with this object. The meeting then separated.

METROPOLITAN PAROCHIAL WATER SUPPLY ASSOCIATION.—A meeting of the members of this association was held on Monday, at the London Tavern; Mr. Williams (late M.P. for Coventry) in the chair. The secretary read the report of the executive committee of the association, which stated, among a variety of details, that this society originated in a meeting of the vestry of St. George's, Southwark, and of other parishes, held in November, 1849. Great activity had been used by the association to obtain the co-operation of parishes, and 65 parishes had convened meetings on the subject, and had determined on a course of action, and 51 had given notices of their intention to report on the matter. The Commissioners of the Board of Health having intimated an opinion that the supply of water should be under the superintendence of the Commissioners of Sewers and Sanitary Improvement, it was satisfactory to find that Lord John Russell had publicly dissented from any such principle of combination. The committee then went on to say that Lord John Russell had agreed to receive a deputation from the society, at which the attendance of parish officers was greatly desired. The chairman then addressed the meeting, expressing his opinion that the supply of water should be under district or parochial control. Mr. Challice followed on the same side. He said it was a great anomaly that a population should be heavily taxed as they were for water so impure that they could not live in it.—Mr. W. J. Hall, in moving the adoption of the report, said that the manufactures of London were greatly injured by the want of a sufficient supply of water, and this operated to prevent the employment of numbers of persons, especially in Spitalfields.—Mr. Mathis seconded the motion. —Mr. Young (of Chelsea) said Mr. Hope supported the motion.—Several other gentlemen addressed the meeting, and the deputation to wait on Lord John Russell was duly appointed. A petition to Parliament on the subject was also agreed to.—On Thursday the deputation, consisting of members of Parliament, chairmen of Boards of Guardians, overseers, &c., waited on Lord J. Russell, to represent and promote the objects of the association. There were present Lord Robert Grosvenor; Mr. B. Osborne, M.P.; Mr. J. Masterman, M.P.; Mr. C. Lushington, M.P.; Sir James Duke, M.P.; General Sir de Lacy Evans, M.P.; Sir W. Molesworth, M.P.; Mr. James Wyld, M.P.; Mr. Williams, late M.P. for Coventry, and others. Lord Robert Grosvenor, who introduced the deputation, explained as a reason for its unusualness the fact of the gentlemen present representing fifteen hundred thousand inhabitants. After hearing statements from different members of the deputation, his Lordship said an impression appeared to prevail that Government intended to take up the question of the Board of Health, it was known, had the subject under consideration. Government were alive to the importance of the subject, but had not come to any decision. All that had been said should receive consideration.

WATERLOO MODEL FUND.—A general meeting of the subscribers to the model of the Battle of Waterloo, prepared by Captain Siborne, was held on Monday, at the United Services Institution, Whitehall-yard; Lieutenant-General Parker, Trailler Guards, occupied the chair. Captain Siborne explained briefly the object of the meeting. It arose from the wish that Captain Siborn's noble record of the crowning victory achieved by the British army under the illustrious Wellington should be perpetuated by means of a model of the battle-field. This model was constructed on a scale of nine feet to the mile, and comprised an area of 440 square feet, affording a complete representation of that famous field, and also of the disposition and movements of the British, Belgian, and Prussian armies, at the most critical moment of the battle, by means of no less than 140,000 metallic figures. Every village, every house and garden, every line of trees and undulation of surface, was given with the utmost accuracy, in a manner which had not even been attempted in the most elaborated judges of military science, and which would convey to future ages a materia. history such as no writer could record. The gift which subscribers were making generally was one not merely of professional, but of patriotic interest. In all classes, therefore, were asked to combine in handing down to future generations this speaking monument of British glory. The sum required to remunerate Captain Siborne, which was confidently fixed on by the artist before he undertook the work, was £4000. Now, however, Captain Siborne was dead, and the model had passed into other hands. Its present possessor was prepared to complete it in the most satisfactory manner, and he felt certain he could do it for £30 26s. 7d. to be subscribed. Such an amount ought to be at once obtained. The adoption of the report of the executive committee was moved by Major Cumberland, R.A., and seconded by Captain Stuart, Grenadier Guards. A second resolution, moved by Sir Charles Malcolm, and seconded by the Honourable Colonel Lindsay, Grenadier Guards, pledged the meeting to the accomplishment of the object wherever their influence extended. Both resolut ns were cordially and unanimously adopted. It appeared that, from a number of public institutions, originally named, the majority of subscribers had so decidedly favoured the United Service Institution, that the executive committee had, in conjunction with their opinion, determined upon it as the place of deposit for the memorial.

CITY COURT OF SEWERS.—On Tuesday a court was held; Mr. Deputy Peacock in the chair. The Remembrancer brought before the court a petition to Parliament for the insertion of the clauses in the Great Central Gas-Consumers' Bill, on behalf of the Commissioners of Sewers, praying the commissioners may be heard by themselves, their counsel, agents, and witnesses, before the committee of the House of Commons to which the said bill was referred to.—W. A. Peacock, T. Q. Finnis, T. Watkins, T. J. Hoe, Thomas Hall, H. Lowman Taylor, J. T. Bedford, Henry Blake, Edward Harrison, R. B. Write-head, William Ashbrook, and Henry Mr. Elliott gave notice that he should, on the next day of meeting, move that Mr. Haywood, the surveyor to the court, be directed to proceed to Dublin, to ascertain and report the extent of sewages that were laid down in that city during the night, and the effect thereon upon the pavements of the streets; and that the Great Central Gas-Consumers' Company be prohibited from disturbing the pavements of the City of London before such report shall have been made and considered by the Court.—Adjourned.

METROPOLITAN COMMISSION OF SEWERS.—A special district court of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers was held on Tuesday, at the Town Hall, High-street, Poplar. The commissioners present were Lord Ebrington, M.P. in the chair; Sir John Easthope, Bart.; Captain Vernon, R.N.; Captain Jackson, R.E., Mr. Robert Stephenson, M.P., Mr. Hardwick, and Mr. Hawes. The court stood adjourned from the 10th of February last, when sufficient members of the commission were not in attendance to form a quorum. The object of this meeting was a question of very considerable importance to the inhabitants of this very extensive parish, as the present Commissioners of Sewers have made a rate for sewers upon them, although from time immemorial they have been exempt from such charges, contending that the powers given by the Act of Queen Elizabeth Abbott, in 1826; and especially as the entire parish is at the present time without any sewers, except an ancient ditch, which by prescriptive right the inhabitants are called upon, at their own expense, to keep clear from all kinds of obstruction. Mr. Needham, the barrister, and Mr. Cullen, of Poplar, appeared on behalf of Mr. Carter, upon whom a notice of distress had been served for the non-payment of the rate. The decision, in this case was looked forward to as a settlement of the question as regarded the rest. Mr. Needham having addressed the Court, and argued that Mr. Carter and others occupying premises in the district were bound to cleanse Poplar-ditch, and that deriving no benefit from the works of the Commissioners of Sewers, and having been therefore prescriptively exempt from rating to the sewers, and having cited the decision of a jury given in conformity with the charge of the late Lord Tenterden against a similar claim, Lord Ebrington, after conferring with his colleagues, said this matter was of so much importance, and involved so large an amount of property, that the Court would take time to consider before giving their judgment. Other appeals against the levying of the rate were then presented, some of them on the ground of non-occupation, and this question was also deferred until a future day. Several parties claimed exemption on the ground of poverty, most of which were remanded, or payment postponed for three or four months.

THE VICTORIA DOCK COMPANY.—On Tuesday forenoon, Mr. J. M. Rendall, one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, under the Act, to make preliminary inquiries into the plans of the local acts, attended at the Blackwall hotel, Backwall, for the purpose of investigating and examining the plans of the Victoria Dock Company, the promoters of which propose to construct docks, for the admission of colliers, in the marshes in the parish of West Ham, Essex, above North Woolwich, upon a site which will comprise about 370 acres. Mr. Peto, M.P., Mr. Kinnaird (the director), Mr. Bidder (the engineer of the company), with Mr. Parsons (the solicitor), were present to support the undertaking. Some objections having been made on the part of the Board of Ordnance and the Commissioners of the Essex Levels, Mr. Parsons observed that clauses would be inserted in the bill to protect the interests of the Government and the commissioners. The plans of the company would improve, and not obstruct, the navigation of the river, as a large number of vessels which impeded the traffic and tidal course of the river would be removed. Mr. Rendell (or Mr. Parsons concluding) adjourned the court, and took a survey of the site for the intended docks.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.—On Wednesday the annual meeting of this corporation was held at the chambers of the Institution, 73, Great Russell-street, 3 com-bury, Sir R H Inglis, Bart., M.P., presiding. The report of the auditors stated that the sum of £1435 had been subscribed during the past year among forty-one applicants, making a total of £37,850 applied to the relief of distressed authors, their widows and orphans, since the institution of the society. The treasurer's report stated the fund permanent fund at present amounted to £20,500. The fund bequeathed by Thomas Newton, Esq., amounted to £8167, and the Newton estate at Whitechapel produced an annual rental of £203. The reports, as read, having been adopted, the meeting proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year. The Marquis of Lansdowne was re-elected president of the council; the vice-presidents were also re-appointed, and the council, with the addition of Lord Ingestre, Sir George Thomas Staunton, Bart.; Sir F. B. Watson, and Charles Baldwin, Esq., were re-elected.

PRINTERS' PENSION SOCIETY.—The anniversary festival of this laudable institution is fixed for Wednesday, May 8th, on which occasion F. Y Peel, Esq., M.P., the son of Sir Robert Peel, Bart., has consented to preside.

SCHOOL FOR THE INDIGENT BLIND.—The annual meeting of this institution was held on Thursday, at the London Coffee-House, Ludgate-hill; Lord Radstock in the chair. The most important fact stated was the amount which had been realised during the year by the sale of articles made and sold by the pupils of the charity, which amounted to £1253, which was a source of great gratification to the members of the committee, and showed the great benefit derived from this institution. The receipts during the year were £3087 9s. 2d., and the expendi ure £7650, leaving a balance of £1437 9s. 2d. A vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the meeting.

BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.—The annual meeting of this charity took place on Thursday last, at the Albion Hotel, Aldersgate-street; Mr. Nisbet in the chair. The report stated that a considerable addition had been made to the permanent fund, and that some large legacies had been bequeathed to the institution. During the year the sum of £700 had been distributed to parties connected with the trade. The funds of the institution were in a prosperous state, and the total receipts for the year had amounted to £1023. The report was adopted, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the meeting.

CHEESEMONGERS' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—At the annual meeting of this society, held on Tuesday afternoon, at the London Tavern, for the purpose of electing candidates to the vacancies occurring amongst the pensioners, and for the reception of the annual report, John Cooper and Gilbert Witt were the successful candidates. The report stated that the number of pensioners admitted to the benefits of this charity since its foundation amounted to 61, of this number 32 had been removed by death, and 29 were now on the funds. The present amount of pensions distributed was about £50 a month, or £600 a year. The receipts during the past year had amounted to £1000, 14s. 7d., including a balance of £286 5s. 7d. from the previous year; and the expenditure, £962 19s. 11d.; leaving a balance of £62 14s. 8d. A by law was read to the pensioners, which stated that the committee had power to dismiss pensioners who had procured their admission to this society under false pretences, or in any case where it was ascertained that they were leading an immoral course of life.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—The committee has not yet finally decided upon the day when the exhibition of ancient and mediæval art shall be opened. Objects of the highest interest are daily sent in, and, only a day or two ago, the Queen sent the instance of Prince Albert (the President of the committee), sent in four most beautiful cups of carved ivory and gold, of Italian workmanship. The Duchess has also allowed the society to exhibit the shield which Francis I. gave to Henry VIII on the Field of the Cloth of Gold, and the beautiful partisan, belonging to the same monarch, of gold, silver, and steel. Complete suits of different periods have been brought from the Tower and placed in the principal room, which is hung with old tapestry. On Tuesday the Duke of Devonshire sent his famous crozier, and that exquisite relic, carved by Holbein, the rosary of Henry VIII. The Society of Antiquaries have lent the oldest clock in the known world, dated very early in the sixteenth century, which is so perfect that it goes accurately even now.

THE CHIEF JUSTICESHIP.—The office of Associate to the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench has, it is well known, almost invariably been held by a son of that great judicial functionary for the time being, and that is regarded in a manner, either by the profession or the public, as hereditary. But in the time of Chief Justice Ellenborough the office was held by the present Recorder of London; during Chief Justice Tenterden's incumbency the present Lord Denman was Associate; and lately the Hon. Thomas Denman acted in that capacity. Immediately on the appointment of Lord Campbell as Chief Justice he wrote to Mr. Denman, requesting that Mr. Denman would continue to be his Associate. This handsome offer of the new Chief Justice was, however, delicately declined by Mr. Denman, who reminded Lord Campbell that he was sons of his own quits as competent to fill the office.

GRAND BALL AND SUPPER AT THE MANSION HOUSE.—On Wednesday evening the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress gave a splendid ball and supper to the younger branches of the families of the members of the Court of Common Council. It was the third ball of the present mayoralty, and all the arrangements were admirably adapted to the occasion. The company, which began to assemble at nine o'clock, consisted of between 600 and 700 young persons. Mr. Gilbert officiated as master of the ceremonies; and Barnard's band struck up soon after nine with great animation, commencing with country dances, and introducing, after the quadrille, the more graceful waltz and the poetry of motion." At twelve o'clock, supper, which was sumptuously provided by Messrs. King and Bryner, was announced; and the company seconded to the old Egyptian hall, which was tastefully fitted up for the occasion. Before the successive parties of 200 each, so that all chance of confusion in that important part of the business of the night was completely averted. It was quite impossible to conceive a more enjoyable scene, and the host was exceedingly happy to see the young guests during the night at the elegant welcome with which their presence was hailed. As might be expected, the dawn appeared before they separated.

BURNING OF THE TOTTENHAM-COURT-ROAD STEAM SAW-MILLS.—Between five and six on Tuesday morning a fire occurred in the steam saw-mills of Mr. Gabriel, in Milford place, London-street. The police discovered the flames breaking through the roof of the mills, which, though but one story in height, extended a considerable depth and length. A range of wooden sheds, belonging to Mr. Howe, in Princes-street, Tottenham-court-road, flanked one side of the building. The brigade and West of England engines were soon on the spot, but the destructive element could not be mastered until the whole of the saw-mills were burnt down. There were also many of the adjoining premises more or less injured. No information could be elicited as to the cause of the fire, or whether the property was insured. The total loss was said to exceed £2000

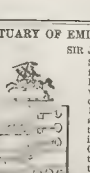
EFFECT OF POVERTY ON THE MORTALITY OF CHOLERA.—A table is given with the present weekly return of the Registrar-General, in which the districts of London are arranged in the order of the mean value of their rents, and stop-room. It is the house-rent assessed under the income-tax, and gives, probably, as near an approximation to the relative incomes of the inhabitants as can be at present obtained. In nineteen districts the rent is £4·8s per head, or higher; in nineteen districts it is less: the average in the former districts was £8·14d, in the latter districts £3·8s1. In the nineteen poorer districts the mortality from cholera was 98 in 10,000, or double the mortality (49) in the richer districts. The general mortality from all causes was 226 in the rich, 254 in the poor districts. The mortality from cholera was 150 in 10,000 in six districts supplied from the low water of the Thames below Battersea, whose house-rent being £5 .6s. per head; the mortality from cholera of ten districts, where the house-rent was less (£3 13s.), and the people probably poorer, was only 56 in 10,000, or a third of the former rate. The ten districts we.e supplied with water from the New River, Lea, and Ravensbourne, and the population was exposed to all the ground on which their dwellings stand is higher. It is certain, then, that a degree of poverty, which in summer implied as much crowding and dirt as privation of food, was only one of the causes of the mortality during cholera. The water, the elevation, and the drainage maintain their importance in every combination of the facts that can be made.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—The Births registered in the week ending Saturday, March 9, were—Males, 733 . females, 743 : total, 1476. The deaths during the same period were:—Ma.es, 433 ; fema.es, 442: total, 875. The weekly mortality, it will be thus seen, continues to decline ; 876 being a small decrease on the previous week. The usual yearly increase is exhibited in the following series of numbers, being the deaths returned in each week since January, namely, 1084, 957, 938, 911, 896, and 876. To compare the mortality of last year with that of the same week in 1848-49, the deaths in 1849 (1849-49) appear that only 1842 and 1846 were the deaths less than 900 ; with three exceptions they were always above 1000, and in 1845 rose to 1141. The average of ten corresponding weeks, corrected for increase of population, is 1095, contrasted with which the deaths in last week show a decrease of 220. Amongst epidemics, small-pox, scarlatina, hooping-cough, influenza, and typhus show considerably less than the usual fatality ; measles and erysipelas have now fallen to the average, the latter numbering only 9 ; and in the whole epidemic class are enumerated 133 deaths, whereas the corrected average is 196. Sixty-five persons died of bronchitis, 74 of pneumonia, 17 of pleurisy, the deaths being rather above the average, the last two below it. In the class of diseases of the respiratory organs (exclusive of phthisis and hooping-cough), 171 deaths are included, whilst the corrected average is 207. From phthisis, or consumption, 107 persons died in the weeks the average is 98. An infant, in Pheasant-court, Grey's Inn-lane, is certified to have died of the impure air of an apartment. At Bhunneesarah, in Dowetts-yard, King-street, the widow of a labourer sank under the infirmity of age, having lived 101 years. Mr. Hoe, the registrar, states that she had been twice married, and afterwards lived as a widow about thirty years. A certificate shows that she was baptised ninety-nine years ago, at which time she was upwards of two years of age. She had been on the receipt of parish relief for many years, and her general health, till recently, was tolerably good. In the last week 101 persons were registered who had died in the workhouses, 57 who had died in hospitals, 8 in prison and Millbank Penitentiary. Of the 67 in hospitals 12 occurred in naval and military establishments, and 11 in lunatic asylums.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean daily reading of the barometer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was above 30 in. on every day except Sunday ; the mean of the week was 30.179 in. The mean temperature of the week was 42·4 deg., exceeding the mean of the same week, on an average of seven years, by 2·7 deg. On Sunday, Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday, the mean was from 4 deg. to 8 deg. above the average of those days.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR JAMES GIBSON CRAIG, BART.



SIR JAMES GIBSON CRAIG, of Riccarton and Ingleston, in Midlothian, a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for that shire, and Clerk of the Signet in Scotland, was the second son of William Gibson, an eminent merchant in Edinburgh. He was born on the 11th October, 1765, and being educated for the legal profession, passed as writer to the Signet in the year 1786, and rose to great distinction in that capacity. He was the leading partner in the law firm of Craig, Dalziel, and Brodie. As Mr. Gibson, he was also well known for having been a great political supporter of the Whigs; and he was on intimate terms with Fox and the other leaders of that party. He unfortunately, in their favour, took part in all public affairs; and throughout his life was staunch to the principles he adopted. In 1818 Mr. Gibson assumed the additional surname and arms of Craig, pursuant to the provisions of the entail made by Robert Craig, of Riccarton. During his political career, Mr Gibson Craig figured in the famous but fatal ballad against the Whigs, published in 1822 by Sir Alexander Boswell, who, in consequence, was shot in a duel by Mr. Stuart, of Dunearn. In 1834, during the Administration of Earl Grey, Mr. Gibson Craig was created a Baronet.

This distinguished gentleman and politician—to the great grief of a wide circle of relatives, friends, and admirers—died on the 6th instant, somewhat suddenly, at his seat of Riccarton, four miles from Edinburgh. By his wife, Ann, daughter of J. Thompson, Esq., of Edinburgh (whom he married the 14th Sept., 1795), he leaves two sons and seven daughters. His elder son and successor, the present Sir William Gibson Craig, an advocate at the Scottish bar, is M.P. for Edinburgh, and a Lord of the Treasury. One of the daughters of the late Baronet is wife of Mr. Biggs Andrews, Q.C.

SIR HERCULES PAKENHAM, K.C.B.

MAJOR-GENERAL THE HON. SIR HERCULES ROWLEY PAKENHAM, K.C.B., was the third son of Edward Michael, second Lord Longford, by his wife Catharine, second daughter of the Right Hon. Hercules Longford Rowley. He was born the 29th September, 1781; and having entered the British army early in life, he earned a high character as an officer in the 29th or Worcestershire regiment, and served throughout all its campaigns: he was at Roleia, Vimiera, Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, and Ciudad Rodrigo, and was twice severely wounded. He became a Major General the 10th January, 1837, and was made a K.C.B in 1838. In 1844 he obtained the Colonelcy of the 43d regiment of foot. Subsequently to his accession from active service, he was appointed Governor of Portsmouth Latterly he lived in retirement with his family, at his seat on the banks of Lough Neagh. Sir Hercules married, in 1817, Emily, fourth daughter of Thomas Lord Le Despencer, by whom he leaves issue six sons and three daughters: his eldest son is a Captain in the Grenadier Guards, and his eldest daughter is the wife of Sir Edmund Hayes, Bart. Sir Hercules Pakenham died suddenly on the 7th inst., at his seat, Longford Lodge, Antrim. The gallant General was uncle of the present Earl of Longford, the son of his eldest brother. His next brother was the distinguished Major-General Sir Edward Pakenham, who fell at New Orleans; and his second sister, who died in 1831, was wife of the Duke of Wellington.

THOMAS HALLIFAX, ESQ., OF CHADACRE HALL, COUNTY SUFFOLK.

The decease of this gentleman occurred at his seat, Chadacre Hall, on the 7th instant. He was a Magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant of Suffolk, and served as High Sheriff in 1837. He was last surviving son of the late Sir Thomas Hallifax, Knight, Alderman and Mayor of the City of London in 1771, by Margaret his wife, daughter and co-heir of John Savile, Esq., of Clay Hill, Middlesex.

Mr Hallifax married Anna Maria, daughter of John Staunton, Esq., of Kenilworth Castle, and had, with two sons, Thomas, of Berkeley-square, London, and John-Savile, of Edwardston House, Suffolk, in holy orders, three daughters, Maria, Ellen, and Diana.

MAJOR-GENERAL A. D. FAUNCE, C.B.

This gallant officer, whose death is just announced, was second son of Major Thomas Faunce, by Bridget his wife, daughter of E. Nugent, Esq., of Dublin, and grandson of Thomas Faunce, Esq., of St. Margaret's, Rochester, the descendant of a family settled in Kent since the reign of Edward VI.; and now represented, in its senior branch, by Edmund Barrell Faunce, Esq., of Sharsted Court.

General Faunce married Maria, daughter of — Goddart, Esq., and had two sons and three daughters.

THE DEAN OF LEIGHLIN.

THE HON. and Very Reverend Richard Bayle Bernard, D.D., Dean of Leighlin, was the second son of Francis, first Viscount Bernard, and Earl of Bandon, by his wife, Catherine Henrietta, only daughter of Richard, second Earl of Shannon. He was born the 4th September, 1787; and having, after the usual preliminary education, taken holy orders, he devoted himself during the rest of his life to an ardent and assiduous performance of his sacred functions. He was a man of the most general charity: on one occasion he gave £500 to forward the objects of the Church Education Society. Dr. Bernard was Rector of Wells, in Ireland, and also Dean of Leighlin. This estimable dignitary died of fever on the 1st inst., and is succeeded in his dean-ship by the Very Rev. R. W. Tighe, Dean of the Chapel Royal, and First Chaplain to the Lord-Lieutenant.

The family of Dean Bernard trait of Bernard, Earls of Bandon—is one of the oldest in this realm, and originally from Normandy, and settled in the state isle in the time of Henry II. In the reign of Queen Anne, Francis Bernard, the then head of the house, attained legal eminence in Ireland, by becoming her Majesty's Prime Serjeant and Solicitor-General, and afterwards a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas. The present and second Earl of Bandon is the eldest brother of the late Dean. Two other brothers of his died in the British service: one perished of fatigue at Coimbra, in 1813; and the other was slain at Waterloo.

MRS. WALLACK.

THIS venerable lady, the mother of the two popular actors, Mr. James and Mr. Henry Wallack, died last week, at the advanced age of ninety. Her maiden name was Field, and she belonged to a highly respectable family in Yorkshire, all the male branches of which were in the navy. Her brother George was purser on board some of our most famous frigates and sloops-of-war, and he commanded a gun-brig during the war with France. The present actor, Mr. Henry Wallack, served with him as midshipman. Mrs. Wallack was the daughter of the celebrated Mrs. Booth, who also inspired verses. She was a member of the Drury-Lane company, as Mrs. Granger, at the time of Garrick's retirement, and after three years of widowhood married Mr. William Wallack. Mr James Wallack, of the Haymarket Theatre, is the youngest of her children. For the last thirty years of her existence she had the great happiness of arranging the comforts of her later days, and witnessing her enjoyment of a tranquil and happy life. She was buried on Monday, at Kensal-green, by the side of Mr. Wallack's son.

IRELAND.

HER MAJESTY.—THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—The following letter was read at the meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland, held in Dublin on Monday :—

Buckingham Palace, March 5th, 1850

SIR,—I have received the commands of her Majesty the Queen and of the Prince to send to you the enclosed cheque for £50, as the subscription of her Majesty and his Royal Highness towards the fund for providing a supply of seeds for grass or other fodder necessary in the south and west of Ireland, to be distributed through the agency of the provincial societies.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient, humble servant,

Edward Bullen, Esq., Secretary, &c. C. B. PHIPPS.

LORD VISCOUNT GOUGH.—The county of Limerick grand jury have agreed to the following resolution :—" Resolved—That we feel it to be a duty as well as a pleasure to express our deep sense of gratitude for offering our warmest congratulations to our illustrious countryman, Viscount Gough, upon his return home after an absence of so many years—years of trials, of danger, and of unperishable glory. That we beg also to convey to him (would that we could do so in more worthy of the subject) both the admiration and respect that we have for his noble and chivalrous character, and the gratitude that we feel for the services which he has rendered the State, and for the lustre which, by personal heroism as well as great skill as a commander, he has cast upon the British arms and upon the Irish name."

EMIGRATION AND POTATO PLANTING.—There is far less of emigration this spring than last year, and it is calculated that the number of emigrants will not be much more than half of those who had crossed the Atlantic during the spring of last year. One cause of this falling off is the renewed confidence in the potato amongst the peasantry, who are making the most desperate efforts to obtain seed and pota of land, to try the experiment of living by the cultivation of their "cold friend" once more

IRISH LINEN.—The following passage, written about the year 1775, is interesting at this time : "It is of great importance to Ireland, that the basis of this manufacture, is of home growth, and of the most excellent quality From the very moment of the seed being put into the ground, to the time of its being established in the market, in the form of a piece of white linen, everything is the native growth of the soil everything the productive labour of the inhabitants." The exports of linen from Belfast in 1775 were 147,978 pieces: one firm is now running out more than that number of pieces annually ; and we pay to the foreigner for flax, flax-seed, and oil-cake, upwards of six millions sterling per annum. From the constabulary returns of the breadth of flax sown in Ireland, in 1848, the total is given of 53,863 acres ; the entire quantity of flax required in Great Britain and Ireland would occupy from 300,000 to 400,000 acres.

EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

In our first notice of this Exhibition we characterised the original of the accompanying Illustration, Mr. Sant's "Astronomy," as a fine picture, full of poetic expression, and the best production of the painter's pencil we had ever seen. It was purchased early, and deserved such distinction. It hangs in the north room; its size is 3 feet 5 inches square.

The original of the second Illustration, "Lance Reproving his Dog," was left unfinished by the late Sir A. W. Calcott, and has been finished by Mr. J. W. Calcott Horsley. It hangs in the middle room, and is 3 feet in height by 3 feet 5 inches in width. Of the beauty of the garden scene we spoke in our first notice.

ROYAL VISIT TO IRELAND.

A very clever picture by Mr. Kendrick, R.H.A., the Irish marine painter, of "The Departure of the Royal Squadron from Kingstown Harbour," is now exhibiting, prior to being engraved, at Messrs. Lloyd Brothers and Co., 22, Ludgate-hill. We are gratified to learn that it has been purchased by her Majesty. The event on which the picture is founded took place, as our readers are aware, on the 10th of August, last year, when the Queen bade farewell to her Irish subjects. The moment indicated in the picture is that when the Victoria and Albert yacht approached the lighthouse on the eastern pier of Kingstown Harbour. On the paddle-box, waving their handkerchiefs, the Queen, her Consort, and Royal children are standing—the standard meanwhile being lowered from the masthead. Other vessels, the Fury, the Vivid, and the Stromboli, are following in the wake; while in front are numerous small boats containing interesting groups, with their crews vigorously pulling towards the squadron. At the extremity of the pier crowds are collected—the animation of the multitude is powerfully suggested. We understand that the steamers are portraits, and that the whole representation is remarkable for its accuracy; the scene, in fact, is evidently rendered with linear fidelity. The background of the picture, with the terraces of Kingstown, and the abruptly-rising mountains of Wicklow and Dublin behind, is full of variety and grandeur. The points of the picture are, however, so numerous, that it must be witnessed to be appreciated. What principally strikes the spectator is the beautiful colouring, and the peculiar vividness of the entire delineation. All is brilliant, alive, and cheerful. The artist manifestly had entered into the spirit and gaiety of the scene; hence he has transferred them to the canvass with power and skill.

"ASTRONOMY."—PAINTED BY J. SANT.

THE DIORAMA, REGENT'S PARK.

The two pictures now open to public view are exceedingly interesting. They consist of the "Castle of Stolzenfels on the Rhine," and the "Shrine of the Nativity at Bethlehem." The first, which presents both a novel and a grand view of the Rhine, is painted by Nicholas Meister, of Cologne. As an example of middle-age architecture, it is fine and imposing—indeed majestic—with its donjon, its battlements, and its towers. It commands a prospect from the Marxburg to the Ehrenbreitstein. The landscape is of the most lively description, and exceedingly varied—rock, town, and village hill and forest, vineyards and orchards, all in turn greet the sight. The alternations of light and shade are peculiarly beautiful. From sunset to deep night, with a storm, and the strife of the elements, all is managed with admirable effect. The "Shrine of the Nativity" is by the late M. Rénoux, and has, we believe, been previously displayed. During the present exhibition the celebration of the midnight mass by the Franciscan Monks, with the illumination of the gold and silver lamps, occurs: the changes are exceedingly pleasing. These two paintings are well contrasted, and promise to be popular.

Melton Mowbray.—An appeal is now being made in aid of the restoration of the magnificent and venerable church of Melton Mowbray (to which much has already been done by the inhabitants, under the direction of the eminent architect, G. G. Scott, Esq.), as it may with truth be considered more a county, or indeed a national, than a parish church, and the repairs now to be done are become urgent and extensive. The whole of the foundations of the orth side, and the preservation of them by surface and under-draining, the fine nearth transept doorway, the buttresses, the whole of the west end, including the elegant and finely-proportioned west window—for which stained glass, regardless of expense, has been presented—with the internal and external stonework and roof of the so-much admired "perfect gem," the western porch, or Galilee chapel, have been most satisfactorily renewed, and will be completed as soon as the season permits. The part now demanding attention is the south side of the church, the south transept, with its very beautiful doorway, the exterior of the aisles of the transept, the foundations, buttresses, and windows, most of which are in a most dilapidated and dangerous state, and were fearfully shaken by the late storm. It is very probable that the next high wind may do serious injury to the building, unless the decayed and crumbling portions be replaced, and the whole supported and strengthened by stone.—Lincolnshire Chronicle.

OPENING OF HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

SCENE (THE LAST) FROM THE OPERA OF "MEDEA."

Want of time and space have prevented our doing more than allude to the programme of this theatre for the present season. We cannot, however, doubt the claims it sets forth to resources, after seeing how the season began on Tuesday. Two novelities marked this opening—Simon Mayer's opera of "Medea," and P. Taglioni's new ballet, "Les Metamorphoses." So many years have elapsed since "Medea" has been given on any stage, that, on the principle that "nothing is new but what is forgotten," it may pretend to the highest novelty, and the more justly on account of its classical merits. It is not, indeed, an opera of the calibre of "Don Giovanni;" still less does it attempt to carry the audience by storm, like the works of Verdi. The careless auditor may only be struck by its beauties at long intervals; but those who are attentive, or who are adepts in musical science, will perceive at once how much melody of the most beautiful and varied nature is involved even in the orchestration, in which Mayer was so proficient. The opinion we give of the opera here was that entertained by the greatest of the contemporaries of his fame. Rossini showed his approbation of Mayer, and the impression his works had made on him, in his own shrewd way. Those who peruse the scores of "Otello" and "Tancredi" readily recognise passages of "Medea," which have been transcribed into the brightest gold in passing through the crucible of the great Alchymist of Pesaro. The plot of the opera may curtly be stated as follows:—Jason returns victorious to Corinth to celebrate his nuptials with Creusa (Glauce), the daughter of Creon. Medea—who preserve her lover, Jason, had sacrificed all, even put her brother to death—is residing in Corinth, and is condemned to banishment. After falling in another attempt, in which she is accompanied by Egeus, King of Athens, she determines to be avenged on her rival by resorting to the evil power of enchantment. Creusa is supplied with a nuptial robe which burns her to death. This vengeance accomplished, Medea ascends a car drawn by fiery dragons, and flies with Egeus to Athens

Having two novelties to deal with, we cannot enter fully this week into details of the merits of the music and of the execution, the more so as three of the performers were so affected by such attacks of influenza, that it became necessary to suppress their solos. Calzolari, who performed Egeo, and who is much improved since last year, after eliciting the warmest applause in "Alma sovra il casta," even lost the power of uttering the concluding accents in the course of the performance, and was obliged to leave out his grand aria, "Averse stelle." Madame Giuliani, who possesses far greater resources of voice than the part of Creusa requires, omitted her cavatina and could only sing the music of the concerted pieces. The secondary part of Guasone, sung by a new tenor (Michel), who, although only filling an inferior situation at Her Majesty's Theatre, and who has not the appearance required for any other, possesses a powerful voice and sure intonation, was, from the same causes, unequal to his task. Beletti, the Creonte of the opera, was fortunately free from the grasp of the great enemy of all singers—cold: he delivered the recitatives with the noblest breadth and power; and, by the manner in which he brought out his voice "in relief" in the concerted pieces, he showed how a great artist can give importance to a secondary part. All the interest, however, was concentrated on that young lyrical tragedian, Parodi. Last year, after her first signal success, she paid a severe penalty to the change of climate—her voice became husky, her intonation uncertain, and in everything she attempted she betrayed mental depression and physical weakness. She has returned to the stage as her adopted mother, Pasta, at Como, not only restored, but much improved upon what we have ever beheld her. Breadth, power, dignity, and the appropriate fire sacré she displayed in every portion of the part of the heroic character of Medea. All the violent transitions of sentiment were rendered truly and with the most startling effect. The curses of the enchantress were withering; her display of maternal feeling (in the duet with her children) with sympathy; and her last triumph over her enemies, in the scene we have reprented, where she mounts her fiery chariot, was portrayed in the grandest spirit imaginable. She gave a valse song to single-short isolated words which startled the auditors—the "Io!" was equal to the "Ah! mon fils!" of Duchambouls and Machi. Her style of singing, and her vocalisation, are immensely improved. Her intonation is as sure as it is impressive, and now she executes florid passages with elegance; whilst the grand, broken manner of last year has disappeared. Constant applause greeted this noble display of talent.

The new ballet, "Les Metamorphoses," added still more to the good-humour. Its plot is taken from one of those old Tuscany legends that seem a natural growth of the picturesque "Fatherland," and of the peculiar mystic and dreamy spirit of its inhabitants. Kavi, a student and enthusiast, has made himself an abode amongst the ruins of the Castle of Heidelberg. He divides his time betwixt love and study; his betrothed, Ida, and learning—each with him is equally a passion. Not satisfied with literature, sacred and profane, he has passed the bounds of hallowed knowledge, and has endeavoured to dive into the mysteries of the shadowless beings of perdition. One of those good-humoured elves or sprites, who are, invisible, in the haunts of men, and laugh at their follies, discovers the peculiar tendency of Kavi's mind, and determines to profit by the turn of the dangerous pursuit, by a practical exemplification of the evils of magic power. Assuming every shape in turn, he makes the student fall in love with him in the form of a lady: he renders himself necessary to the study by making love to betrothed in the shape of a handsome and gallant officer, &c. And thus, thanks to a little wholesome mischief, *Kavi*is corrected, and becomes wise and happy at last. There are but two tableaux: the first, Kavi is studying in his own chamber by as many amusing and startling trials and temptations as those by which moukish legends relate St. Anthony was assailed. Carlotta Grisi, in the very appropriate character of an empish sprite, assuming at each moment some new transformation, and employing in turn every species of fascination, dazed as she never did before. She did her spiriting so quaintly and so curiously, her buoyant steps, so ærostatic and aërial, were withal so eccentric, that the spectators were lost in astonishment. Kavi, as a man and as a student, was equally triumphant, even before the grand display in the last tableau of her more strictly choregraphic powers, which was truly marvellous. This last tableau alone (which we have represented, and which is the last of startling feats) contains the materials sufficient for half a dozen ordinary ballets. The scene is gorgeous; the dresses varied, appropriate, and rich. The dancers, particularly the new and very handsome danseuse, Mdlle. Ross and the ever-graceful Rosati, and the agile M. Charles, displayed the greatest talent; and M. Paul Taglioni had the opportunity of distinguishing himself as much in physical motion as he has done in devising the ballet. We have only to add that the music is worthy of Pugni's fame, and Charles Marshall's scenery has contributed its due share to the enthusiastic success of this ballet.

The arrangements for this week combine excellence and novelty. On Tuesday there is to be the début of Signor Lorenzo in the great part of Nabucco, with Parodi as Abigail, and Giuliani as Fenena On Thursday, our countryman, Mr. Sims Reeves, will make his bow in Donizetti's character in which he achieved his reputation in the lyrical theatres of Italy. The subscribers, we believe, have the option of keeping their boxes for this special occasion. The new ballet, "Les Metamorphoses," with the fascinations of the Protean Carlotta Grisi, and its graceful danseuse and pretty costumes and quaint incidents, will be repeated.

DRURY-LANE.

On Monday, the comedy of "The Elder Brother; or, Love at First Sight," was produced, and met with more success than might have been anticipated. One reason for this, perhaps, may have been the restoration of the text (a few alterations excepted) to the Beaumont and Fletcher standard. It is now relieved from the corruptions of Cibber, and those fine poetry and wit for which the effect intended by the original authors We could have wished that the two antagonists in a love-affair had not been brothers. But for the unpleasant feeling produced by this relationship, the plot would have been attractive enough. The interest lies in the contrast between the scholar, Charles (Mr. Anderson), and the fop, Eustace (Mr. Montague)—the father inciting towards the latter, and the uncle towards the former. Charles is at first wholly engrossed by his love, and puts his brother's benefit; but a sight of his brother's bride changes his resolution. In the ecstasy of the moment, he addresses her in such language as no one less learned could employ—as Coleridge says, "Plain talk like a book." The tables are at once turned, and Charles carries off the lady. They are pursued, however; and Charles is attacked by Eustace and two friends, who draw upon him; but Charles manages to possess himself of his brother's sword, and, turning upon all three, proves himself the master. Finding the game is against him, he folds his arms, at length feels shame for his attempts on his brother's inheritance and person, drives from him his former flatterers, and demands honourable satisfaction from Charles. Charles declares himself ready to give satisfaction; but events concurring, they league together against the bride's father, who has borne away the lady. They win her back, and all parties are ultimately satisfied.

The poetic beauties of this play are of a high order, and the wit and humour are very well acted, and put upon the stage. Miss Vandenhoff, as Angelina, the fair cause of this fraternal strife, performed a part which was of rather a passive than a demonstrative character, with an elegance that made it prominent. Mr. Emery, as Meramount, the uncle, was exceedingly natural and spirited; and the part of Charles himself was capitally fitted to the style of the manager. The comedy was deservedly successful.

It is announced that a "complimentary benefit" is to be given to Mr. Anderson, for having had the courage to take the responsibility of a management so hazardous as that of Drury Lane. We wish him success in his experiment; but let him not err in this matter, to consider it he must deserve it. In the present revival, he has shown both judgment and talent, the display of which we shall always be happy to recognise.

NEW STRAND.

The brothers Barnett have produced for this theatre a farce, in one act, entitled, "Out on the Loose," well calculated to excite the laughter of the audience. A fast young man, a Mr Clopperton Chisel (Mr. H. Farren), is the hero —a newly-married rake, who leaves his wife for a roam, gets into mischief and debt, and is about to be arrested, when he escapes into his uncle's house, where he is again confronted with his deserted wife Caroline (Mrs. Leigh Murray), who affords him protection. The lady herself has not escaped peril, having an admirer in the person of one Charles Oakes (Mr. Sheiden), a blendraper's assistant, who runs a narrow chance of being mistaken for the lady's husband and arrested. Chisel ultimately escapes from the consequences of his follies, by obtaining the return of the bills from their holder, as the purchase-money of his silence touching an intrigue with a certain laundress. The piece was decidedly successful.

HAYMARKET.

A new farce was produced on Wednesday, entitled the "Three Cuckoos." It is from the French, but has no novelty of incident, situation, or character. The plot is not worth detailing, especially as the performance was ill received.

The OLYMPIC and MARYLEBONE Theatres are closed, in consequence of a mysterious charge made at the Mansion House, on the part of the Globe Insurance Office, against the lessee, Mr. Walter Watts, for the last twelve years an accounting clerk in that establishment.

GALLERY OF ILLUSTRATION.

This new exhibition, in preparation at the late Mr. Nash's Gallery, in Regent-street, is nearly completed It will consist of a series of picturesque views of the route of the Overland Mail to India, representing the principa features of at raction from Southampton to Calcutta, accompanied by lectures illustrative of the most striking portions of literature, history, and travel of the route. The exhibition is announced to commence on the 25th inst.

CALEDONIAN.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Two days of hurdle-racing over the Low course at Coventry—In future to be used also for regular flat-racing—and a capital spring meeting at Doncaster, have been the sporting features of the week. Of coursing there has been an average quantity, but, saving the "open" gathering on the plains of Altcar, none of importance. Warwick and Leamington come out next week in great strength. Tuesday and Wednesday being devoted to racing on the flat, with a capital bill of fare; Thursday to the Grand Military Steeplechase; and Friday the Leamington annual events; an abundance of steeplechasing may be relied on: and the Aylesbury meeting comes off on Tuesday. The coursing réunions are confined to Hovingham (Yorkshire), on Thursday, and Biggar on the same day. The long-tail season is rapidly approaching its close.

BILLIARDS.

An important and interesting match of billiards took place on Wednesday evening, at Green's Rooms, Leicester-square, between the celebrated amateur player Stark, and Mr. E. Green, for £100 aside ; one game, 1000 up. Mr. Green scored game to Mr. Stark's 808.

On Thursday evening a similar match was played by the same gentlemen, when Mr. Stark scored 819 to Mr. Green's game—Mr. Green winning the first game by 192, and the second by 181.

The game played was that known as the American. During the play the highest Mr. Stark scored from the balls was 38; Mr. Green's highest score being 54. In the early part of the game, on Thursday evening, Mr. Stark was 86 ahead.

The Royal London Yacht Club have resolved to hold their meetings in future at Richardson's Hotel, Pizzaa, Covent-garden, on the second and fourth Mondays in themonth.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The English funds have remained almost stationary, within, however, a very limited range. Firmness marked the market on Monday, Consols closing at 95 to ⅛ for Money, after having touched 96⅛ ; and, although on Tuesday a reaction occurred, the favourable disputations of the forthcoming Budget more than neutralised some misgivings on the Danish and Greek questions. Consols, after according to 95⅝, closed at 96 ⅛ for Money, and 96¼ ⅜ for the April Account. On Wednesday, the Bank Directors (the Consol Account was attended by the disagreeable occurrence of a defaulter being discovered) and the Leaders Exchequer Bills in both markets. Some large speculations for the rise in Peruvian, Mexican, and Spanish, it is understood, have been the principal causes of his failure. This affair, added to a continuance of the foreign complications, and the fall of the Paris elections, tended to weaken the market. Consols consequently receded to 96 ⅛ ⅛ for money, and on Thursday again declined to 95¾ ⅛ ; afterwards, however, the Government Exchequer Bills proposals have given a few shillings, bills having been scarce until Friday, when the new issue of March bills were handed to the public. A belief in the continued abundance of money is general, and Bills of the Bank of England are quoted slightly higher, with a fair probable. The closing quotations of the week are— Reduced, 96¼ ; Consols, 96⅛ ; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annu., 98⅛ ; South Sea Stock, New Annuities, 98⅛ ; Ditto, Shares for Account, 98 ; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 60 p ; Small, June, 60 p.

In the Foreign House, Peruvian continues to be the most extensively dealt in, the prices having ranged from 70 to 72. It is tolerably clear that the "game market" has been overdone, and the Bull party are paying. Buenos Ayres Stock has receded; also Spanish Five per Cents. Portuguese Four per Cents are firmer, and Russian Scrip has declined ¼ per cent. At the close of the week, the Market was heavy at the following rates : Buenos Ayres Bonds, 6 per Cent., 50 ; Chilian Bonds, 3 per Cent., 60 ; Equador Bonds, 3½ ; Mexican, 5 per Cent., 1846, ex Jan. Saturday Morning.—Consols opened rather heavily yesterday, at 95⅞, but, upon the receipt of the Paris intelligence, with an improvement of ⅛ per cent. in prices, Consols improved to 96⅛ ⅜, which continued the day's price. In the Foreign Market, Peruvian rather advanced, quoting 72 to 73. Shares were a point firmer.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The present week's arrivals of English wheat for our market were rather less than the total quantity being nearly 3000 quarters, almost wholly from Essex and Kent. By land carriage the receipts are small, but of full average quality. To-day the show of samples of both red and white was trifling, still, however, the demand for all kinds of English wheat was slow, and, in some few instances, prices gave way four offering, was exceedingly heavy, and Monday's prices were not supported. Upwards of 600 quarters of wheat have arrived in this week. The qualities were generally mid and fair rates of currency, but the in oldling and inferior kinds were in per quarter lower to purchase. The supply of both English and foreign was on the increase. Grinding and distilling, and malting parcels were all somewhat cheaper. Malt came freely to hand. The transactions were wholly in retail, at about stationary prices. Oats, beans, peas, Indian corn and flour had a downward tendency.

ARRIVALS.—English—Wheat, [illegible] quarters; barley, 4270 malt, 5020; oats, 4740; flour, 3310. Irish : oats, ——. Foreign : wheat, 6360; barley, 1400; oats, 13,440; flour, 3300 quarters.

England.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 38s to 44s; ditto, white, 42s to 48s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 38s to 43s; ditto, white, 43s to 48s; rye, 28s to 32s; grinding barley, 17s to 21s; chevalier ditto, 17s to 20s; Scotch ditto, 20s to 23s; malting ditto, 30s to 34s; Kingston and Ware, 54s to 57s; Chevalier, 57s to 59s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 14s to 16s; potato ditto, 17s to 19s; Scotch and Irish, 15s to 16s; ditto, white, 14s to 16s; Scotch beans, new, 34s to 36s; ditto, old, 38s to 39s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 36s to 37s; harrow ditto, 34s to 37s; tick beans, 27s to 28s per quarter. Town-made flour, 38s to 38s ; Suffolk, Essex, and Kent, 32s to 34s per sack. Norfolk and Yorkshire, 28s to 30s.

Foreign: Dantzig red wheat, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; oats, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s, per quarter. Flour, American, 21s to 24s per barrel; Baltic 22s to 25s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Clover seed is in moderate request at fully last week's prices Canary and spring tares are lower to purchase All other seeds, as we have taken, very dull

Linseed, English, —— to ——; Baltic, crushing, 40s to 41s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 41s to 42s. Hempseed, —— to —— per quarter. Linseed cakes, English, 6l to 6l 10s per ton. Rapeseed, £23 to £25 per last of ten quarters. Mustard-seed, 6s to 11s; white ditto, 6s to 9s 6d Tares, 4s 3d to 4s 9d per bushel. English Rapeseed, new, £23 to £25 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, 6l 5s to 6l 10s; ditto, foreign, 5l 5s to 5l 10s per 1000 : Rapeseed cakes, 4l 5s to 5l 5s per ton. Canary, 72s to 76s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, up to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 6d to 7d; of household do, 4d to 5d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 38s 6d; barley, 23s 10d; oats, 15s 5d; rye, 23s 5d; beans, 34s 7d ; peas, 31s 4d.

TEA. A public sale of Assam has taken place The quantity offered was 1010 packages, which chiefly sold at previous rates. Bohea, fine and strong congou is quoted at 9¾d to 10d per lb; other kinds of tea very little doing.

SUGAR.—The refining market are chiefly confined to immediate wants. Fine parcels are mostly selling at late rates; but damp and low qualities are drooping. Refined lots sold at brown lumps, 40s to 40s 6d; and fair grocery, 41s 6d to 42s per cwt.

Coffee.—About 4000 bags good ordinary native Ceylons have sold at 52s per cwt. Plantation and all other kinds of coffee very inactive.

Rice.—Very little business is doing in this article, the value of which is with difficulty supported

Provisions.—The supplies of foreign butter being considerably on the increase, the demand for a declination has become heavy, at a decline in the quotations of from 6s to 8s per cwt. Fine hay Finland is selling at 100s to 104s; and inferior and surplus, 30s per cwt. and upward. The clearances of Irish butter continue extensive; but, as the dealers purchase only for immediate use, we have no improvement to notice in value. Choice parcels are, however, held at very full prices. Carlow, Cork, Limerick, and Clonmel, 84s to 86s; Kilkenny, 78s to 82s; Cork, 78s to 80s. Limerick, 76s to 78s; Waterford, 66s to 70s; and Sligo, 68s to 72s per cwt. The transactions in English butter have fallen off, and prices are lower than last week. Fine new milk Dorset, 104s to 108s per cwt; fresh, 8s to 12s per dozen lbs. Choice Cork pork is in fair demand, at an advance of fully 1s per cwt. Prime small Waterford, landed, 47s to 48s; good, 45s to 46s; and heavy, 43s to 45s per cwt. Most other kinds of provisions are in request at late week's quotations.

Tallow This article is steady, at 37s to 37s 3d per cwt on the spot. For forward delivery, there are sellers at 36s to 36s 3d. Town tallow, 35s per cwt on the spot; rough fat, 2s 1d per 8lb.

Oils. Seal is rather lower to purchase, but cod is somewhat dearer. Rape and olive are without alteration in quotations.

Spirits.—The stock of brandy is still on the increase, yet prices are mostly supported. In rum and corn spirits no change to allude to.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, 70s to 90s; clover, £3 0s to £4 15s; clover hay, £3 3s to £4 15s; and straw, £1 5s to £1 8s per load

Wool.—The principal contract a steady business is doing, at full rates of currency.

Potatoes.—Owing to the immense importations from abroad the demand is heavy, and prices have further receded 2s per ton. Kents are now very fine to 120.

Hops (Friday).—Although our market is very scantily supplie with all kinds of hops, the general character of the trade is heavy, at some decrease. The quotations have a downward tendency. Several parcels of foreign hops are now offering. Sussex, 50s to 70s; Kent, 70s to 90s; and fine, £4 0s to £4 10s per cwt.—

Now Mid and East Kent pockets, £5 5s to £11 11s; New Weald (Kent and Sussex), £3 to £8 5s; New Sussex ditto, ——s to ——s; New Farnham, £4 4s to £5 5s; Old Kent, £4 10s to £6 6s; Old Sussex, £3 3s to £4 4s; Old Farnham, £4 4s to £5 5s per cwt.

THE FLORIFORM PARASOL,
Registered, Act 6 & 7 Vict., c. 65.
Some time ago, a Number of the "Art-Union" Journal contained a letter from Mr. Owen Jones, the well-known author of which tastefully suggested that a great improvement might be made in the Parasol by adopting in their formation the configuration of Flowers, instead of the ordinary Parasol shape.
This suggestion, as far as is mechanically practicable, is carried out by the invention of the FLORIFORM PARASOL, which exhibits, when open, the elegant contour of a full-blown flower.
The FLORIFORM PARASOL may be purchased of all first-class Harbers and Parasol Manufacturers throughout the Kingdom; and wholesale of JOHN MORLAND and SON, Manufacturers, 30, Eastcheap, London.

DU BARRY'S HEALTH-RESTORING FOOD for INVALIDS and DELICATE INFANTS, the REVALENTA ARABICA of the Nile.—We take pleasure in bringing to the notice of our readers a remedy which has the merit of being at once safe, speedy, certain, and economical, from its moderate price or expense, as it saves fifty times its cost in other means at curing for dyspepsia (indigestion), constipation, flatulency, nausea and sickness on land and at sea, under any circumstances, nervousness, debility, consumption, hemorrhoidal affections, nervous, bilious, and liver complaints, palpitation of the heart, spasms, diarrhœa, dysentery, derangement of the kidneys and bladder, cough, asthma, dropsy, rheumatism, neuralgia, deafness, paralysis, depression of spirits, &c. DU BARRY'S REVALENTA ARABICA FOOD, which is daily prescribed, even in hard stage of a disease, is a blessing to the human race and delicate infants, as it never turns acid on the weakest stomach, and defies vomitings. Mr. Taylor, Coroner of Bolton, Doctors Reid and Harvey, James Sherland, Esq., No. 3, Sydney-terrace, Reading, Revs. Sir Stanley Grimes, Bart., Rural Dean, Stapleford—a cure of 50 years' Porter, Esq., Athol-street, Perth—a cure of 13 years' cough, with general debility; Mr. Smyth, Ivy-cl se, Exeter—a cure of 30 years' Cornelius O'Sullivan, M.D., F.R.C.S., Dublin—cured of 70 years' vomiting and nervous agony from aneurism, which had resisted all other remedies

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

JOHN LOCKE, ESQ. C.E., M.P.

MR. LOCKE was born in 1805, at Attercliff, near Sheffield, and was educated at Barnsley Grammar School. He studied engineering under the late Sir George Stephenson, and in 1826 (Mr. Robert Stephenson being absent in South America) acted as his principal assistant in the construction of the Liverpool and Manchester Railway—the first of the great iron-ways that now in every direction gird the kingdom. At that period no one ventured to assume the immense development of traffic that has since resulted from the facilities given by railways. The making of the Liverpool and Manchester line was looked upon as an experiment, and a somewhat rash one. The evidence given by the promoters before the Parliamentary Committee went no further than to show that the then means of communication between the places were insufficient, that the charges for goods and passengers were high, and that the railway might calculate on carrying from 200 to 250 passengers daily; the earnings were calculated at £31,000, being sufficient to meet the current expenses, and llow a fair profit upon the capital. Whilst a firm way was being made over the morass of Chat Moss, and the road sawn through the solid rock at Olive Mount, few, except the engineers and those acquainted with the certainties of their science, and in sufficiently close association with them to note their daily victory over difficulties that seemed unconquerable, had any faith in the success of the undertaking. To the majority it seemed that Chat Moss, swallowing up endless sums, would prove a Slough of Despond to shareholders—they never dreamed that that swamp would give rise to a fresh spirit of enterprise amongst Englishmen, and that the road over it would be pointed to as the beginning of an era in inland transit rich in results to manufactures, commerce, and civilization, changing all the relations of time and space, and giving new value to the term of human life. But the success of the Liverpool and Manchester line soon exceeded the utmost hopes of its promoters, and gave rise to the project for the extension of the line to London. Between 1830 and 1835, the surveys were made. In the latter year the bill was obtained. Mr. Robert Stephenson had then returned from America; to him was committed the direction of the line from Birmingham to London, and to Mr. Locke the Grand Junction from Liverpool to Birmingham. This great work was opened in 1837; during the whole period Mr. Locke was engaged in all the Parliamentary struggles between landowners and the railway company and companies for the selection of lines.

The London and Southampton was the second great line constructed by Mr. Locke, and it was followed by the Manchester and Sheffield, with its magnificent viaducts and tunnel at Woodhead, hewn through three miles of solid rock. He has also been the pioneer of the West Coast line to Scotland extending the Grand Junction through Preston, Lancaster, Kendal, and across Shap, without a tunnel, to Carlisle; and, with the like boldness of design, has carried the Caledonian from Carlisle across the great ridge above Beattock (also without a tunnel), and connecting by one trunk line the cities of Edinburgh and Glasgow with Liverpool and London. By the Scottish Central and Scottish Midland he has extended the Caledonian through Stirling and Perth on to Forfar, and is now engaged in the completion of the line to Aberdeen, which will be opened in a few months. In addition to this vast continuous link of lines, Mr. Locke has also made the Paisley and Greenock, and the line from Colchester to Norwich.

He is known as a distinguished engineer in France, and has, on several occasions, given advice on railway matters before committees of the French Chambers. He laid out and executed the line from Paris to Rouen, and the far greater work from Rouen to Havre, and for which last he received from the late King, Louis Philippe, the decoration of the Legion of Honour. He has also the merit of the introduction of passenger railways into Spain, having made the line, eighteen miles in length, from Barcelona to Matero, which cost £200,800, has now been open more than a year, and has been so profitable an undertaking, that the proprietors have received a dividend of eight per cent.

With the exception of the distance from London to Birmingham, and twenty miles of the Grand Junction south of Preston, Mr. Locke has made the great lines connecting Southampton, and, in fact, Paris, with Aberdeen—a distance in all of 760 miles, from 620 to 630 of which are his; probably the greatest work ever seen to its accomplishment by one individual. Mr. Locke belongs to what is termed the economical school of engineers, and claims the merit of having on all occasions kept his works within his estimates. He is proprietor and lord of the manor of Honiton, for which he was returned to Parliament, without opposition, at the general election in 1847.

He is a supporter of the present Government; in favour of household or rating suffrage; voted for the ballot and repeal of the Navigation Laws, and against Mr. Disraeli's motion both last and this session; being a free-trader, strongly of opinion that local management and local responsibility are the only safeguards against extravagant expenditure.

On the 29th of April, last year, Mr. Locke moved the second reading of a Bill for the Regulation of Railways on Sundays, and made his maiden speech. His object was to compel all railway companies running mail trains on Sunday to attach passenger carriages. He spoke at considerable length, and supported his case by a powerful array of facts and instances of the inconveniences arising from the stoppage of Sunday trains, and the inconsistency of the custom; and, on a division, he was beaten by a majority of only 131 to 122. He is in favour of a more efficient mode of supervision of railway accounts, but is opposed to the proposed Government audit, on the ground that Government interference with any department of commerce must always be obstructive and injurious.

TALLOW-CHANDLERS' BENEFIT SOCIETY.—The anniversary festival of this institution took place on Thursday, at the London Tavern; the Lord Mayor in the chair. It appeared that, since this charity had been founded, fifty persons had been elected to the benefits of this institution, there being, at the present time, seventeen women and twenty-one men who were receiving assistance. Since 1844, no less a sum than £9016 had been distributed amongst the poor ill-treated, aged, and infirm objects, and but for which several would, in all probability, have ended their days in a workhouse. A collection in aid of the charity was then made, amounting to about 400 guineas.

JOURNEYMEN TAILORS' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—On Wednesday the annual dinner of this institution, which was formed in 1837, "for the establishment of a fund for the relief of aged and infirm journeymen tailors, and the widows of pensioners, for the erection of an asylum for the reception of journeymen tailors, and, if married when elected, their wives," was held at the London Tavern. Sir De Lacy Evans presided, his colleagues in the representation of Westminster, C. Lushington, Esq., being also present. About 250 of the principal master tailors sat down. The chairman, in proposing the toast of the evening, explained the advantages of the institution, and stated that a journeyman, by subscribing 1 3d. a week, or 7s. year, for three years, would entitle himself to become a recipient of the benefits of the institution, which comprised residence in the asylum at Haverstock Hill, an allowance of £20 16s. annually, with coals, medicine, and medical attendance. The list of subscriptions announced amounted to upwards of £1000, including a legacy of £500 duty free.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

OMICRON—The two last sent are under examination, and shall be reported on next week

AN AMATEUR—We believe your solution of No 318 to be the true one

MC T—r—Mr Lyon will find in the current Number of the Chess-Player's Chronicle, page 96, Nos 3 and 3 shall appear shortly

R S W, Oxford No. 3 is very simple. No. 4, although ingenious, is a plagiarism from one of the games between Messrs. Staunton and Horwitz

HILLIG—The "Book of Rare Games," by Messrs Horwitz and Kling, is now, we understand, approaching completion, but we know neither when nor where it will be published

CALDER BANK—In the present day we believe Chess to be much more generally practised throughout Europe than Draughts

A CHESSLING In Diagram 19 of the little work mentioned, the White King and Pawn should be at the adverse corner of the board, and the Black King on the adjoining Bishop's sq

R D M—By what moves do you propose to delay the Mate in Enigma No 314 beyond the stipulated number?

BELLAST—Will Bellary favour us with an address? The former was mislaid

BOSTON—Not without merit, considered as a game of very young players. Send us another specimen by-and-by

D G—We have no remembrance of the game in question, and no ready means of finding it; but if we should discover where it appeared, you shall hear from us

OMEGA—Your solution is, for move is wrong. See our solution below

BRUTUS—Thanks, but the mate is apparent at a glance

W J H—I. It was much too easy. 2. See our solution to No. 320. 3. No. 319 can be solved by Q takingQ the first move

AMATEUR—Your solution and proposed emendation of Problem No. 319 are correct. You have failed, however, in No. 320

R B, and others—It has been suggested by an eminent player that by placing a White Pawn on Q Kt 5th, instead of Q R 4th, in Mr Horwitz's Problem, No. 320, the integrity of a very fine position would be established, and his solution the only one of which it is capable

NAVAIR, Kensington—You may obtain the "Staunton Chess-men." If we are not misinformed, at Ramsey's Library, Brompton-row, Brompton; and probably find a competitor for a game, of an evening, also

BOZ—You can obtain the new work called "The Chess-Player's Text-book," and the Rules for Double Chess, of Lenthall, in Piccadilly

A Z A match of much greater interest to the Chess community of Europe than the one lately finished is on the tapis, between Mr C Stanley and the celebrated Hungarian player M. Löwenthal. The arrangements are all but completed, and we hope in a few days to hear it has commenced. The battle ground will be New York

NEMO—On looking again, you will perceive there is a defect in your problem, which renders mate impracticable in four moves.

SOLUTION OF PROBLEM NO. 320.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to Q B 3d	R takes B (best)	4. Q to her 6th (ch)	K takes Kt
2. Kt to K 4th	P takes P (best)	5. Kt to Kt 5th	Mate
3. Q to her B 6th (ch)	K takes P

This is certainly very elegant and ingenious; but the author, in endeavouring to carry out a particular idea, seems quite to have overlooked an obvious method by which the mate may be given in two moves less than he prescribed. For example:—

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to K 4th (disco-vering check)	K takes Kt (best)	2. Q to K 5th (ch) 3. Q takes P—Mate!	K to B 6th

(a) Mr Stanley plays a more close and cautious style of game in the present match than was his wont. We should like to have seen him Pawn three forward to Q 4th

(b) B takes B, followed by Q to her Kt 3d, looks more attacking.

(c) This series of exchanges to carry in the needful defences very much from the after interest.

(d) An insidious retreat, tempting Black to push forward with his K R P or the Kt, either of which must compromise his position.

(e) Fatal, as the least consideration would have shown.

12. Q B to K Kt 5th	Q to K sq	25. Q to Q 3d	P to K 6th (e)
13. B takes Kt	Q takes B	Black surrenders.

(a) Black might have gained a fine attack and have ensured the winning a piece in return, by taking the Pawn with his R K t at this juncture.

(b) This seems to give Black some advantage; but his opponent very quickly turns the tables on him, as will be seen.

(c) A master-touch. Nullifying all Black's fine attack, and winning a piece off hand

(d) Had he taken the Q P, White would have played his Q to K 7th, and have won easily.

(e) The last few moves are in Mr. Stanley's best style, and the game altogether a brilliant and amusing specimen of the gambit.

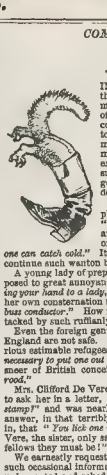
COMPOSITE COLUMNS.—No. II.

BY ALBERT SMITH.



THE VAGRANT CONUNDRUMS.

INCE we expressed our determination of putting down all those dissolute riddles which have lately been levying so many contributions of laughter on the public, by a species of comic Vive aud Tory, we have been overwhelmed with communications, and they are still arriving. Some alluded to are such old offenders, that their career must soon terminate, such as "When is a door not a door?" with several more of that class, the positions of which rest on the explanation of the precise period when a certain thing is supposed to assume altogether different actuality to that generally attributed to it. But many are very sturdy and determined, and must be at once disposed of.

A gentleman at present on the Northern Circuit complains bitterly of having been asked by a brother barrister, "Why would you back heat, in a race between heat and cold?" and being, much against his will (for he is really a man of a superior intellect), compelled to reply, "Because any one can catch cold." It is to be regretted that the respectable portion of the Bar continue such wanton brutality.

A young lady of prepossessing appearance (as she describes herself) was exposed to great annoyance the other evening by being asked, at a party, "In kissing your hand to a lady, why ought it to wear a badge?" and by being told, when her own consternation took away all power of thought from her, "Because it is a bear conductor." How much longer is the purity of our English girls to be attacked by such ruffianly interrogations?

Even the foreign gentlemen who have sought a refuge from political storms in England are not safe. We call upon Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart to protect various estimable refugees from being coarsely asked "How many foreigners are necessary to put one out of temper?" and then as coarsely told, with an exulting sneer of British conceit, "Two score—because it takes forty poles to make one rood."

Mrs. Clifford De Vere, whose son is at Eton, has been shocked by his sending to ask her in a letter, "What is the difference between a donkey and a postage-stamp?" and was nearly sent into hysterics when the next post brought the answer, in that terribly debased English which boys at public schools indulge in, that "You lick one with a stick, and stick the other with a lick." Blanche De Vere, the sister, only said, "Well, I never did; the idea! what a horrid set of fellows they must be!"

We earnestly request our friends to aid us in our intentions, by sending us such occasional information as may lead to the detection of the offenders. Charades, acted and asked, have long been known, in general society, as fearful agents in the pursuit of entertainment under difficulties, and may require early attention; but the lower orders of conundrums are at present occupying the ground of the dangerous classes. Let us strike terror into these fellows by gibbeting them on our Column, as often-ive birds are nailed on barn-doors.

NATURAL HISTORY.

The first result of our researches into the physiology of the Covent-Garden titlebat has not been satisfactory. We purchased one for sixpence, globes and all, and carefully noted down our observations, which are as follows:—

No. 1. The Gasteroteus Lilliputenus as he appeared on the stall in the market, on the eve of his purchase.

No. 2. The singular appearance presented by the Gaster &c., when frightened upon being moved.

No. 3. The same, on the night of his arrival, with symptoms of incipient top-heaviness.

No. 4. The same, as he appeared the next morning, topsy-turvy, on the surface of the water, devoid of life.

We immediately called upon the merchant who had sold the fish—or rather us—and exhibited the body. He informed us that it was necessary to change the titlebats every morning from the globe to a basin, by which means only they were kept alive. He added that they were of a lively disposition, and did not flourish well on the carpet. We have started another, and, we hope, this time with better success

Whilst on the subject of fish, we beg to offer a representation, drawn from nature, of the POPULAR ARCHITECTURE.

OTICING, with regret, several foolish attempts made, here and there, within a dozen miles of London, to build cottages in what is supposed to be the "Swiss style," which they no more resemble than does the "Syrian palefot" any portion of dress worn anywhere in Pale-tine, we beg to offer a hint to the next projector.

A better plan cannot be taken for a rus. Swiss cottage than the beautiful wood models sold at such a reasonable rate in our toy-shops. They are made after existing buildings, and mostly manufactured about the lake of Brientz. By lifting the roof from the larger ones the internal disposition of the rooms can be seen. Brientz, Interlacken, and the Bernese Oberland generally, following the usual route from Meyringen and Grindelwald, abound in the prettiest specimens of Swiss national architecture. They are mostly built of walnut wood, and covered with thin flakes of stone, or shingle kept down by lumps of rock.

Here is a faithful sketch of a châlet

THE AFRICAN SQUADRON.

THE question of Slavery rages with its accustomed acrimoniousness in the New World, and threatens the dissolution of the greatest and most powerful Republic that ever existed. In the Old World the question of the Slave-trade is quite as embarrassing, though not likely in its solution to be productive of so much evil. The morality and religion of Great Britain, and of that portion of her children in America who derive their opinions from the teaching of the great minds of this country, condemn alike the iniquities of Slavery and the still greater horrors of the Slave-trade, and make light of all considerations of prudence and economy in comparison with what they consider the paramount and sacred duty of putting an end to these infamies. The American Abolitionists seem willing that the North and South should come to an open rupture; that the Union should be destroyed, and that a fierce internecine war should rage among the Republics, rather than that Slavery should not be immediately and summarily abolished. The enemies of the Slave-trade in England—or at least that portion of them who consider the question to be peculiarly their own—seem as willing as their friends in America to risk any kind of ruin rather than relax in their efforts to remove from the world the foul crime of Slave-dealing. So true it is that nothing is more pitiless than a theory; and that no man is more reckless than he who has but one idea, and that an ultra-philanthropic one.

The questions of slavery in America, and of the abolition of the Slave-trade throughout the world by Great Britain, ought not to be mere matters of theory. As questions for debate among logicians, they are easily enough settled. Slave-holding is unjustifiable—it is both a mistake and a crime. Slave-making is still more atrocious, and is, to all intents and purposes, even a worse crime than murder. But what then? Slavery exists, and the Slave-trade flourishes by the consent of many nations. They are both established facts, and cannot be wrought out like mathematical problems. They touch the interests of men, and cannot, while men are men—and while wealth and position are real and tangible things, which their possessors will not peaceably renounce for the sake of a moral principle—be disposed of in a manner likely to give satisfaction to those who take no account of practical difficulties. Slavery and the Slave-trade are the scandal of our civilisation—the curse and stain of the modern world. It is desirable and just that they should be rooted out. None will palliate or defend them; but wise men must take care that, in combatting these evils and crimes, they do not, with the best intentions in the world, commit a greater amount of wrong, and cause a greater amount of suffering, than those which they are so anxious to remove.

Great Britain set a noble example to the world in the manumission of the slaves in her West Indian colonies. She had not only a perfect right to do as she did on that glorious occasion, but she had a sacred duty to perform. Every Englishman may well be proud of his country for the disinterested philanthropy, and the pure spirit of religion which dictated the sacrifice she made. But though Great Britain was right in that instance—and would have been right had she spent five times the twenty millions that it cost her to remove the taint of slavery from her possessions—the nations of the world may very naturally ask us by what right we claim to be the general redressers of the wrongs of the human race, and who constituted us more particularly the protectors of the African? Our right, in fact, is self-assumed. We are a strong, and we claim to be a pre-eminently moral and religious people. For these reasons, we have constituted ourselves the champions or freedom, and the foes of all who traffic in the blood and bones of their fellow-creatures. Two other great nations apparently unite with us upon this subject; but they join us grudgingly, and afford us no practical aid in the object which they and we profess to have in view. France and America look at our efforts with a feeling approaching to contemptuous pity for our excess of zeal, and leave to us the whole cost and trouble. We blockade the coast of Africa, and have done so for years; we send our best sailors upon that service, and we spend the money of our pauperised and overtaxed people in defending the liberty of the Negroes, while France and America do not stir a finger in the business. They consider it our affair, not theirs; and they are only too happy when they hear that we make a failure of it.

The cost of this blockade of 4000 miles of the African coast established by England, though some people affect to consider the cost as nothing in a question like this, has been, up to the present time, about £25,000,000 sterling. The annual cost is about £1,000,000; and the blockade employs, on a moderate estimate, nearly one-fourth of the whole naval force of the country. If we could afford this splendid sacrifice—if this money were as nothing to us—and if we could expend it as freely and as prudently upon this humane and Christian object as a gentleman of fortune expends a few guineas in an annual donation to an orphan school, or in a gift towards the erection of a church, there would be only one question for the country to consider; viz. what effect we produced by our generosity, and whether, in fact, we accomplished the object we had in view? But when our finances are not prosperous, but most deplorably the reverse; when we groan under the weight of the most stupendous debt that was ever contracted since the world began; when to pay the interest of it we tax the sinews, the brains, the life of every individual in our nation; when under that oppressive weight pauperism and crime are yearly increasing with gigantic strides; when we are too poor to free the light of heaven from the demands of the tax-gatherer; when we cannot afford to give our ignorant population the benefit of untaxed knowledge and religion; and when every comprehensive project for the physical, moral, and intellectual elevation of the vast mass of our home population is set aside with a hopeless shrug of the shoulders by men in power, because there is no money that can be applied towards it;— then, indeed we think it is high time that the question of expense should be taken into our serious consideration, and that we should not only ask ourselves whether we can afford so large an outlay, but whether the outlay is not a total waste, effecting no good whatever;—whether, also, it does not create jealousy and ill-will and cause of quarrel between us and our lukewarm allies;—and whether it does not increase the horrors and barbarities of that very Slave-trade, which it is our avowed object to destroy.

The debate of Tuesday night, upon Mr. Hutt's motion, raised all these questions. In a temperate, able, and judicious speech that gentleman proved that the African squadron was a huge blunder, immensely expensive, and utterly useless; and that, so far from diminishing the intensity of the Slave traffic, it actually augmented it in all its horrors. The reply of the Minister to this masterly oration was singularly weak, unsatisfactory, and ineffective. Lord John Russell defended the present system because Mr. Hutt had not a better one to propose in lieu of it; and seemed to think, that, because we had entered upon this course, we were bound, lest the world should laugh at us, to continue in it, though it was proved by all impartial testimony to be a miserable failure. His Lordship was marvellously nonchalant upon the question of cost, and could not have spoken more haughtily on the motion if we had been without a debt, without a property-tax, and in the full enjoyment of a surplus that we did not know what to do with. He even went the length of saying that it was because of our exertions in the suppression of the Slave-trade that this country had so large a prospect under the blessings of Heaven, as to have a margin of income over expenditure during the present year. He also warned us, that we should no longer have a right to look for a continuation of such a blessing, if we withdrew the African squadron! It is rather an unusual and a surprising thing to see a statesman like Lord John Russell in such a character. If this be, indeed, his Lordship's opinion (as we are bound to believe), it is high time that he should carry out his scruples in the matter of Slavery and the Slave-trade to their legitimate extent. If he believes that the favour of the Almighty will be withdrawn from us if we discontinue a blockade whose only results are the increased sufferings and agonies of the miserable Negroes whom we desire to befriend, and the pertinacious prosecution of the traffic in spite of our cruisers, he must believe it to be equally sinful to encourage Slavery and the Slave-trade by our profitable dealings, for slave-grown articles, with slave-making and slave-holding nations. To be consistent, he should absolutely prohibit Brazilian sugar; nay, he should go further—he should obstinately set his face against the slave-grown cotton of the United States, and not only doff his own calico shirt in favour of Irish linen, but compel the whole nation to do likewise.

We believe the feeling of the country to be so strong in this matter, that it would not begrudge the cost, although it reduced us to the verge of bankruptcy, if we really succeeded in so beneficent and sublime an object. But there does not appear to be a single individual who imagines we can do so, without a large addition to our force, and the adoption of concurrent measures of greater efficacy than any we have hitherto employed. What such measures are to be nobody knows. Even if the nation consented to double the strength of the African squadron—to blockade the whole of Africa, west, south, and east—to subsidize the African kings, and to buy them out of the traffic, it is a very doubtful question whether we should succeed in destroying the trade. To blockade effectually such an enormous line of coast, is more even than Great Britain can accomplish; and to subsidize the African kings would not necessarily cause them to be honest, or make them proof against the more enormous bribery of the slave-dealers of Brazil. The task is, indeed, one—no one will deny that; but the plain truth is, that it is beyond our power to accomplish by our naval force, however great, or our subsidies, however liberal. We but injure ourselves in a vain attempt, in which we confer no benefit upon a single human being. We cannot fight the Slave-trade after this fashion. Let us be content with setting the world a good example—with washing our own hands of the foul spot—with protesting against Slavery and the Slave-trade upon all befitting occasions, and with enlightening the nations upon the subject whenever we can do so. We are not in a position to attempt more. We may have the will, but we have not the power; and when we see that our good intentions have no other result than to increase our own burdens and augment the horrors of the traffic that we condemn, it is surely high time that we should learn the virtues of quietness and attention to our own business. The Minister has just now obtained a triumph, as far as votes are concerned, but it is a triumph which will not last. The doom of the African squadron is as plainly written as if the votes had been the other way. The cause cannot stand after such an exposure as was made by Mr. Hutt. If it could, such a defence as was made by Lord John Russell would be the death of it.

LADY JOHN RUSSELL'S ASSEMBLY.

LADY JOHN RUSSELL'S third and last assembly of the present series, at the official residence of the Premier, in Downing-street, took place on Wednesday night, and, was honoured with the presence of upwards of 600 distinguished visitors.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge took opportunity to pay his respects to Lady John Russell on this occasion, arriving shortly before eleven o'clock, and remaining the guest of her Ladyship until midnight. His Royal Highness was attended by Baron Knesebeck.

His Grace the Duke of Wellington and the gallant Lord Gough were both present, arriving from the United Service Club about eleven o'clock.

Among the members of the diplomatic circle present we remarked his Excellency the Turkish Ambassador, his Excellency the French Ambassador and Madame Drouyn del' Huys, his Excellency the Minister for the Netherlands, his Excellency the Swedish and Norwegian Minister, the Baroness Rehausen and Mademoiselle Chamier, his Excellency the American Minister and Mrs. and Miss Laurence, his Excellency the Portuguese Minister and Vicecountess de Moncorvo, his Excellency the Bavarian Minister and the Baroness de Cetto, the Baroness Brunsow and Mdlle. Olga de Lecznar, his Excellency the Prussian Minister and Madame Bunsen, his Excellency the Danish Minister and the Countess Reventlow, the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires, Baron Isola, Baron Moncorvo, Count Perponcher, Mr. Colquhoun, Mr. Davies, M. Mavesaldeé (secretary to the French Embassy), M. Sampayo (attaché to the French Embassy), le Commandeur de Marcoleta (Nicaraguan Chargé d'Affaires), Chevalier De Horta and Madame De Horta, Mr and Mrs Ernest Bunsen, &c.

The company continued to arrive until past midnight, the guests setting down both at the garden entrance and in Downing-street as fast as the carriages could get up. The whole suite of saloons were thrown open on the occasion, and very brilliantly illuminated under the superintendence of Messrs. Sedgwick and Taylor.

It was nearly one o'clock before the party broke up.

CORPE CASTLE.—FURTHER DISCOVERY OF FOSSIL REMAINS AT ENCOMBE.—During last week an enormous tusk has been discovered, embedded in a stratum of loose gravel, measuring round the curve 7 feet 6 inches in diameter, or 1 foot 9½ inches in circumference at the root. The enamel is perfect, about one sixteenth thick; in other respects it is so decomposed that it will be difficult to preserve it entire. This interesting relic of past ages probably belongs to the Elephas primogenius of Blumenbach, Elephas fossilis of Cuvier, and mammoth of the Russians, or fossil elephant; the nature and position of the debris or drift exactly corresponding with the description given by geologists, in which the same kind of bones have invariably been found in various parts of England, and in other parts of the globe. On the other hand, the curvature is so great (forming an arc of from sixty to seventy degrees), that it might be said to resemble more the tusk of the Dinotherium, as restored by geologists, which curved downwards. Part of the horn of an antelope or deer and a huge leg-bone were also found near it, all of which seem to belong to a race of animals now extinct. The whole is being carefully preserved for the inspection of the Earl of Eldon. In viewing the improvements now in progress at this delightful spot, the visitor cannot but admire the taste displayed by the noble projector, and the work already completed reflects the greatest credit on those employed in the execution thereof.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The result of the return of the Socialist candidates at the Paris elections last week has been not only to cause a modification of the Ministry by the retirement of M. F. Barrot from the office of the Interior, and the appointment in his stead of M. Baroche, late Attorney-General, but also to set the President of the Republic and his Government upon devising schemes of repression, and for the preservation of the peace of society, so that the ultra-Democrats may not again be able to display their energies with such telling effect. The measures in contemplation are—a bill on the press, with the object of increasing the amount of cautionary money and re-imposing the stamp duty, a bill on the jury, to modify the number of votes necessary to a verdict of guilty; a bill on electoral meetings; a bill having some resemblance to the Alien Act; and a bill on transportation.

On Wednesday morning M. Baroche, the Minister of the Interior, had an interview with several of the editors of Paris newspapers, on the subject of the first-mentioned measure to be introduced by the government on the subject of the press. Among the gentlemen who attended the meeting were M. Bertin, the editor of the Débats; MM. Veron and Bollay, the editors of the Constitutionnel; M. de Lavalette, the editor of the Assemblée Nationale; M. Lubbis, the editor of the Union; and M. Chambolle, the editor of the Ordre. None of the conductors of the Republican papers were consulted. The tenor of the Government bill was that it is to be that the caution-money to be deposited by journals in the hands of Government was to be raised from 24,000 francs to 50,000 francs for daily papers published in Paris, and to 12,000 francs for those published in the departments. Besides this, all papers were to be subjected to a stamp duty on each number published of four centimes, besides a postage to be levied on all those passing through the post-office. With the exception of M. Bertin, who said he was undifferent as to the course to be taken by the Government, the editors all expressed their disapprobation of the measure.

None of the measures have yet been introduced to the Legislative Assembly, where they may be expected to raise a perfect storm. The arbitrary powers already possessed by Prefects are also to be extended.

The Stamp Duties were under discussion in the Assembly on Tuesday evening; and the debate proceeded very quietly, until the clause came under consideration which proposes to tax transfers of stock and treasury bills, when M. Ducos opposed it, upon the ground of a violation of the public faith. He said it was nothing less than a spoliation, and would raise a host of enemies against the Republic. It would alarm the foreign creditor, who would withdraw his capital, and thus public credit would suffer. The question was adjourned, and resumed at the sitting on Wednesday, when eventually it was carried by 400 against 239.

Accounts from Soissons, Arras, Lyons, Lisle, and Elbœuf describe manufacturing and commercial interests as having received a most serious check by the late elections.

The Prefect of the Aller has caused to be arrested several persons whom he has charged with political offences.

M. de Royer, Advocate-General at the Court of Appeal at Paris, has been appointed Attorney-General in place of M. Baroche.

The departure of the Grand Duchess Stephanie, of Baden, aunt of the President of the Republic, fixed for Friday (yesterday); and M. Louis Bonaparte intended, it was said, going with her as far as the frontier, and afterwards to visit the garrisons of the departments of the east.

The Moniteur announces that the President of the Republic has received a letter in which the Emperor of Russia notifies the birth of a Grand Duke, son of the Grand Duke Constantine.

ITALIAN STATES.

ROME.—The accounts from Rome state that there was every probability of the Pope's speedy return to the city immediately after Easter.

His Holiness has conferred decorations on several officers of the French navy. Admiral Cosy has received the Grand Cross of the order of Pio Nono on account of the services rendered to the expedition to Rome by the port of Toulon, where Admiral Cosy was in command at that period. Rear-Admiral Berard has been named Commander of the Order of Gregory the Great. The Austrians have as yet shown no disposition to approach the city.

NAPLES.—From Palermo accounts state, that on the 9th inst. the municipality of that city presented to the King a petition, signed by 20,000 persons, praying that the constitution might be established by law, as it was de facto.

GREECE.

Accounts from Athens of the 6th inst. mention that Baron Gros, the French Envoy commissioned to effect a reconciliation between England and Greece, had had an audience of the King on the subject; and they mention a report that he had recommended the Greek Government to recognise the claims of England to indemnification for English and foreign subjects, leaving the question of amount open to discussion. The Greek Government was said to be disposed to adopt the recommendation.

RUSSIA.

From St. Petersburgh, under date of the 10th inst., we learn by a ukase from the Senate, that an agreement has been signed by the Chancellor of State, Count Nesselrode, and the Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, Prince Schwartzenburg, by which the Russian and Austrian Governments pledge themselves mutually to deliver up the Polish subjects who shall enter the territory of either empire without a permit from their respective Governments.

Accounts from every part of the Russian empire speak of the remarkable state of the weather. Alternations of thaw and frost have been quite unusual, and severe as the winters in Russia generally are, the cold has been more intense this year than in the memory of man.

UNITED STATES.

Advices from New York to the 6th have come to hand. The news by this arrival, though interesting, is not of an important nature.

No business of consequence has as yet been accomplished in Congress, the attention of both Houses having been principally occupied with general discussions on slavery questions, the settlement of which appears further to be retarded than ever to the United States. It has been currently stated that Mr. Webster was about to propose a new plan of compromise, which would probably reconcile all differences, and bring the long-pending question to a close. Mr. Webster is decidedly opposed to any further extension of slavery, and agrees in the main with the practical measures recommended in the President's Message. A large meeting, representing especially the commercial interests of the city, without distinction of political party, had been held in New York, in support of Mr. Clay's compromise resolutions. Over ten thousand persons were assembled in the spacious amphitheatre of Castle Garden. Great enthusiasm was expressed for the objects of the meeting, and the importance of the Union was set forth as of superior importance to the restriction of slavery.

M. Cabet, the founder of the Icarian Community at Nauvoo, has resigned the plenary authority he had in his time exercised over the Communists, and substituted in its place a regency of six members, to be elected annually. A modification in the constitution is proposed, bringing it into accordance with the democratic institutions of the United States. The election under the new arrangement took place Feb. 3, when M. Cabet was elected President of the Regency and of the Community.

A very serious fire had taken place at one of the cotton factories at Richmond, and was entirely destroyed. The loss was estimated at 100,000 dollars.

CANADA.

We have no news of interest from Canada. Parliament has been prorogued until the 3rd of April. The annexation excitement is somewhat on the wane. Colonel Prince, a member of the Provincial Assembly, had published a vigorous letter in favour of the independence of the colonies.

CALIFORNIA.

We have advices from California by the arrival of the steamer Alabama at New Orleans to the 15th of January, two weeks later than our last accounts. A dense rain-fall had taken place at Sacramento, overflowing the whole city, destroying immense herds of cattle and other property, and causing a loss of over 1,000 000 dollars. A party of Americans have been attacked at the mines near Stockton by a band of Chilian marauders. Several of the Americans were killed, and others taken prisoners, though subsequently released. The excitement caused by this outrage will probably result in the expulsion of all the Chilians from the mines. The steamer brought gold dust to New Orleans amounting to 500,000 dollars.

MEXICO.

Our latest advices from Mexico are to the 8th ult. General Thomas Marin has been appointed Commandant-General of Chiapas and Tobasco, in the place of General Hernandez, who has been obliged to resign in consequence of ill-health. The Indians still continue their destructive incursions, although they have lately suffered two effectual repulses in the states of Durango and Sonora, losing thirty-four chiefs in the latter and several of the unprincipled partizans of the territory, to establish a Provisional Government until the claims of the people can be urged before Congress by a delegation for the purpose. An opposition meeting took place on the same spot on the 5th ult. which passed resolutions asserting the right of Texas to the line of the Nueces.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Accounts from the Cape to the 13th of January, which have been received this week, supply little intelligence of novelty. No change had taken place in the condition of the colony; the Neptune remained in the bay; and the Anti-Convict Associations continued their opposition to the threatened measures of Earl Grey. The inhabitants were looking with great anxiety for the final order of his Lordship, some with hope, others with fear. The most ardent opposers of the Colonial Secretary's scheme urged the indispensable necessity of avoiding all violence or disorder, at the same time recommending a quiet and determined moral resistance, until the objects they had in view should be fully realized.

INDIA.

Advices in advance of the Overland Mail arrived in town on Thursday afternoon. The dates are—from Bombay, of February 16; Calcutta, February 8; and Madras, February 13.

The most important feature of the news now received is an account of a mutiny which broke out in the 66th Bengal Native Infantry, stationed at Umritsir. The event was not altogether unexpected, for some symptoms of dissatisfaction had previously appeared among a portion of the troops, who had been punished accordingly. The cause of dissatisfaction was the reduction of the Seinde batta, which, they alleged, oppressed them, being at a great distance from Seinde, where the food being at the cheap rate. Their commanding officer, kindly remonstrated with them, but to no effect. Resistance was evidently determined upon, and the Major ordered one of the ringleaders to be placed under arrest. A great part of his comrades immediately went to his rescue, when the Major ordered his troops to pile their arms. Colonel Bradford, with the 1st Cavalry, having just fortunately arrived at Umritsir, commanded his men to mount, and proceeded to enter the fort, when they were stopped by the mutineers, who endeavoured to close the gate; but Captain Macdonald, the officer on duty, drew his sword, drove the rebels away, and admitted Colonel Bradford's troops. The disobedient were marched out of the fort, a court-martial was immediately ordered, and, should they be found guilty—of which there can be no doubt—they will receive the heaviest punishment the court can inflict.

In all other parts of India tranquillity prevailed. The troops were generally in good health, except at Moultan.

The first portion of the force intended for operations against the Sikkim Rajah left Darjeling on the 9th of January. The remainder of the troops were to follow immediately. Sir T. E. M. Turton, late Ecclesiastical Registrar at Calcutta, has been sentenced to imprisonment for two years under the penal clause of the Insolvent Act.

CHINA.

We learn from China, under date Jan. 30, that the head and the hand of the Governor of Macao (Amaral), murdered some time since by the Chinese, had been given up to the European authorities; three Chinese prisoners, who had been taken at the Barrier, having been surrendered in exchange.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE COUNTESS OF SCARBOROUGH.

ANNA MARIA, Countess of Scarborough, widow of John, seventh Earl, died on the 17th inst., aged 84. Her Ladyship was daughter of Julian Herring, Esq. She married Lord Scarborough in 1785, and has left surviving issue one son, John, present Peer; and two daughters, Louisa-Frances, wife of the Rev. Thomas Dolder; and Henrietta Barbara, married first to the Rev. Frederick Manners Sutton, and secondly to John Lodge Ellerton, Esq.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL DURNFORD.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL ELIAS WALKER DURNFORD, of the Royal Engineers, was the son of the late Colonel Elias Durnford, of the same corps, who was Lieut.-Governor at Pensacola, and who commanded the Royal Engineers under Sir Charles Grey at the taking of the Havana in the West Indies, in 1794. Elias Durnford, the son, the subject of this notice, acted at that period under his father, as a Lieutenant. From that grade he rose, through much hard service, to the rank of Lieutenant-General.

This gallant officer died at his residence, Tunbridge Wells, on the 8th inst. A brother of his, Lieut.-Col. Philip Durnford, died from fever whilst in command of the Royal Artillery, in Jamaica. Another brother is the only one now surviving: he, also, is a Lieutenant-Colonel of the Royal Artillery.

WILLIAM RAMSAY RAMSAY, ESQ., OF BARNTON, IN MID-LOTHIAN.

THIS gentleman, formerly M.P. for Mid-Lothian, was son and heir of the late George Ramsay, Esq., of Barnton, by Jean his wife, second daughter of Robert Hamilton, Lord Belhaven. He was born 29th May, 1809, and married, 4th August, 1838, the Hon. Mary Sandilands, only daughter of Lord Torphichen, by whom he leaves a son and successor, Charles William. Mr. Ramsay possessed, besides the Barnton estate, the lands of Bannockburn and Sauchie, county Stirling. He died on the 4th inst., at Barnton.

SIR THOMAS MARRABLE, KT.

THIS gentleman, who was secretary to the Board of Green Cloth in the Lord Steward's department of the Royal household, received Knighthood in 1840, after thirty-four years' service at Court.

Sir THOMAS was second son of the late John Marrable, Esq., of Canterbury, and married the daughter of William Hesech, Esq., of Sloane-street. His death occurred a few days ago.

DR. BOYRENSON.

THIS gentleman, a physician in the Hon. East India Company's Service, and attached to the Bombay army, may be remembered as having been instrumental, by his courage and energy, in saving lives when the Great Liverpool was wrecked, in March, 1846, off the coast of Corunna (which sad occurrence was related and illustrated at the time in this paper). Dr. Boyrenson died of jungle fever, at Kaira, Bombay, on the 6th January last, much and deservedly regretted.

INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION OF 1851.

The following points of principle have been decided by her Majesty's Commissioners, in answer to inquiries made by the Local Committee for the City of London

1. Juries will be selected to award the prizes; but no competitor for a prize in any section will be allowed to act upon a jury to award the prizes in that section.

2. It is not intended to require of exhibitors that they should of necessity be subscribers.

3. It is not intended to exclude any person, whether he be the manufacturer, designer, inventor, or proprietor, of any article, from exhibiting it, whatever may be the place of residence of the exhibitor or he required to do so.

4. Some misunderstanding having arisen from the use of the words "counting-houses" in the building prospectus issued by the Commissioners, they intend only to have such offices appropriated to the purpose as taking money at the doors, distributing tickets, selling catalogues, and conducting the other business of the Exhibition, and not offices for the sale of articles exhibited. The object of the exhibition is the display of the articles to be exhibited, and not the transaction of commercial business; and the Commissioners can therefore give no facilities for the sale of articles, or for the transaction of business connected therewith.

(Signed) J. SCOTT RUSSELL,
STAFFORD H. NORTHCOTE.

March, 1850.

On Wednesday evening a public meeting, numerously and respectably attended, and having for its object the formation of a local committee to aid the Royal Commissioners in carrying out the Exhibition, was held at the King's Arms, Kensington; the Right Hon. W. S. Lascelles, M.P., in the chair. On the platform were Lord Robert Grosvenor, M.P.; the Right Hon. T. M. Gibson, M.P.; J. Macgregor, Esq., M.P.; the Rev. Archdeacon Sinclair, and several gentlemen of influence in the locality. There was also a large attendance of ladies. Lord Robert Grosvenor, in moving the first resolution, affirming the tendency of the proposed exhibition to promote the arts, sciences, agriculture, and trade of this country, expressed his belief that the forthcoming exposition would bring such a concentration of arts and manufactures before the view of all classes in this country, as would lend materially to elevate the national character in matters of taste. Mr. M. Gibson stated his belief that the intended exposition would not only elevate the moral character of the community, but refine its tastes for the arts and sciences. England was behind her neighbours in her taste in which she was deficient would undoubtedly be promoted by contact with the minds of other nations. But the Exhibition would be of importance in relation to our laws having the same material. For instance, there were foreign countries in the manufacture of glass he could not attribute to any want of ability, but to the injurious influence of our former Excise regulations with respect to that article. The glass duties were now repealed, and the forthcoming exhibition would tend to show how many of our Excise regulations were injurious to the extinction of taste and ingenuity in our manufactures. (Hear, hear.) The secretary then read a list of subscriptions already received from Kensington and its neighbourhood, from which it appeared that nearly £200 had been subscribed for the promotion of the exhibition. Other resolutions, in furtherance of the objects of the meeting, and for forming the proposed local committee, were then passed unanimously; and, after a vote of thanks to the chairman, the meeting separated.

STRANGE VISITORS IN AN ASSIZE COURT.—On Thursday week, Mr. Selby Lowndes, who sat as high sheriff at the Aylesbury Assizes, had, it seems, directed his huntsman to bring his hounds to the White Hart Inn at Aylesbury, in order to treat his hunting friends with a bye day at Aston Abbotts, immediately after the assizes. The White Hart Inn yard, in which the hounds were placed, is close to the court where the sheriff was sitting, and, owing to some disturbance in the court, the sheriff was repeatedly obliged to call "Silence!" which he did with a strong and powerful voice in good earnest. The call was heard by his faithful hound Silence, who at length broke through the paling and rushed into the court, where his master, the sheriff, was sitting, with the whole pack at his heels. The assize trumpeter was requested to blow, but his metre was not attended to, the hounds would not quit the court for him, nor did they till their master, the sheriff, called them together, and, to the amusement and satisfaction of the court, took them, in the style of a thorough good huntsman, to a place of safety. All business was suspended till the worthy sheriff returned to the court.—Northampton Mercury.

A NUMISMATIC TREASURE.—A cabinet of coins has been presented, during the last week, by Mr. Parsloe, to the Corporation of London. It contains nearly 1000 pieces, bearing date between the years 1648 and 1672. They were issued by various traders of the City of London, partly to accommodate the public and supply the want of small change when the Government put forth no copper moneys, and partly as a means of advertisement, the name, residence, and sign of the house being generally found upon each coin. They consist of various metals—iron, lead, zinc, brass, and copper, and a few are of leather; and, independently of their value as curiosities of two centuries back, they will furnish, when the index is completed, a record of the topography and history of the city of London at that period, with the names of streets and localities long lost to the present generation.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort during the past week have graced both the Royal Italian Opera and Her Majesty's Theatre with their presence. The first visit was made to the Royal Italian Opera, on Saturday evening, on which occasion her Majesty and the Prince were accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal. Retracing the movements of the Court, we should mention that, subsequently to our last impression, her Majesty and the Prince, with the Royal children, have visited the New Palace at Westminster, inspecting during their stay the New House of Commons, the Central Hall, St. Stephen's Hall, the Peers' Library, and the frescoes now in progress of execution.

On Sunday the Queen and Prince Albert, with the Princess Royal, the Duchess of Kent, the ladies and gentlemen of the court, and the domestic household, attended divine service in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Rev. Gerald Wellesley officiated.

On Monday (the birthday of her Royal Highness the Princess Louisa), the Duchess of Kent paid an early visit to her Majesty, at Buckingham Palace. Lord John Russell had an audience of the Queen during the morning; and in the evening her Majesty had a dinner party, the company at which included her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Lady Fanny Howard, Baroness de Speth, the Marquis and Marchioness of Douro, the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, Sir George Couper, Captain Francis Seymour, and Mr. Birch.

On Tuesday, her Majesty and the Prince took their accustomed early walking exercise, accompanied by the Royal children. Prince Albert also rode out on horseback. In the evening the Queen and his Royal Highness honoured Her Majesty's Theatre with their presence.

On Wednesday, the Queen and Prince Albert took a drive in an open carriage and four. In the evening her Majesty had an evening party, the company at which included the Duchess of Kent, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Chevalier Bunsen, the Marquis and Marchioness of Douglas, the Earl Granville, Count Persigny, the Right Hon. Henry and Mrs. Labouchere, &c. The Queen afterwards gave a concert in the saloon. Herr Formes was the principal vocal performer, and Mrs. Anderson presided at the pianoforte.

On Thursday the Queen walked in the garden at Buckingham Palace. His Royal Highness the Prince Consort rode out on horseback during the morning, and in the evening dined with the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House. The Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Constance Leveson Gower, the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Earl Spencer, and Viscount Jocelyn, had the honour of dining with the Queen.

Yesterday (Friday) the Queen held a Privy Council at Buckingham Palace.

The Earl of Jersey has relieved Lord Duffrin in his duties as Lord in Waiting to the Queen. Mr. R. Ormsby Gore has relieved Sir Edward Bowater in his duties as Groom in waiting to her Majesty.

THE PRINCE CONSORT'S LEVEE.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert held a levee, by desire of her Majesty, on Wednesday afternoon, in St. James's Palace.

His Royal Highness arrived before two o'clock, attended by his suite, from Buckingham Palace, and was received by the Lord Chamberlain, the Master of the Horse, the Treasurer of the Household, the Vice-Chamberlain, and the Comptroller of the Household. In attendance on his Royal Highness were the Earl of Morley, Lord in Waiting to the Queen; Mr. R. Ormsby Gore, Groom in Waiting; Lord Alfred Paget (Clerk Marshal), Equerry in Waiting; Messrs. Gordon and Herbert, Pages of Honour to her Majesty. His Royal Highness was also attended by Viscount Clifden, Lord in Waiting to his Royal Highness; Colonel the Hon. Charles Grey, Private Secretary; Captain Francis Seymour (in waiting); and Colonel Wylde, Grooms of the Bedchamber; Colonel Bouverie (in waiting), Lieutenant-Colonel Francis High Seymour, and Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Alexander Gordon, Equerries to the Prince; and Major General Gedding, Gentleman Usher to his Royal Highness in Waiting.

Her Majesty's Honourable Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms lined the entrances in the State saloons.

Her Majesty's Body Guard, under the command of Capt. Pipon, was on duty in the Palace Quadrangle.

His Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and a very large circle of noblemen and gentlemen, attended the levee.

General Santa Cruz, an ex-minister of the Prince to present his credentials to the Queen as Minister Plenipotentiary from the Republic of Bolivia.

The diplomatic circle were first introduced, when the following presentations took place.

Lieutenant Quentin, of the Hanoverian Hussar Guards, by the Baron Killler, for Count Kielmansegge.

Senor Pedro Isquerry, Secretary of the Bolivian Legation, by General Santa Cruz.

The general presentations were very numerous, and among the names recorded by the Court Newsman we observe those of Mr. Brunel, the eminent engineer; and of Captain Peel, the latter on his appointment as Aide-de-Camp to the Inspector General of Cavalry.

Previously to the levee, Lord John Russell and Viscount Palmerston were honoured with audiences by the Prince Consort.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent left her residence at Clarence House, St. James's, on Thursday morning, for Frogmore. Her Royal Highness honoured the Royal Italian Opera with her presence on Thursday evening.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge left town on Saturday last, on a visit to the Duke of Rutland, at Belvoir Castle. The Duchess of Cambridge had preceded his Royal Highness to the same destination on Friday last.

Their Royal Highnesses returned to town on Wednesday

The Count and Countess de Neuilly and the Duke and Duchess de Nemours visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent on Saturday, at Clarence House, St. James's.

His Serene Highness Prince Frederick of Hesse has left the residence of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge at Kew, for the Continent.

The Earl of Carlisle had a dinner party on Sunday in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Rev. Dr. Wesley officiated and preached the sermon. The Duke of Manchester, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Earl of St. Germans, the Earl of Powis, and Lord Gough were among the nobility present at the dinner party.

The Duke and Duchess of Leeds and Miss Lane Fox have arrived at the Clarendon Hotel from Yorkshire.

The Earl of Carlisle had a dinner party on Saturday, at his residence in Grosvenor place. The company included the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl and Countess Granville, Lord and Lady John Russell, Lord and Lady Overstone, Sir James and Lady Graham, Mr. C. Greville, Mr. Ord, Mr. Ogle, Mr. Enoch Kept Peel, the Countess of Carlisle, Lady Mary Howard, and Mr. Charles Howard.

Viscount Palmerston entertained the Cabinet Ministers at dinner on Wednesday evening.

The Earl Fitzwilliam and the Ladies Wentworth Fitzwilliam arrived at Mortimer House, Halkin-street, on Wednesday last, from Pau, in the south of France, and have since left town for Milton Park, Northamptonshire.

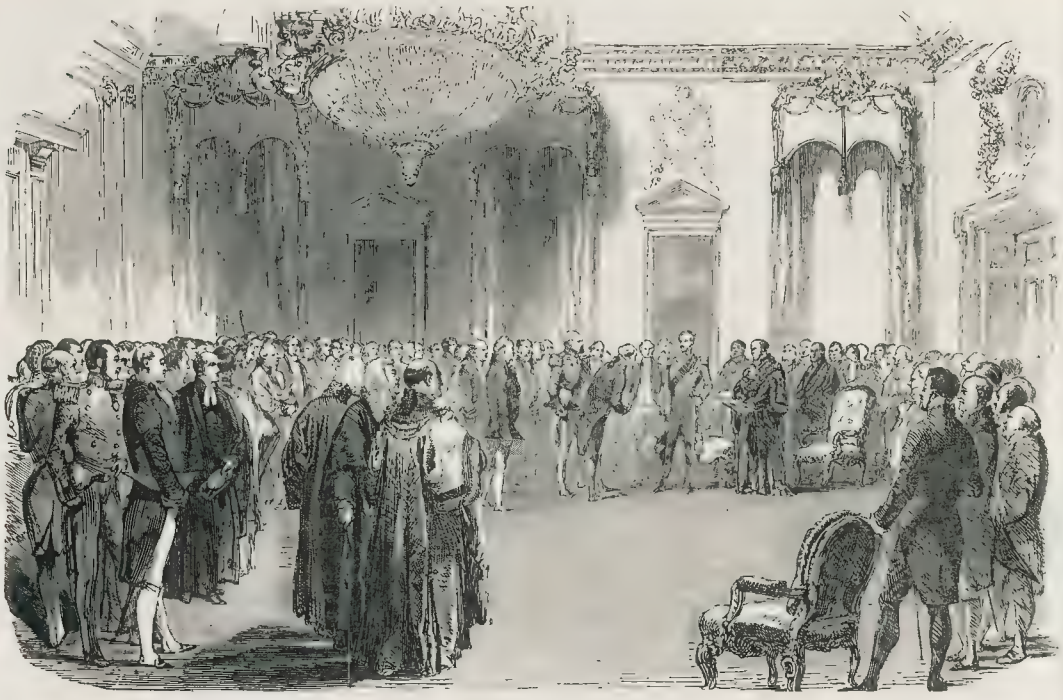
The Earl of Ferrers, who is at present at Malta for the benefit of his health, has resigned the office of Lord Steward of her Majesty's Household, and the Marquis of Westminster has been appointed to the post.

Her Majesty's honourable corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms had their first mess dinner this season on Wednesday.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—In the lower or large model room at the the Society's house, in the Adelphi, has just been opened a very interesting exhibition of specimens of recent British manufactures, received in competition for the Society's special prizes, a notice of which we are compelled to defer till next week.

ENTERTAINMENT TO VISCOUNT GOUGH AT THE UNITED SERVICE CLUB.—On Wednesday the members of the United Service Club gave an entertainment to General Viscount Gough, at their club house in Pall mall, in celebration of the return of that veteran from the East. The banquet was served in the great dining-room, on the ground-floor, which was so arranged as to form a supernumerary dining-room, capable of affording seats for upwards of 200 guests. This extra of accommodation was rendered absolutely necessary from the very large number of members of the club desirous of testing their respect for the noble and gallant Viscount by being present at the entertainment. The tables, when laid out, presented a magnificent appearance. Upon the cross table, at which his honour the guest sat, was a superb gilt épergne, on which were placed two very elegant pieces of plate, representing military subjects, and immediately behind the chair was a buffet of gold plate, of great value, which had a very grand effect. The company began to assemble at seven o'clock. The Duke of Wellington was among the earliest arrivals, and the gallant Duke was very shortly followed by the veteran guest of the day, who, upon entering the reception saloon, was very warmly greeted by the officers present. All the guests were attired in full dress uniform. Dinner was served at a quarter to eight o'clock. General Sir James Macdonnell officiated as president, and having upon his right Lord Gough, and upon his left the Duke of Wellington. To the right of Lord Gough, at the cross table, in the order mentioned, were Sir Charles Malcolm, the Marquis of Anglesey, the Chairman of the East India Company; the Earl of Stafford, Sir Charles Ogle, Sir Colin Halkett, Sir Charles Adam, Sir C. Smith, Sir J. Hamilton, Sir Samuel Brown, Sir John Macleod, and Sir C. Dalbiac. To the left of the Duke of Wellington were—the Earl de Grey, the Right Hon. Fox Maule, M.P., the Deputy Chairman of the East India Company; Viscount Hardinge, Lord William Lennox, the Marquis of Tweedmouth, the Earl of Roden, Sir Alexander Duff, Sir J. Dovetón, Sir J. Murray, Sir J. Adam, Sir [illegible], Sir [illegible], Sir [illegible],

THE GREAT EXHIBITION OF 1851.



THE GREAT EXHIBITION OF 1851.—LEVEE AT THE MANSION-HOUSE, ON THURSDAY.

ably sustain the contest of emulation, and nobly carry out their proffered hospitality to their foreign competitors. We, her Majesty's Commissioners, are quite alive to the innumerable difficulties which we shall have to overcome in carrying out the scheme; but having confidence in you, and in our own zeal and perseverance at least, we require only your confidence in us to make us contemplate the result without any apprehension. (Loud cheers, in the midst of which his Royal Highness resumed his seat.)

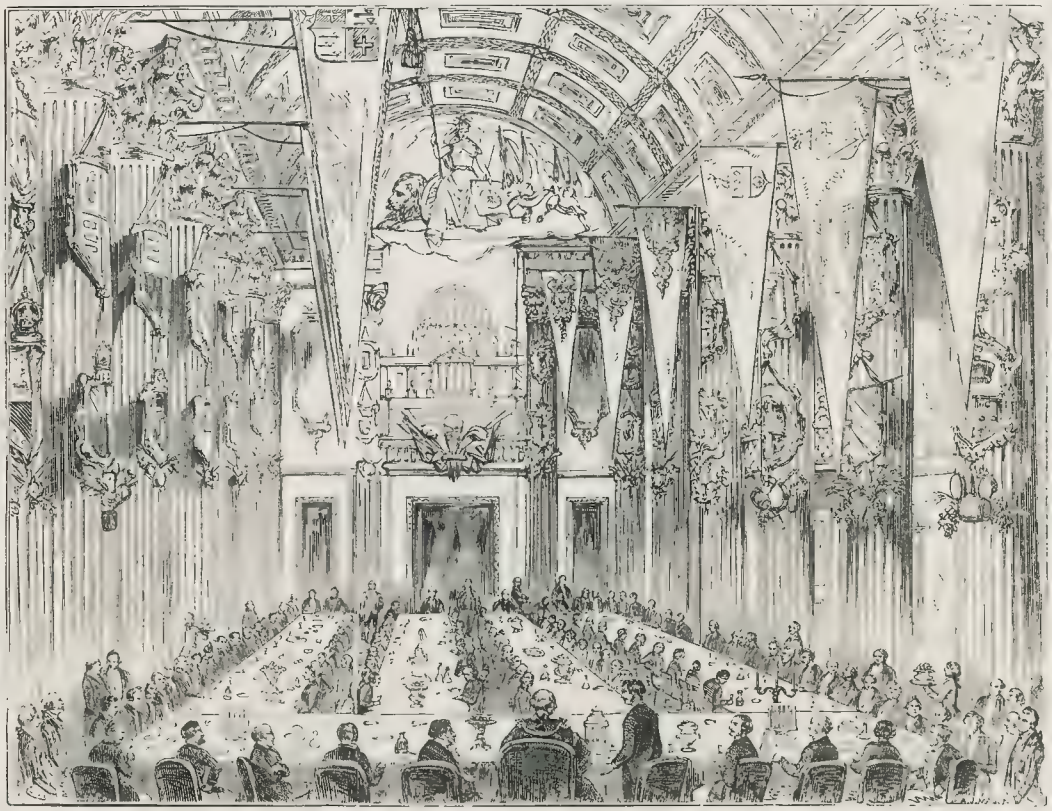
The Lord Mayor then gave the toast of the "Prince of Wales and the Royal Family."

Acknowledged by Prince Albert, who proposed "The Lord Mayor, and prosperity to the city of London."

The Lord Mayor acknowledged the toast, and proposed "The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Clergy."

The Archbishop of Canterbury acknowledged the toast, which was followed by "the Army and Navy," "the Foreign Ministers," "the Marquis of Lansdowne and the House of Lords," "Lord J. Russell and her Majesty's Ministers," "Lord Stanley, and the Royal Commissioners," "the Lady Mayoress and the Ladies Patronesses of the Exhibition," "Sir R. Peel and the House of Commons," "the Chief Magistrates of the Cities and Boroughs," "the Aldermen and City Magistrates," and "the City Companies."

The company did not separate until a late hour.



BANQUET IN THE EGYPTIAN HALL AT THE MANSION-HOUSE.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE opening of this lyric temple of art, on Saturday night, was signalised by the triumphant success of the first Italian version of Weber's "Der Freischütz" ever heard in this country. The opera was produced in presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert, who were accompanied by the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal, being the first visit of the Royal children to an Italian opera house. The house was full and fashionably attended. Mr. Costa's entrance into the orchestra was greeted with three rounds of hearty applause; and the general execution of the work amply proved that he had earned this distinction. Taken in the ensemble, we have never heard, even in Germany, a finer performance; although, in the individual cast, better representatives of some of the characters might be mentioned,

"Der Freischütz" was originally produced in Berlin, on the 18th of June, 1821, at the inauguration of the new German opera-house in that capital. Its success throughout Germany and Holland was unparalleled. On the 31st of July, 1824, after having been refused at Drury-Lane and Covent-Garden theatres, the first English adaptation (a mangled one, with interpolated songs) was heard at the Lyceum, through the perseverance of Mr. Hawes, the musical director, and in opposition to Mr. Arnold's opinion of its chances of success; indeed, so doubtful was it considered, that the house was packed with Germans, and, despite of this Teutonic aid, portions were hissed. But from that moment the "Freischütz" mania in this country was established. Drury-Lane and Covent-Garden theatres brought it out the same season (1824), and it is to this day a popular work of the repertoire. In 1832 and 1833, German companies performed "Der Freischütz" at Her Majesty's Theatre, and at the St. James's Theatre in 1840. Drury-Lane in 1841, Covent-Garden in 1842, and again at Drury-Lane last season.

The foreign and native singers who have filled the principal parts in London have been Mrs. Stephens (now the Dowager Countess of Essex), Miss Paton, Miss Graddon, Mrs. Waylett, Miss Rainforth, Miss Bruce, Miss Romer, Miss Rainforth, Miss Love, Miss Poole, Mdlle. de Meric, Mdlle. Stockell Heinefetter, Madame Schumann, Tichatschek, Haltsinger, Staudigl, Formes, H. Phillips, Braham, Sapio, T. Cooke, Pearman, G. Horn, &c. It will be gathered from the above names that powerful casts have been witnessed here. The Royal Italian Opera cast was as follows:—Agati, Madame Castellan; Annetta, Mdlle. Vera; * Codet Bridesmaid*, Mdlle. Cotti; Guido, Signor Marini; Ghilano, M. Massol; Gastu, Signor Rommi; Otto, Signor Mei; the Hermit, Signor Gregorio; Samuel, M. Doering; and Caspar, Herr Formes. We should add that a mutilated French arrangement was made by M. Castil Blaze for the Odéon, in Paris, in 1830; but that on the 26th of June, 1841, an admirable adaptation by M. Emilien Pacini, with the recitatives composed by M. Hector Berlioz, in place of the original spoken dialogue, was represented at the Académie Royale de Musique, Madame Stoltz, Mdlle. Nau, M. Duprez, M. Portehaut, Marie, Massol, and the late Alizard, sustaining the chief characters. During the present season of the Italian Opera House in Berlin, "Der Freischütz" was given with Berlioz's recitatives.

It will thus be seen that "Der Freischütz" is not a class work, but that it is an inspiration destined for every clime where the sense of the beautiful in art exists. It is indeed a masterpiece of German romanticism, as elaborate as scientific, as intensely melodious, as ardent in dramatic impulse as it is learned in musical resources. Amidst the eccentricities of a demonic and fantastic incantation, there is a profound moral, and the triumph of good over evil is asserted in the fate of the doomed hunter, Caspar. From the first bar of the impressive overture to the very incarnation of the incidents of the poem—to the last note of the finale, the grand conception of the composer is palpable. How majestic are the forms with which he has invested every phase of the action! how melodious is the imagery of every sentiment! how grand and imposing are those concerted pieces in which are concentrated the conflicting emotions of the actors in the drama! And, in addition to this, we are constantly getting at the Composer's own creation, and the carrying out of his purpose is equally marked in originality. Handel, in "Haste thee nymph," has given us a laughing chorus, but it is curious how ingeniously Weber has made use of Samuel's air, to which the unlucky hunter, Max (Guido), is tormented by the peasants. The two scenas of the tenor in the first act, and of Agata in the second, are models of varied dramatic feeling; the melancholy and despair in the former, and the tenderness, sentiment, and trust in the second, are marvellously expressed. The music of Annetta, a girl without guile or attachment to interfere with her natural gaiety, is charmingly conceived. The malignant and reckless passions of Caspar are wrought up with a dramatic power and truth which, at the end, rise to the choruses of Bridesmaids [and] of Hunters are particularly harmonious, and the finale in its masterly changes and progressions, is remarkable for descriptive truth and power. The repentance of Max, the appeal to the Almighty for pardon, the religious adagio of intercession of the Hermit, the sextuor of restored happiness of the principals, and the restoration of the allegro of Agata's scena, heard also in the overture, terminated magnificently.

The overture was encored rapturously, and never was it so finely executed before: the power, brilliancy, and crispness of the stringed instruments, the purity of tone and finished execution of the wind and brass, were unsurpassed and unsurpassable. The rush in the concluding passage was tremendous; the scales were taken as if by one instrument, and the chords were struck like the firing off of an artillery. The Chorus of Huntsmen was encored. Of the principals, Mdlle. Vera and Herr Formes carried off the honours. The former has a pure soprano voice, which she uses with much taste and judgment. She has lost in a great degree the tremolo in her style, and veiled quality of voice, she formerly possessed. She was encored in the artista in 3 4 time, "Vieni un giovera," and sang with pure and finished refinement. She was not so successful in the romance and air in the last act, not adhering strictly to her text; but, on the whole, she created quite a sensation by her début. Formes's figure is already known to the London audiences of this season: anything more powerfully dramatic in the way of acting has been rarely seen: the Italian recitatives seem to hamper him a little; but he gave the Drinking Song, and the scena Sante di Natura, in the first act, with a power and truth of declamation that would have done credit to Kean's best days. His death scene was remarkably fine. Mdme. Castellan sang the adagio of the grand scena beautifully; but she ruined many portions of her singing by introducing roulades quite out of keeping with the character of the music. Of her general acting and her reading, there is no reason why her fine voice should not tell in the part of Agata. The new tenor, Maralti, sang conscientiously, and there was nothing objectionable in his Guido, save the absence of more dramatic power. His organ is of quality, and of sufficient compass. The idea that of Gardoni; and Maralti will be a very useful importation in parts within his register—that of Max is too low for him. Massol has played Kehan in Paris; he was too stiff and formal in singing as well as in the stage-manner: should have been addressed to Max (Guido) derisively. The other parts were respectably sung. The peculiarly screaming tone of Herr Doering, as Samiel, was strongly indicative of the mocking fiend; but hearers unacquainted with the German rend no might find it at first strange. The recitatives for the opera have been composed by Costa, and not by Berlioz, as our contemporaries have erroneously mentioned. Costa has thoroughly seized the Weberian spirit.

The scenery of Grieve and Telbin is worthy of their fame: the Wolf's Glen by moonlight is a gem. The spectacle has been effectively arranged by Mr. A. Harris; but in the grand finale to the overture, we prefer the German mode of rousing down unmusicously to cheer the victor. We must not overlook the delicious viola accompaniment to the romanza of Annetta, so exquisitely played by Mr. Hill.

"Der Freischütz" was repeated on Tuesday and Thursday, and it will be given for the fourth time this evening (Saturday), being the last night before Easter; when Gris, Mdlle. de Meric, Tamburini, Tagliafico, and Marie, will make their first appearances.

The National Anthem was sung on Saturday by Madame Castellan, Mdlle. Vera, Mdlle. d'Okolski, M. Zelger, &c., at the end of the opera.]

THE PARIS ELECTION.

ON Friday, at 11 in the morning, the first formal proclamation of the three successful candidates for the departments of the Seine passed off with tranquility, and during the ceremony nothing occurred to disturb public order. Fears had been entertained that, whether from excitement at the triumph the Socialist candidates have obtained in Paris, or anger at the anticipated losses in some of the departments, an attempt would be made to get up a movement.

The armed force, including National Guards and troops of the line, that kept order on the square of the Hôtel de Ville, was unusually small. On the side of the river there were stationed but a few companies of the Garde de Paris, and two small troops of the mounted National Guard. On the other side were placed, at intervals, a few small detachments of the National Guard of the banlieu who had come in the morning to escort the ballot-boxes. The people who were present in the square in front of the Hôtel de Ville were, at the utmost, about 800.

Exactly at a quarter to eleven o'clock, six Mayors, half of Paris, and half of the banlieu, appeared on the perron, or flight of steps, of the Hôtel de Ville. Each wore his tri-coloured scarf, the emblem of his authority, and presented himself bare-headed. The one in the centre was M. Monin, Mayor of the sixth arrondissement, and the doyen, or senior of the municipal authorities. He held a paper in his hand, and read from it the names of the successful candidates and the Representatives of that department of the Seine, with the numbers that voted for them; viz. Carnot, 133,797; Vidal, 128,439; and De Flotte, 126,582.

After reading this list he cried out "Vive la République!" and waved his hat as a signal to the people to respond to the cry, which the greater part did, but without adding any epithet whatever. The Mayor then read the names of the unsuccessful candidates who had obtained the highest number of votes; thus, for instance, [illegible]; Lahitte, 125,478; Bonjean, 124,347, and then repeated the same cry, and made the same signal, which was replied to precisely in the same manner, "Vive la République!"

The Mayors then entered the Hôtel de Ville; the troops marched off; the National Guard returned along the quays, and proceeded to their home, and the concourse of people broke up into small groups or dispersed. At half-past twelve o'clock, there were a few persons about the square, and in the streets and quays. Such and so peaceful was the termination of a ceremony which it was feared would not pass over without some disagreeable incidents.

The Prince and Princess de Joinville, who arrived at Cadiz from Lisbon on the 8th instant, in the Mandarin, 70-gun steam-ship of war, under a Royal salute, were to be admitted to pratique on the 10th. Their brother, the Duke de Montpensier, was to meet them at St. Lucar, and accompany them to Seville. [illegible] Seville the Prince de Joinville and the Duke de Montpensier to visit her.

of art; and having placed the Royal Academy in the first category, will not allow that it belongs to the second by any perceptible relationship. This, however, is a wide question, which it would occupy much space and time to discuss fully; but, without doing injustice to the real merits of the Royal Academy, it may be asserted that the public, and artists generally, are right when they say "that whatever may have been the purpose of the Royal founder and patron of the Academy, that institution has no' elevated the arts, but has simply produced a personal benefit to certain artists; and that it has not improved their public taste, but has merely ministered to the taste which it found." If this be, as we believe, a true description of the Royal Academy, the public may well demand to know by what right this private body claims a joint possession of the National Gallery? It is quite rich enough, with the proceeds of the shillings that it levies upon the public purse at the doors of its exhibition, to build or rent an edifice for its own purposes. Were there room to spare in the National Gallery, without doing injustice to the public by unduly cramming the national pictures into small space, the privilege claimed by the Royal Academy—though a proof of the shabbiness of that body—might be conceded. But where the reverse is the case, it is tame that the Royal Academy should keep itself to itself, live upon its own resources, and leave the National Gallery to the purposes for which it was instituted—purposes with which, collectively and in its corporate capacity, the Royal Academy has nothing to do. Its occupation of room which was not intended for it is an intrusion—all the more inexcusable because it is not in a state of paupierism, or condemned to appeal to the generosity of the public to save it from starvation. "Instead of spacious galleries, where the public might receive instruction by viewing the works of the great masters, classed according to their age or style, we are condemned to the confusion of an auction-room, in order that a rival establishment may exhibit its wares for money, and receive its shillings at the door after the fashion of Tom Thumb." The British Institution or the Society of Painters in Water-Colours might, with quite as much justice, claim a similar privilege. Our National Gallery would be wretched enough in its accommodation, had it no such interlopers; and there is no reason imaginable why the Royal Academy should make bad worse.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

COURT OF COMMON COUNCIL.—ELECTION OF COMMON SERJEANT.

A court was held on Thursday morning for the purpose of electing a Common Serjeant for the city of London, in the room of Mr. Serjeant Wilkinson, C.C.

Mr. Richard Lambert Jones said he had great pleasure in recommending Edward Bullock, Esq., citizen, spectacle-maker, to the office of Common Serjeant for this city. The character of that gentleman stood so high in the city, and was so much esteemed by the bar generally, that it was not necessary for him to enlarge upon his merits, the more especially as no one had come forward to oppose him.

Mr. John Wood seconded the nomination

Mr. Deputy Harrison begged, as a matter of form, to ask a question of Mr. Bullock, which it was necessary should be answered before the election was proceeded with—whether it was the intention of Mr. Bullock to resign his offices of Judge of the Sheriffs' Court, and Small Debts Court, and Commissioner of the Central Criminal Court?

Mr. Bullock replied that there would be some difficulty in his resigning the Judgeship of the Sheriffs' Court at present, but he should be happy to resign at any time that might be convenient to this court.

Mr. Harrison said he thought the court should either have the resignation of Mr. Bullock at this moment, or a promise from him that, if he were elected Common Serjeant, he would immediately resign the appointments he now held. His (Mr. Harrison's) object was to ascertain if Mr. Bullock did mean to resign, but that it was his intention to appoint a deputy. (Cries of "Oh, oh.")

After a few words from Alderman Farebrother,

Mr. Bullock assured Mr. Taylor that he was quite mistaken in supposing that he did not wish to resign the offices in question. It would be infinitely more convenient for him to resign at this moment; but it was not in his power to do so until a successor was appointed.

A show of hands was then taken, and Mr. Bullock was declared by the Lord Mayor to be unanimously elected common serjeant for the Corporation of London.

Mr. Bullock returned thanks, and said it gave him considerable pride to be appointed to this office after an acquaintance of twenty-three years with the Corporation, seven years of which period he had held a judicial office. He hoped his conduct in future would be as satisfactory as it appeared to have been in the past.

A resolution was then passed that Mr. Bullock be requested to continue the offices he held until a successor on appointed.

It was next resolved that it be referred to the Officers and Clerks' Committee to inquire into the nature and duties of the several offices of Judge of the Sheriffs' Court and Commissioner of the Central Criminal Court, and Judge of the Small Debts Court, and to report thereon to this court.

The court then adjourned.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION, BROMPTON.—A meeting of the board of management was held at the hospital on Thursday last. Amongst those present were the Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, the Hon. Octavius Duncombe, M.P., Captain Gladstone, the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, Major Lyon, &c. The chair was taken by the Rev. Sir Henry Foulis, Bart. The decision for the immediate proceeding with the building of the eastern wing has met with the warmest approbation. Several new rules and regulations were then moved and adopted, and a vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the business of the day.

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—Major Herbert Edwardes, the distinguished hero of Moultan, who was formerly a student but since an associate of King's College, has intimated his willingness to preside over a festival in May next, in aid of a fund for building and endowing a more efficient hospital in connexion with that college.

MERCHANTS' AND TRADESMEN'S MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society took place on Thursday last, at the offices of the company, Chatham-place, Blackfriars; John Macgregor, Esq., M.P., in the chair. The report stated, that during the past year 293 policies had been opened by assurances, to the amount of £76,620, the premiums on which were £2486. Not one death had occurred during the past year, which was an evidence of the care they practised in the selection of their lives. The report was adopted, and a sum of £500 was voted to the directors, who, it was stated, received no remuneration whatever. After a vote of thanks to the chairman, manager, and secretary, the meeting separated.

THE GORHAM CASE.—IMPORTANT MEETING OF THE CLERGY.—On Monday, a meeting of clergymen connected with the various dioceses in England was held at the offices of the London Church Union, in Lancaster-place, to take into consideration the recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of the "Rev. G. C. Gorham against the Bishop of Exeter." The meeting was regarded as one of considerable importance and was attended by a large number of beneficed clergymen, who were appointed as delegates from church meetings in the English sees. Among those who assembled were several distinguished ecclesiastical dignitaries. The proceedings, which commenced at twelve o'clock, extended over seven hours, and were held to be of a strictly private character, the great object in view being to decide what step should now be taken by what is generally termed the High Church party, who maintain the doctrine of baptismal regeneration to be one of the fundamental principles of the Church of England. Another object the promoters of the meeting had in view, was to take measures for obtaining a general protest on the part of the Church against the interference of the Privy Council (which they hold to be an essentially lay court) in matters of a purely spiritual character. Great unanimity, it is said, prevailed, and the proceedings of the General Councils were quoted, with a view to show that the present court of appeal is opposed to the spirit and intention of the Church, which had at once protested, not against the authority of the Sovereign, but the manner in which it was exercised. In proof of this the Church forbade, under pain of excommunication, a presbyter to appeal to a civil court (Council of Antioch, A 341, can. 12; Council of Carthage, A 397, can. 9; Council of Vannes, A 465, can. 9.) The Council of Milevis (can. 19, Codex Eccl. Afr., can. 104, received by the Council of Chalcedon) said, "Whoever shall ask of the Emperor for his cause to be heard before the public tribunals, let him be deprived of his rank; but if he ask the Emperor to be judged by Bishops, let it not harm him." It was contended that the Judicial Committee had no power to reverse the judgments of the Church courts, and that, therefore, its decisions ought not to be accepted by the Church and were not legally binding upon Christian people; that the only proper means of dealing with such a case as that which had recently engaged public consideration was by means of Convocation, and that her Majesty should be petitioned to call to assemble such a Synod of the Church as would decide upon the important question at issue. Convocation had not surrendered its right in this matter, for the Convocation which gave the title of "Head of the Church" to Henry VIII., under which title he assumed the powers of the Royal prerogative which he did, gave it with the express qualification, "quantum per legem Christi licet." At the time the meeting broke up, no final decision had been arrived at, the subject being deemed of sufficient importance to warrant further deliberation on an early day.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—At a very crowded general court of proprietors held on Tuesday, in the Bank parlour, for the purpose of taking into consideration the amount of dividend to be agreed upon for the half-year ending on the 5th proximo, the Governor stated that the profits for the half-year ending on the 28th of February last had exceeded the sum required for the usual dividend of 3½ per cent. by £16,106; and the amount of the rest, out of which the dividend was to be declared, was £3,584,434. Now, a dividend of 4 per cent., without any deduction for income-tax, required £3,582 120, which being deducted from the rest, would leave £3,001.3 4—a shade above the sum of three millions which the court of proprietors had considered to be a sufficient amount of rest for the Bank to hold. (Hear, hear.) Under these circumstances, the court of directors thought themselves warranted in recommending the court of proprietors to declare a dividend of 4 per cent. (Hear, hear.) He therefore begged leave to move that the court do order that a dividend be made at the rate of 4 per cent. on the capital stock of the company, without any deduction for income-tax. (Hear, hear.) The motion for a dividend of 4 per cent. for the half-year was then put, and carried unanimously; whereupon the Governor said that, as 4 per cent. was a higher amount of dividend than had been declared at the last half-yearly meeting, it was necessary, by the terms of their charter, that the question should be finally determined by ballot; for which purpose, when the business of the day was over, the court would adjourn to Tuesday, the 26th instant, at eleven o'clock, when the ballot would be proceeded with.

ROYAL GENERAL ANNUITY SOCIETY.—A meeting of the subscribers of this institution was held at the society's offices on Monday—the Rev. W. Henry Jones, the chaplain, in the chair—to consider the following alterations in the rules of the society:—That any person becoming a subscriber, on paying a new subscription, after the balloting papers are issued for the election of annuitants, shall be allowed the option of giving at that election the whole number of votes to which they would be entitled for that and the succeeding election, on relinquishing their right to vote on such succeeding election. After some discussion the alteration was carried unanimously, on the motion of Mr. Brewster, seconded by Mr. Smith. Active preparations are making for a Fancy Fair in behalf of the institution, which will be held on the 22nd, 23d, and 24th of May.

THE CALEDONIAN ASYLUM.—A special general court of this institution was held on Tuesday, at which Mr. H. H. Lindsay was called to the chair. The three objects for which the court was specially summoned were disposed of as follows:—In the motion of Captain Charles Forbes, seconded by Mr. Craigmyle, a committee of investigation was appointed to inquire into the condition of the institution, and to devise and carry into effect such retrenchments as may be necessary to equalize the expenditure with the income. The Caledonian said the institution was spending between one and two thousand a year above its income, and would necessarily become insolvent if some change were not adopted. The subject of the abolition of the office of treasurer was referred, also, to the committee of investigation; and the resolution of the court of directors of the 18th January, dismissing the drill-sergeant, was rescinded on a division, twenty-voting for its confirmation, and 29 on the contrary. The drill-sergeant, a one of the guardians, voting for his own reinstatement.—On Thursday the quarterly general court of this charity was held in the Scottish Hospital, Cranecourt, his Grace the Duke of Montrose in the chair, when a vote came to at the special meeting on Tuesday, for reinstating the bandmaster in his situation, in opposition to the directors, was rescinded by a majority of 35 to 32. Other resolutions were also carried approving the proceedings of the directors, which will result in all the officials of the charity being changed.

MARINE SOCIETY.—The anniversary festival of this excellent society was held at the London Tavern on Tuesday evening; the Right Hon. the Earl of Bessmge in the chair, supported by Lieut.-General Sir Alexander Low Lushington, G.C.B.; Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Malcolm; Capt. T. P. Clarke, R.N.; Capt Robert Gordon, R.N; Mr. H. S. Thornton, Mr. J. C. Whiteman, Mr. T. P. Cooke, and several other supporters of the institution. The health of her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the rest of the Royal family having been drunk with all the honours, the chairman gave the "Army and Navy," combining with it the names of Sir James Lushington and Sir Charles Malcolm, respectively responded to. The gallant Admiral, in the course of his observations, stated that on the occasion of their last annual meeting, the First Lord of the Admiralty (Sir R. Baring), who was in the chair, shortly expressed his opinion of the advantages of keeping up the connexion between the Admiralty and this institution, even if only six or eight boys annually could be taken from the society. He had since shown the sincerity of those opinions—the Admiralty, instead of six or eight boys, having taken twenty from them during the past year; and, though there was another school recently established in connexion with the Admiralty, he believed he might state that from twenty to twenty-four boys would be annually selected from the Marine Society into the Royal Navy. (Cheers.) The chairman next gave the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Marine Society;" and in doing so congratulated the subscribers on its continued prosperity, stating that arrangements were under consideration for bringing up a portion of the boys to other avocations than the sea in times of peace, though of course in times of war the rearing of boys for the navy would be, as it had always been, their primary object. The report showed that the number of boys on board the society's ship on the 1st January, 1849, was 109, and there had been received during the year 311; making a total of 411, who had been thus disposed of:—Sent into the Royal navy, 3; into the merchant service, 49; ditto into the merchant service, 239; discharged, 19; run, 2; dead, 3; remaining on board the 31st of December, 1849, 105; making the total as above, 411. During the year 1849, fifty-seven boys, who had served upwards of five months of their apprenticeship satisfactorily, were presented to the committee with their masters, and were each rewarded with a new suit of clothes; and fifty young men, who had completed their apprenticeship to the satisfaction of their masters, were each rewarded with a medal, their conduct during the society afforded the committee much gratification. After the drinking of the toast, the boys in the institution—who appeared in the best of health—were marched round the room, and gave three hearty cheers, which were enthusiastically responded to by the company. Several other toasts were drunk; and in the course of the evening a collection was announced, amounting to about £260, including £105 from her Majesty, £105 from the Hon. East India Company, £105 from the Corporation of the Trinity House, &c.

ASYLUM FOR FEMALE ORPHANS.—The triennial anniversary of this society took place on Wednesday at the London Tavern, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge in the chair, supported on the right and left by Thomas Baring, E.q., M.P.; Henry Kemble, Esq., the Baron Rolfe, Baron Alderson, Mr. Thomson Hankey, Esq., Samuel Wheeler, Esq., &c. Nearly 200 gentlemen sat down to the dinner. His Royal Highness, in proposing the toast of the evening, said he had been for 45 years president of this most excellent institution. No man could feel more deeply interested in the welfare of this society than he did; and, indeed, it would be almost unnatural if the fact were not so. (Cheers.) He was sorry to say that from circumstances which perhaps from the increase of the vast neighbourhoods of the metropolis, and the increase of the number of chapels, to which many contributed—the funds of this society, in respect to the Sunday collections, had been much reduced. But he was sure that there was no one present who would not be sorry to see a necessity shown for reducing the number of the recipients on the fund. (Hear, hear.) He trusted and hoped that the treasurer would be enabled to make a good report of that evening. (Hear, hear.) He also trusted that those whom he addressed would do all in their power to aid the good cause in which they were embarked, and that they would do all they could to induce their friends to subscribe to this most excellent Christian society. Of the numerous annual donations and subscriptions which this society could be no doubt. It was a pleasing fact that many of those who had been brought up in this institution had prospered in life, and had become annual subscribers to it. (Hear, hear.) This institution had existed for ninety-two years (cheers), and for forty-five years he (the chairman) had been president of the society. (Great cheering.) His Royal Highness concluded by proposing "Prosperity to the Female Orphan Asylum," which was responded to by Thomas Baring, Esq., M.P., proposed "The Health of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge," in highly eulogistic terms His Royal Highness replied, and expressed the great gratification he derived from being associated with the glorious charity. His Royal Highness at the same time notified that the Prince George of Cambridge had expressed his willingness to become a vice-patron of this society (hear); and among the donations was one of ten guineas from the Prince George of Cambridge. The total subscriptions announced amounted to £2077 12s. 6d. Mr. Poole filled the office of toastmaster with great judgment.

INSTITUTION FOR THE ADULT DEAF AND DUMB.—A meeting was held on Tuesday evening at the board-room of the above institution, in Red Lion square, Bloomsbury. It was stated that the teaching of the different trades had been attended with the most gratifying success; and from several letters received from clergymen and others, in different parts of the country, the afterprogress and conduct of the pupils seemed highly satisfactory. From a statement of Mr. H. B. Brigham, of the Rugby College, it appeared that an experience of thirty years had given convincing proof of the necessity of combining mental and physical instruction. Of seven trades introduced in the Exeter Deaf and Dumb Institution, each answered admirably, except SHOEMAKING.

GROCERS' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society took place on Monday evening, at the London Tavern Mr. Henry Kemble in the chair. The report stated that the progress made during the past year had been most satisfactory, and the annual subscriptions had exceeded in amount those of any year for the last nine years. They had 685 annual subscribers, producing £697 17s. per annum; and the annual donations and subscriptions and dividends on stock, made a total of £1673 7s. In addition to paying the year's pensions, which amounted to £816, they had invested a further sum of £600 in the Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents, making the sum now invested £12,000, yielding a clear annual dividend of £409 10s., and leaving a balance in the Bank of England of £373 4s. 7d. The committee had felt justified in increasing the number of new pensioners. All the pensioners elected this year had been in their best days subscribers to that fund from which they were now about to draw the welcome benefit. The total sum distributed in pensions since the establishment was £8409 9s. At the present time there were nineteen males receiving an annuity £484, and eighteen females receiving £342, making for the year the amount to £1938, and the expenditure £853, leaving a balance of £375.

FREE EVENING SCHOOLS, LAMBETH.—On Monday evening a crowded meeting of the friends and supporters of these schools was held in the School-Room, Lambeth-green. His Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury took the chair. On the platform were the Ven. the Archdeacon of Surrey; Dr. Worsworth, canon of Westminster; the Revs. C. B. Dalton (rector of Lambeth), T. Jackson (principal of Battersea Training Schools), H. Mackenzie (St. Mark's), C. Mackenzie, H. Clissold, H. Townsend, R. Eden, J. Gillman, J. A. Jansson, W. Bowyer, E. T. Domville, W. T. Bullock, W. Rogers, D. Moore, &c. The proceedings having been opened by prayer, his Grace said he had much pleasure in coming forward, by the invitation of the Rector of Lambeth, in such a cause. It must be interesting to all in rearing a young generation, and protecting it from premature vice, for without these and other schools they would be brought up without the fear of God or man. Some would say the schools ought not to exist, as the parent was bound to educate his child, but circumstances had placed it out of the power of a great number to pay for the education of their children; therefore it was the duty of all who were able to come forward, and help those unfortunates. The evening was intended for a time of rest, but, unfortunately, a large number of children were called away during the day to help towards the support of their respective families, and, consequently, it was the duty of all Christians to provide against such cases, and rescue those children who are thrust out thus early in the world from vice and sinfulness. In concluding, his Grace begged most earnestly that all those assembled would come forward in support of these schools to the utmost of their power. (Cheers.)—The Venerable Archdeacon of Surrey said he was happy to see the sympathy shown by the presence of so large an assemblage before him. They had seen and felt the improvements of the present day, and on looking back they must be aware of the utility of founding schools for teaching young children to fear God as well as to respect the laws of man. The Venerable Archdeacon then read the resolution:—

That it is incumbent upon the Church to provide sound religious instruction for the large body of children of both sexes who, either from extreme poverty or from occupations during the day, or from other causes, are unable to avail themselves of the means of education offered to them in the parochial day schools.

The Rev. Dr. Wordsworth seconded the resolution, which was put, and carried unanimously. The Rev. C. B. Dalton moved the following resolution:—

That the success of the Lambeth Free Evening Schools is a most encouraging proof of the readiness with which such opportunities of instruction are sought after; and that it is now desirable to make these schools more generally known, and to invite the parishioners to contribute towards their maintenance and extension.

He observed that these schools were intended for children whose parents are too poor to pay for their education, or who are too ragged to attend other schools, or who from any cause are unable to obtain instruction during the day-time. The Rev. J. Jackson seconded the resolution, which was carried without dissent. It was also shown that the donations and annual subscriptions, with the grant of £24 14s. from the Committee of Privy Council on Education, amounted to £190 19s., and after defraying the necessary expenses a balance in hand remained of £19 18s. 9d. Other gentlemen having addressed the meeting, thanks were unanimously awarded to the most reverend primate in the chair, which his Grace briefly acknowledged, concluding with a benediction on the assembly, when the meeting broke up.

EMIGRATION AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.—A public meeting took place on Tuesday evening in the school-room of the Westminster Juvenile Refuge and School of Industry; Lord Ashley, M.P., in the chair. The chairman having stated the object of the meeting to be on behalf of five youths who were about to leave England from the Ragged Dormitory and Colonial Training School of Industry, the young men themselves were heard, and gave an interesting sketch of the vicious and depraved habits in which the early part of their lives had been spent. They seemed truly penitent for the sins of which they had been guilty, and expressed the liveliest gratitude of the opportunity which has afforded them of commencing an honest career of industry. Several gentlemen then addressed the meeting, and a vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

THE HON. AND REV. BAPTIST W. NOEL.—On Tuesday, the day appointed for the public reception of the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel as pastor of John-street Chapel, Bedford-row, the chapel was crowded by a highly fashionable audience. The hon. and rev. gentleman entered into the pastoral duties of this chapel soon after the mournful lack; but, owing to the illness of the late Rev. J. H. Evans, who had then been minister of John-street Chapel 30 years, the ordination service of the Baptist church could not be performed. Another reason for their necessary postponement was the absence of a satisfactory arrangement for the sale of the chapel, as H. Drummond, Esq., M.P. for Surrey, was unwilling to allow this place of worship to remain no longer in the hands of Baptists. A sum of money from the congregation, £200 of which was contributed by a noble Duchess, has, however, settled this difficulty, and on Tuesday it was inducted as pastor of the chapel. Prayer having been offered up, a statement regarding the affairs of the church was then read by one of the deacons. It stated that since the hon. and rev. gentleman had been acting as pastor they had been obliged to increase the chapel to accommodate 200 additional sittings, making it now capable of holding nearly 2000 persons. The cost of purchase from Mr. Drummond was £6500, with certain conditions in the event of the decease of Mr. Noel. With a the last six months the reverend pastor had baptized nearly 100 persons, nearly all of whom were members with him when in Bedford-row. A deacon then read the 23rd Psalm, and Mr. Noel rose to address the congregation on the pastoral office and prosperity of the church," were then delivered, after wh ch the hon. and rev. gentleman addressed the congregation at considerable length. The services lasted three hours, and were terminated by the singing of the doxology.

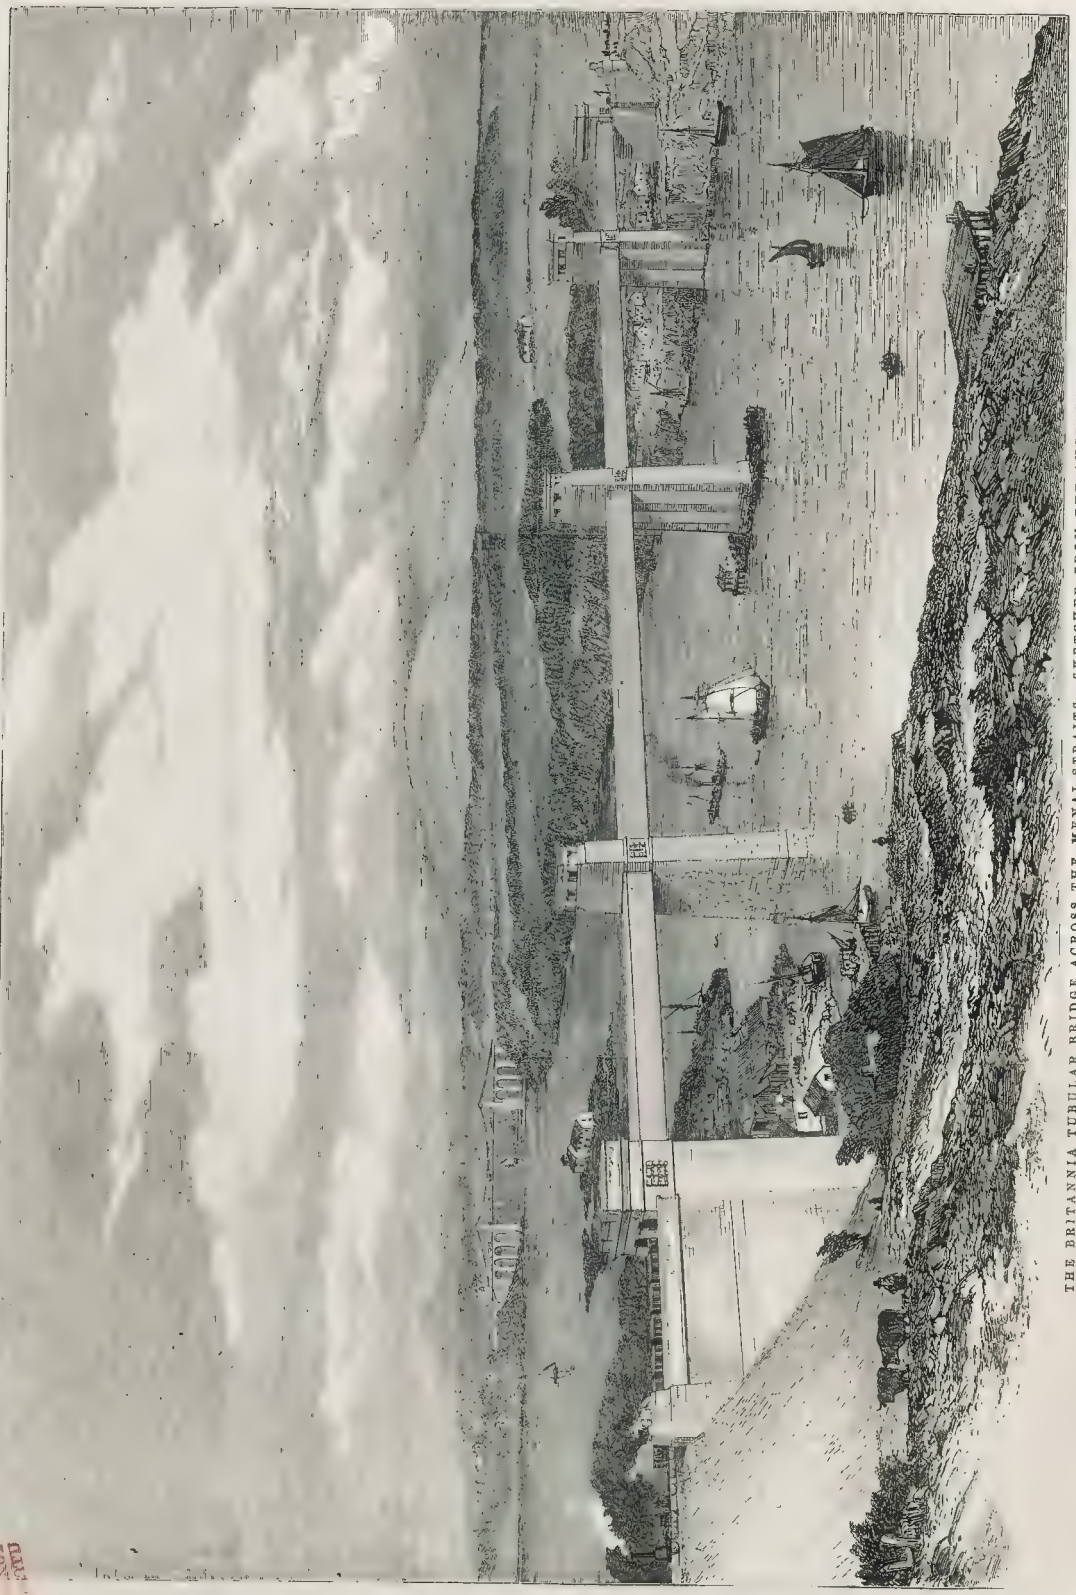
THE MANCHESTER RECTORY BILL.—The Select Committee of the House of Commons upon this bill has commenced its sittings, which will, in all probability, be protracted. Mr. Hope and Mr. Heywood appear for the churchwardens of Manchester, the promoters. The chief opposers of the bill (the object of which is to divide the Manchester into district-) are the Dean and Chapter, who do not, however, object to the division, but the terms of setting it. They contend that they hold the revenues rather as impropriators, and that no cure of souls is attached to the possession of these revenues; the promoters, on the other hand, assert that there is a cure of souls, and that, by its own ordinances, the Chapter is in a different position to that of other collegiate bodies. Mr. Talbot and Mr. Baddeley appear for the Dean and Chapter. The minor canons and lay clerks also oppose the bill by Mr. Charnock, and Sir Fortunatus de Trafford, who holds the right of appointing the lay clerks, by Mr. Russell. Mr. Hope opened the case in support of the preamble on Tuesday; and in the course of his very lengthy and very learned speech, an impartial observer must have, whether the minor canons had any decent claim in respect to the preamble, and whether their case was not one of clamour only. The committee, at this point, as a matter of convenience, gave their opinion against the claim of the lay clerks in the case of the minor canons, and in favour in respect to Sir Thomas de Trafford. On Wednesday Mr. Hope concluded his address, and then called the Rev. Canon Sargent one of the opposers of the bill in support of the preamble, who was examined at great length as to the management of the collegiate estates and the various charters, which he produced. The committee then adjourned. The selected members are:—Mr. Deedes (chair), Mr. Calthers, Mr Brameton, Mr. Wrightson, and Lord John Manners, and to these are added Mr. W. Brown (South Lancashire), Mr. Mackinnon (Manchester), and Mr. Brotherton (Salford), as representatives of the locality

STEAM TO AUSTRALIA.—In consequence of the great anxiety existing in reference to the decision of the Government respecting the contract some time ago presented for effecting intercourse by steam-vessels with the Australian colonies, a deputation waited, on Wednesday, upon Earl Grey, consisting of Lord Monteagle, Hon. E. Scott, M.P.; Sir Wm Molesworth, M.P.; Mr. Wm. Verner, M.P.; Mr. Macgregor, M.P.; Mr. Duncan, M.P.; Mr. Scholefield, M.P.; Mr. Divett, M.P.; Mr. George Robert Smith, Mr. Davidson, Mr. Do Silva, Mr. Mark Boyd, Mr. Riddell Todd, Mr. Charles Logan, Mr. Henriques, Mr. Blackett, Mr. Donaldson, &c. Mr. Scott stated forcibly the object of the deputation, and recapitulated the various stages through which the question had passed during the last four years, and the impediments which had interrupted its progress His statement was earnestly seconded by Mr. M'Gregor, Mr. Divett, and other gentlemen; the former especially urging, on the part of his constituents at Glasgow, that commercial objects connected with that city and our Australian colonies were paramount to all others, and the absence of the same must be by which time and certainty of communication might be calculated upon in mercantile transactions. Lord Grey observed that he was fully alive to the importance of the question, and that it was one in which he took a deep interest. It was not his fault, however, that delay had occurred. difficulties had certainly arisen in bringing the matter to an earlier issue; but, having that morning seen the Chancellor of the Exchequer, he was enabled to say that he entertained hopes to hope that the arrangements, with re-pect to contracts now pending, would be brought to a speedy and satisfactory conclusion.

DREADFUL CONFLAGRATION.—About four o'clock on Wednesday morning a fire broke out at East Smithfield and the London Docks presented a scene of the most indescribable confusion, owing to an outbreak of fire on the premises of Messrs. Wackbarth and Collings, sugar-refiners and bakers. It originated, it is supposed, in one of the driers, and such was the rapidity with which the flames had reached before anything like assistance from the firemen could be procured, that in half an hour nearly every floor was in flames. The engines of the brigade from Wellclose-square, Whitechapel, and all other City and distant stations, were very speedily at the fire; but, unfortunately, the nature of the property was such, that the attempts of the firemen to extinguish the flames were completely useless, and thus the ravages of destruction continued until noon, when nearly anything like was blown but the walls of the building. The loss is estimated at from £15,000 to £20,000, but supposed to be insured in the Phœnix, Imperial, and other offices.

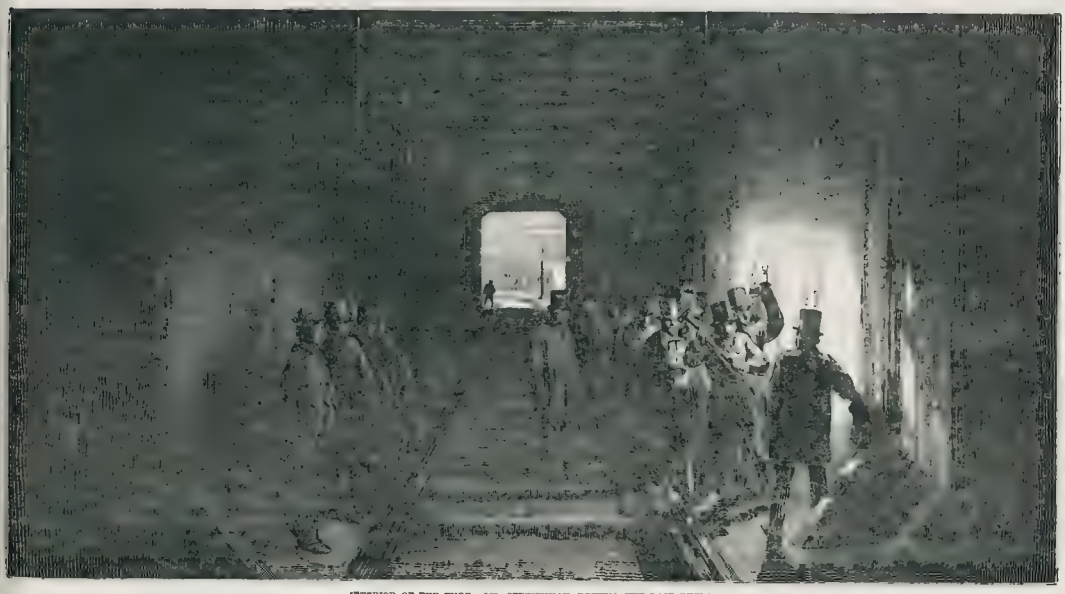
BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Births registered in the week ending Saturday, March 16:—Males, 728; females, 666: total, 1384 Deaths during the same period:—Males, 500; females, 457: total, 957. This return shows an increase in the deaths of nearly 100 on those of the previous week, and a disposition to rise after a continuous fall during a period of five weeks. The average of corresponding weeks in ten years (1840-9) is 991, which, if corrected for increase of population, becomes 1041; the number now returned is therefore less than that average by 84, thus showing a decrease in the corresponding week. It appears that the deaths fluctuated between 792 and 1118, and that the mortality, which showed a decided tendency to increase in later years, rose in the last three years 143 deaths; and that the excess in the present return over that of the former week, the only epidemics observed to be more fatal are hooping-cough, croup, and diarrhœa, which numbered respectively 24, 9, and 14 against 33, 3, and 9 of the previous return; but these diseases, except the last, do not seem to prevail more than usual at this season. The 17 deaths from diarrhœa are double the average of ten corresponding weeks in the three weeks of 1847-49, during which years that disease has increased, they were 10, 19, and 20. The increase is further accounted for by phthisis, the mortality from which has risen to near the average, the numbers being 143 deaths; and from pneumonia, from which there were 82, though neither of these numbers is remarkable as compared with returns for the same season in the last three years.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean daily reading of the barometer at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was 30 [illegible] for the week: on Tuesday it was so high as 30 438; and the mean for the week was 30 292 The temperature of the air was [illegible] the week, which is [illegible] average of the same week seven years. It was [illegible] on the last three days, and Friday and Saturday were from 4 degrees to 6 degrees less than the average of the seven years.



THE BRITANNIA TUBULAR BRIDGE ACROSS THE MENAI STRAITS.—SKETCHED FROM THE ANGLESEY SHORE.

THE BRITANNIA TUBULAR BRIDGE.—ENTRANCE FROM THE BANGOR SIDE.



INTERIOR OF THE TUBE.—MR. STEPHENSON DRIVING THE LAST RIVET.

OPENING OF THE BRITANNIA BRIDGE FOR TRAFFIC.

IN our Journal of March 9, we recorded the passing of the first train through this magnificent structure, on March 5; and then gave the details of the experiments made by Mr. Stephenson and his staff of engineers, to test the capabilities of the tube to sustain the equilibrium of forces.

During the trial of the dead-weights, a very interesting episodical proceeding took place in the interior of the Carnarvonshire land tube that of putting the last rivet into the plates, making exactly the 2,000,000th that have been used. The rivet having been put in by Mr. Mare, was driven home and fastened by Mr. Stephenson, by successive strokes with a huge hammer. This ceremony was followed by the waving of hats and the deafening acclamations of the workpeople.

Mr. Stephenson, in a brief address, eulogised the industry of these men, and their devotion to their work; adding that he could never forget the ingenuity and the labour exhibited in the humbler sphere of the great operation, nor the masterly manner in which the work had been carried out under the superintendence of Mr. T. Fleet, who had distinguished himself as a sterling and honest workman

On Friday and Saturday last (March 15 and 16), Capt. Simmons, the Government Inspector for the Railway Commissioners, made his official inspection of the vast tube, accompanied by Mr. E. Clark (the resident engineer) and Mr. Hedworth Lee (the engineering manager of the Chester and Holyhead line); when a series of important experiments took place to ascertain the power of deflexion and the absolute structural strength of the fabric. The experiments consisted in observing the deflexions under successive loads, the passing of three locomotives, with a train sufficient to cover each of the tubes, through the bridge at various speeds; and the running of locomotives and tenders, without trains, at variable rates of progress. The last experimental Government train was a heavily laden one of coal-waggons, weighing 240 tons, with three locomotive engines. This was run through the tube at the ordinary rate at which such trains travel, from ten to twelve miles an hour; and the deflection, as taken by a deflecto meter fixed in the centre tower, was scarcely perceptible. This train was then drawn completely over one of the tubes, and then left as a dead weight, while Captain Simmons descended, and made a minute inspection of the masonry, the riveting, plate-work, cellular top and bottom of the tubes, rivetting, and other arrangements, with the weapons at command to apply. On returning to the tube, the deflection caused by the load was found to be about three-fourths of an inch. Similar experiments made in the other tubes exemplified the perfect success that has attended the continuity of the beam, the most remarkable feature in the structure, caused by the junction of each of the before isolated tubes, for, as the engines entered upon the small land tube, the motion due to their progressive weight was ascertainable in every tube, even over to the further extremity of 1550 feet in length. Engines with steam were then started through, as fast as practicable, but only at twenty miles an hour, owing to the curves at either end. The deflection was the fraction of an inch, and the vibration scarcely perceptible—the tonnage of steam was found to be lifted through, in reality, as a counterpoise or preventive to vibration. Captain Simmons was understood to be extremely interested with the bold design and immense strength of the remarkable bridge, which is now described by its engineers as strong enough to support a line-of-battle ship suspended, or a load of locomotives piled one on the top of the other over its whole surface. The experiments were considered satisfactory, according to the report that all parts of the stupendous work obeyed the calculated requirements, and to a certain extent determined the conjectural questions of duration and stability to arise under the test of every day usage.

On Monday, the 18th, the Britannia Bridge was opened for traffic. The first passenger train that passed over was the Express from Holyhead, at three o'clock, P.M.; it was crowded with passengers, anxious to be among the first to pass through the tube. The train arrived at Euston-square exactly at eleven o'clock; thus effecting a saving of an hour over the usual transit

The full benefit of the change will not, however, be experienced until the forms of Government routine have had time to come into operation. In the meantime, the mail bags will continue to be taken out of the train at Bangor, and conveyed round in a cart to Llanfair, where the train will await their arrival.

We understand that an invitation was forwarded to Prince Albert, requesting the honour of h s Royal Highness' presence at the opening of the Bridge; and that a courteous reply has been returned, stating that the Prince Consort's engagements prevented his attendance at that time; that the Prince of Wales was too young to undertake the journey alone, and that it was her Majesty's intention to pay a personal visit to the line at an early opportunity

The opening of the line on Monday was celebrated by a dinner at the Royal Hotel, in Holyhead, given by Mr. Hon. W. A. Stanley, M.P., to upwards of 40 or 50 guests present, comprising the officers of the Government and Chester and Holyhead steam-boats, the officers of the Chester and Holyhead Railway, and the principal inhabitants of Holyhead. The toasts of Mr. Stanley, Stephenson, and others were drunk after the usual loyal toasts, and the party broke late hour.

The inauguration was to have taken place on the 17th, St. Patrick's Day, out of compliment to the native Irish; but that day happening to fall on a Sunday, this could not be accomplished.

Our Artist has depicted the train entering the tube from the Bangor side; showing two of the four colossal stone lions—"you must not, not," says Sir F. Head, "compare them to sentinels, for they are couchant—which in pairs terminate the land ends of the abutments that on each side of the Straits laterally support its approaching embankment." They are composed of the same grey Anglesey marble as the towers. These noble animals, which, with their antique, knocker-nosed, pimple-faced Egyptian, instead of the real Numidian form, although sitting, are each twelve feet high, twenty-five feet long, and weigh forty tons. Their appearance from the Bangor side, from the position they occupy being 180 feet in advance of the entrances into the two tubes, which so closely resemble that over the drawbridge into a fortress, that one looks up almost involuntarily for the portcullis.

In the larger View we have the stupendous Bridge seen from the Anglesey shore. Beneath are the deep Menai Straits, in length about 12 miles, through which, impressed between precipitous mountains, the waters of the Irish Sea and of St. George's Channel are not only everlastingly vibrating pace wards and forwards, but at the same time, and from the same causes, are progressively rising or falling from 20 to 25 feet with each successive tide, which, varying its period of high water every day, forms altogether an endless succession of aqueous changes. Sir Francis Head tells us that—

"The point of the Straits which it was desired to cross—although broader than the Mersey at a mile distant, pre-occupied by Mr. Telford's suspension-bridge—was, of course, one of the narrowest that could be selected; in consequence of which, the ebbing and flowing torrent rushes through it with such violence, that, except where there is back-water, it is often impossible for a small boat to pull against it; besides which, the gusts of wind which come down the pass down the ravines, and round the sides of the neigh bouring mountains, are so sudden, and occasionally so violent, that it is as dangerous to sail as it is difficult to row; in short, the wind and the tide together, powerfully and sometimes angrily, seem to vie with each other—like some of Shakespeare's fairies—in exhibiting before the stranger the utmost variety of fantastic changes which it is in the power of each to assume."

Nothing can exceed the descriptive beauty of Sir Francis Head's picture of the country in which the Bridge is situated, as he saw it from a platform fifteen feet above the pinnacle of the Britannia tower, which rises majestically out of the middle of the stream to a height of 230 feet.

"The view was magnificent. On the east and west were to be seen glittering in large masses the Irish Sea and St. George's Channel, connected together by the narrow Straits, which, in their course, meandering in the most graceful curves alike ornamented and impeded by several very small rocks and islands, round and about which the imprisoned stream evidently struggled with great violence. Upon two or three little islands, and upon the main land on the Anglesey side, the humble cottage of the fisherman, who alone inhabited it. About a mile towards the Irish Sea there gracefully hung across the stream, in a festoon, which, in the annals of geography will ever retain the name of Telford, his celebrated suspension-bridge, over which a couple of horses, appearing like mice, were trotting.

"On the north lay extended a verdant country, surmounted in the direction of the new railroad by the great Anglesey Column, erected by the surrounding inhabitants to the noble commander of the cavalry at Waterloo. About two hundred yards beneath splendid testimonial, and adjoining to a little isolated church, there modestly peeped up a very small freestone obelisk, erected by the workmen of the tower on which we stood, as an humble but affecting tribute of regard to some half-dozen of their comrades, who, poor fellows! had been killed in the construction of the Britannia Bridge.

"On the south, the horizon appeared bounded, or rather fortified, by that range of mountains, about forty miles in length, which bear the name of Snowdon, and among which, the lofty, stately Penmanmaur, the warlike Carnedd, and the grand Penmaenbach, with their bold, rugged sides, descend precipitously down the valleys, and then lift up their heads again, in the form of cliffs, like so many gigantic sentinels, to guard the pass. Between the base of these hills and the Straits was the little wooden city built for the artificers and workmen, its blue slates and whitewashed walls strongly contrasting with each other. In this verdant valley, crowded in large masses and patches, the moving multitude through which we had just driven, and who, unsatiated with enjoyment, were still swarming round one object after another, like bees, possessing a dispersion to meet each

"We would willingly conclude our slight panoramic picture by describing the appearance of the moving water gliding past the foot of the tower ar beneath; but on going to the edge of the masonry to look down at it, we must confess that we found it to be utterly impracticable to gaze even for a moment at the dizzy scene." (Highways and Dry-Ways.)

We may here state that the severe towers and abutments are externally composed of grey limestone, from the quarries of Penmon, in Anglesey, and Penrhyn, of which are the same as that of the Britannia, are each 198 feet above high-water, and that they contain 210 tons of cast-iron girders and beams.

Sir F. Head, when he saw one of the tubes in course of being built, observed: "It seemed surprising to us that by any arrangement of materials, it could possibly be made strong enough to support even itself—much less heavily-laden trains of passengers and goods, flying through it, and actua ly passing each other in the air, at railway speed. And the more we called reason and reflection to our assistance, the more incomprehensible did the mystery prac lously appear; for the plate-iron of which this aërial gallery is composed is literally not so thick as the l.d, sides, and bottom which, by heretics outside, are required for an e.m in coffin 6½ feet . . . ; feet wide, and 2 feet deep, of strength nearly sufficient to carry the corpse t . . . tinacated, friendless pauper from the workhouse to his grave! The covering of this trut. passage, 84 feet in l. gth, is literally not thicker than the hide of the elephant! Lastly, it is scarcely thicker than the bark of the 'good old English' oak; and if this noble sovereign, notwithstanding the 'heart' and interior substance of which it boasts, is even in the well-protected park in which it has been born and bred, often prostrated by the storm, how difficult it is to conceive that an attenuated aërial hollow beam, no thicker than its mere rind, should by human science be constituted strong enough to withstand, besides the weight rushing through it, the mutterings and artificial squalls of wind to which throughout its immense length, and at its fearful height, it is permanently to be exposed!"

The first thing that strikes the spectator on approaching the Cyclopean piles of masonry is the vast masses of stone of which they are constructed. The limestone is in such luminous blocks, that to the eye of the uninitiated it seems almost impossible to them; yet they were moved with perfect ease; for such is the ingenuity, simplicity, and strength of the tackle used, that it appeared to be a matter of small moment whether a block of stone weighed one ton or twelve tons.

When the tubes are riveted together into two continuous hollow beams, each 1513 feet in length, as stated by Sir F. Head, it will far surpass in size any piece of wrought-iron work ever before put together, its weight, 9000 tons, being nearly equal to that of two 120-gun ships, having on board, ready for sea, guns, powder, shot, provisions, crew, flags, captains, chaplain, admiral, and all! The cost of this stupendous bridge to the Chester and Holyhead Railway Company, to the 30th of June next, will be a million of money; and the entire expense has been estimated at from £800,000 to £100,000.

The great work has now been four years in hand, and is nearly complete, while Telford's suspension-bridge took nearly seven. The floating and actual transference of the tubes has occupied since June last.

MUSIC.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The scheme of the second concert was Philharmonically orthodox there were two symphonies (Haydn's Letter Q and Mende'sohn's No 2 in A); two overtures (Beethoven's "Leonora" and Bernard Romberg's in D); a violin and a pianoforte concerto, with two singers of the French and German schools to relieve the instrumental pieces. Haydn's excellent work was executed with expression and finesse; the adagio was encored, and the presto finale, a movement in which the composer's contrapuntal treatment is so remarkable, was equally entitled to the compliment. Mendelssohn's symphony was conspicuous for its absence from the programme during the M.S. score. How it is that it has been so rarely heard, it is impossible to guess: positions are superior even to his No. 3, known as the Scotch Symphony. The andante in E minor (the first instance, is full of the most impassioned feeling; and the finale, a presto saltarello, with a tarantella in most tempting contrast, is a masterpiece of counterpoint and picturesque orchestration. The slow movement was encored: the weakest part is the minuetto, a feeble composition, based on Haydn's hints and ideas. The overtures and concertos were finely played, the instruments were in excellent order, and the stringed were functioned in admirable style. The "Leonora" overture, one of the four composed by Beethoven for "Fidelio," went off capitally. The "Romberg" was a novelty to the public, and ranks with the last movement; and the trumpet in the distance, by Mr. T. Harper, was exceedingly effective. The wild, mystical spirit of the composer in this composition was duly appreciated by the conductor and his fine forces. Romberg's overture is not startling, but it is the writing of a classic mind. Henry Blagrove selected Meyseder's Introduction and Polonaise in A to show off his purity of tone and finished execution: he was most deservedly applauded for his excellent playing. Mr. Charles Salaman's taste in choosing the C minor Pianoforte Concerto of Beethoven must be eulogised, but his style is too flippant and his touch too loose to develope the grandeur and passion with the effect the amateur has a right to exact from executants at these concerts. Mr. Salaman, however, is a composer of merit, and has some reputation as a performer of chamber compositions. Mdlle. Charton sang in the first part the romance "Une fée," from Auber's "Domino Noir," and the air "A toi j'ai recours," from "Les Diamans de la Couronne," by the same composer. She was well rescued; but we have heard her sing more advantageously on the stage, for which she has many qualities that call more than in a concert-room. Herr Formes sang airs by Spohr and Mozart in the second part, with his usual energy and coarseness: he is essentially a stage singer. The next concert will be on the 8th of April.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

The 112th anniversary Festival was celebrated on the 15th inst. in Freemasons' Hall, the Duke of Cambridge being the President of the day. The following was the order of the musical scheme after the banquet:—

PART I.—Grace (Dr. Cooke); anthem (Dr. Cooke); the National Anthem, solo verse by Miss E. Lyon; glee, four voices, "Return, blest days," sung by Messrs. Land, Barnby, Bayley, and Lawler (J. S. Smith); duo, "Come away," by Misses A. M. Williams (Mrs. H. Binley), and Poole; "Rule Britannia, and the Tear," Mr. Francis (J. W. Hobbs); fantasia (pianoforte), Miss Kate Loder; "Wedding March" (Mendelssohn); song, "The Friar," Herr Formes (J. W. Phillips); "Non più andrai" (Mozart), Mr. Sims Reeves (Mr. Cooke); "Quando le Venise" (Ernst); glee, "Foresters sound the Cheerful Horn," Messrs. Gray, Land, Bayley, and Bradbury (Sir H. R Bishop).

PART II.—March (Handel); glee, "Who shouldn't breathe soft," Miss E. Lyon, Messrs. Land, Bayley, N. Novello (Webbe); canzonet, "I think of thee," Miss Rainforth (E. B. Harper); song, "The First Violin," Miss Ellen Lyon (Mendelssohn); glee, "In autumn we should drink boys" (Marschner).

The above selection afforded the highest gratification to the company. The galleries were filled with ladies. The reception of Ernst, who, in 1844, gave the society £74, his share of a concert with Moscheles, at which, although the room was crowded, he was unable to play, was with enthusiastic. Miss Kate Loder's playing, and Mr. Reeves's singing, of the air of Lilla introduced in "Lucrezia Borgia" by Lolli, created a great sensation. Formes was encored in Mr. Phillips's song; and the band, with the instruments, including Lazarus, Card, son. and jun, Baumann, C. and T. Harper, Rae, Godfrey, Williams, Cioffi, Prospère, &c., had to repeat the March of Mendelssohn. Bonus and subscriptions were, the Duke of Cambridge, £20; the late J. H. Peacock, of the London Tavern, £100; a young lady (anonymous), ten guineas; R. Addison, Esq., ten guineas; W. Lyall, Esq., five guineas; Dr. Outram, five guineas; Mr. Surman, two guineas; Ciprian Potter, Esq., five guineas; Jules Benedict, Esq., five guineas; Sims Reeves, Esq., five guineas; with guineas from Professor Taylor, Signor Bogues, Mr. T. Chappell, Mr. Benson, &c. The receipts in 1849 were £3138 14s. 5d.; the expenditure, £2488 4s. 1d. Of this latter sum, £1803 3s. 1d. went to aged musicians, widows, and orphans; £258 8s. in temporary relief and funerals; £49 in benefactions to indigent musicians, widows, &c.; having no claim on the institution, leaving only a small amount of about £385 for officers' salaries, printing, &c. Mdlle. Lind gave, in 1849, £150, a part of the proceeds of her Exeter Hall concerts The Royal Duke was very animated in advocating the cause of this charitable institution, and presided with much tact (76) might as as hale as he was. He alluded to the absence of the respected Mr. Parry, whose exertions had been so long appreciated by the society. Another absence was that of the venerable Dr. Crotch, who was elected a member in 1797. Mr. George Anderson, the honorary treasurer, announced the meeting to by at this festival. The annual rehearsal and performance of Handel's "Messiah," for the benefit of the society, will take place on Monday morning, May 6, and Wednesday evening, May 8.

CLASSICAL CHAMBER COMPOSITIONS.

THE MUSICAL UNION.—The first programme of the next season took place on Tuesday, at Willis's Rooms. Mr. John Ella, the director, announces the gratifying fact that the list of members is greater than any previous year. Carrying out the principle that "art belongs to no country," Mr. Ella introduced to his subscribers the late Kate Loder, the gifted pianiste and composer, who has been creating such interest since her début at the Philharmonic concerts; and Mr. Ella intimates that Herr Ese S. Silas, a native of Amsterdam, and Stephen Heller, the celebrated pianiste and composer, will be engaged for the season. Madame Ernst. The programme comprised Hummel's quintet in E flat minor, Op. 82, for piano, violin, viola, violoncello, and contra-basso; Mozart's quartet in D, No. 7; Mendelssohn's trio for piano, violin, and violoncello, in D minor, Op. 49; flat, Op. 20. The executants were, Salaton and Deloffre, 1st and 2nd violins; Hill, viola; Piatti, violoncello; Howell contra basso; Lazarus, clarinet; Baumann, bassoon; Miss Loder; and Miss Kate Loder, pianoforte.

MR. W. S. BENNETT.—The third and last performance of classical pianoforte music by this distinguished composer took place on Tuesday evening, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The scheme included Bach's Sonata No. 2 in A, for piano and violin, played by Mr. Bennett and Herr Molique; Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata in C sharp minor, Op. 27, performed by Mr. Bennett; selections from Mendelssohn's "Songs without Words;" the Kreutzer Sonata, Op. 47, for violin and piano, finely executed by Mr. Bennett and Herr Molique; and gleanings from Mr. Bennett's pianoforte works. Miss Dolby, for whom indulgence was claimed on account of cold, was the vocalist.

HERR MOLIQUE.—At the second concert, on Wednesday evening, at the Hanover Rooms, the programme comprised Beethoven's Quartet in E, Op. 59; Spohr's Quartet in G minor, Op. 61; Onslow's Quintet, for piano, violin, violin; Molique's trio for piano, violin, and violoncel.o, Op. 27, three melodies of second book by Molique for violin and piano; and three German songs by Eckert, Lend.ast, and Schubert. The executants were Mdlle. Schloss, Messrs. W. S. Barrett, A. Mellon, Carrodus, Piatti, and Molique.

MR. LUCAS'S MUSICAL EVENINGS, AND M. ALEXANDRE BILLET'S CONCERTS OF PIANOFORTE MUSIC.—The second concert was given by Mr. Lucas, in his residence, Berners-street, Saloton, Blagrove, Hill, Lucas, and Mr. Lindsay Sloper being the executants; and M. Billet had his second soirée at St. Martin's Hall on Friday.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—The first concert of the Royal Academy of Music will take place this day (Saturday).——The third concert of the Amateur Musical Society will be performed next Monday.——Mr. Nicholson's "Elijah" will be performed next Monday, at Exeter Hall, by the London Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Surman, with Miss C. Hayes, Bassano, Byers, Mrs. Noble, Messrs. Lockey and Lawler, for chief singers.——Mr. Henry Russell will give his entertainment next week at the Lyceum Theatre.——Miss Emma Stanley's "Peep Before and Behind the Curtain" will be presented next Tuesday, at the Princess' Concert-room.——Signor Felice Ronconi will give his third soirée musicale on Wednesday; and, on the same night will be the fifth of the second series of Exeter Hall concerts. Our notices of Spohr's "Last Judgment," Mendelssohn's "Lauda Sion," and Haydn's third Mass, performed on Friday, at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society, conducted by Costa, will appear in our next Number.——There was a concert on Friday night, at the Marylebone Literary Institution.——The third concert of the London Operatic Society took place at Crosby Hall, last Monday, at which selections from the "Somnambula" were sung by Mr. John Rea, Mrs. W. Dixon, Misses M. Murrell, Tweedie, and Hayes; Messrs. Day, Hardinge, Bishop, Bannister, and Leslie. Miss Josephine Hayes has been singing in Limerick, her native town, and Cork in Italian operas, with the greatest enthusiasm; she will appear after Easter at Her Majesty's Theatre

The committee of management for Mr. Platt's farewell concert, on Wednesday, April 24, include Sir G Smart (Chairman), Sir H. R. Bishop, and Mr. Costa; Messrs. Addison, Allan, Anderson, Barret, Baumann, Beale, Benedict, W. S. Bennett, Blagrove, Budd, T. Chappell, I. B. Cramer, Cooke, Cox, Crivelli, D'Almaine, Dickon, C. C. Eames, H. S. Forbes, Grüneisen, J. H. Griesbach, T. Green, Hancock, Harper, Hatton, Hogarth, Holmes, Horsley, M. B., Oxon, Howell, Jullien, Konig, Lavenu, Lazarus, Leader and Cock, H. Leslie, A. Leslie, Lindley, Lucas, Lyon, Mitchell, Neate, A. Novello, C. Oliviere, R. W. Ollivier, W. L. Phillips, M.B., Oxon, Potter, Ribas, Rovedino, Sainton, E. Stephens, Surman, Watkins Williams, and Willy. Treasurer, Mr. T. Chappell; secretary, Mr. S. T. Lyon. The concert is under the immediate patronage of the Queen, Prince Albert, and the Duke of Cambridge. The orchestra will include upwards of 100 players, conducted by Costa, and the most eminent foreign and English artists.——Handel's "Messiah" will be performed next Wednesday, at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmon.. Society, conducted by Costa; with Miss Catherine Hayes, Miss P. Horton, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Herr Formes, as principal vocalists.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Despite the oft-times repeated assertion of the musical purists, that the operas of Verdi possess no one element of excellence, we find his works in the foremost ranks of the lyrical repertoires of every European opera-house. At Paris, in Vienna, in St. Petersburgh, they are in the ascendant. They have attained an universal popul.rity—they are selected by the vocalist as his best medium for display—and they are keenly relished by the various publics.

On Tuesday, the Queen and Prince Albert honoured Her Majesty's Theatre with their presence, and remained to witness the ballet of "Les Metamorphoses."

Verdi's opera of "Nino" was revived, and introduced a new baritone, named Corsini, to the London stage. He is a tall, well-made man, his figure is commanding, his face handsome and expressive, and his action impressive. The duet with Abagail, in the third act, was given with great pathos. His singing throughout was correct, and in good taste. Miss Dolby played Abagail; and her forcible style confirmed the impression conveyed last week by her performance of Medea. Belotti was the High Priest, Gottaspe, which he ably sustained. The Semiramis of his opening night is a character peculiarly suited to Lablache's mode of singing and action. The music was enthusiastic, and his rendering of the aria d'intrata was received with furore. The same result was occasioned by his charming feeling of the duet with Ninira, and in the last trio. The dying scene was natural and unexaggerated. Signor Lorenzo, as Curio, fully established the excellent impression created by his poetical impersonation of Nino. Belotti was in fine voice, and Parodi's Ninira is in our opinion a worthy companion to her Norma and Medea. The theatre was well attended.

ST. JAMES'S.

On Monday night, the one-act operetta, by Myn Herr Von der Does "Le Recluse et le Dragon," the first act of Bi-hichi's "Dame Blanche," and Auber's intere-ting opera, "Le Maçon," were performed. On Wednesday Auber's "Domino Noir" was represented; and the Opéra Comique season terminated with the second act of Auber's "Diamans de la Couronne." The lessee has displayed great zeal and activity in this short musical campaign: in the production of Halévy's "Val d'Andorre," Hérold's "Zampa," Thomas's "Caïd," Adolphe Adam's "Postillon de Lonjumeau," and "Le Roi d'Yvetot," Auber's "Maçon," &c.

ADELPHI.

On Monday, a drama in two acts, by Mr. Douglas Jerrold, was re-produced. It is entitled "The Mother's Dream," having been originally called simply the "Mother," when, about twelve or fifteen years since, it first acted at the Haymarket. The interest is of a psychological character. A wife, while insane, becomes a mother, but loses her child before her recovery—the latter having been stolen by a vindictive nurse. The natural instinct is too strong to be thus defeated. She comes into contact with the child, and a mysterious recognition takes place; afterwards confirmed by the testimony of a dying chief. clerk of the nurse. To bring about the result the aid of somnambulism is resorted to—a state of mind induced by jealousy, for the heroine has been wrought upon to believe that the child is the illicit offspring of her husband. The part is somewhat peculiar, and its conception for much pantomimic effect. The structure of the piece is extremely simple; but its stage arrangements are picturesque, and there is a species of poetic feeling in it which merits encouragement.

HAYMARKET.

Mr. Douglas Jerrold's excellent comedy of "Time works Wonders" was revived on Tuesday, with much of its original cast; but the heroine, Florentine, was performed by Miss Reynolds, instead of Miss Fortescue. The lady acquitted herself with much credit, and added to the assurance that she has lately given, that we have in her a meritorious and improving artiste.

SADLER'S WELLS.

On Wednesday night Shakspeare's great tragedy of "Macbeth" was revived, in a similar but still more correct style of representation with the revival three years ago. Lock's music is omitted; the part of Lady Macduff is restored, together with the ever-pathetic scene of the murder of her and her children; and the catastrophe is rendered, as Shakspeare meant it, not as a melo-dram.tic stage-combat, but the exposition of the gibbeted murderer and defeated dupe of a sanguinary superstition The representation has another advantage on the present, which it had not on the former occasion, in having Miss Glyn as Lady Macbeth. Since this now-celebrated actress's first performance of this rôle in London, she has made a study of all the great female characters in the English drama, and has in all achieved an average, and in some an extraordinary success. She comes, therefore, to a fresh performance of Lady Macbeth with a reputation greatly increased, and with powers much enlarged and strengthened by constant and judicious practice in the personation of the most elevated and difficult Shaksperian parts. Her present performance of Lady Macbeth fully justifies the training and discipline to which she has been subjected, and the merits which it displays are the more remarkable in this first instance in the history of the stage in which a performer has matriculated through a course of training, under the immediate inspection of a metropolitan audience, a trial at once severe and searching, which has been gone from strength in the provinces, far removed from critical censure, and its results only have been exhibited on the London boards. Despite the difficulties of the task, Miss Glyn has not failed in the attempt. The conception of it is unscathed, and, we should add, with distinguished honour. Her Lady Macbeth was, accordingly, now received the advantages of a full study to perfect the conception, and possessed the freshness and matured use of the artiste's powers to render it with full expression. Miss Glyn performed it throughout with finely-developed vigour, and with an energy overwhelming in its effects, obtained by a presiding tone, worthy of the Siddonian school, in which she has now completed her course as a pupil. Her reading of the letter was admirable, and the succeeding soliloquy was delivered with an electric power. Her various interviews with Macbeth rose one above another in grandeur. In the murder and the banquet scenes she was self-possessed, sparkling, sustained, triumphant —the very heroine of crime—the guardian demon of the crowned assassin—the weird-like accessory and human agent of the mysterious spirits that wait on Macbeth's footsteps—the conscious confederate of "fate and metaphysical aid." But this hell-given strength at last fails; and, in the scene of her somnambulism, conscience again indicates its being, and, with all the force of remorse, compels the unrepenting murderess to subside: the

Blood like Queen,
Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands
Took off her life.

Such is Malcolm's account of her end. In this scene of supernaturalism Miss Glyn attains a sublimity which we have not seen exemplified by any other living artist.

The manner in which the tragedy has been placed upon the stage is highly laudable. The reduction of the Witches to the original triad contributes much to the dignity of the action, while it confirms the reality of supernatural intervention Mr. Phelps' Macbeth was distinguished by his usual excellences. It was occasionally animated with a will fire, skilfully indicating the supernal influence under which he acted; but the more valuemance of style was regulated with most excellent judgment. Mr. Phelps' Macbeth is entitled to take rank with the most artistic assumptions of the present day. We have no doubt that the tragedy will have a considerable run.

The following the domestic tragedy of "Isabella; or, the Fatal Marriage," was performed, the part of the heroine being for the first time represented by Miss Glyn. This character is considered as the crowning achievement of dramatic heroines on the British stage. We must, therefore, defer our analysis of the performance until a second opportunity shall make us better acquainted with its especial attributes.

A ball for the benefit of the Jews' Infant School took place on Tuesday night at Willis's Rooms. About 300 individuals were present. The charitable basis in which the members of the Hebrew community are concerned are always distinguished by the brilliancy of the company; and this prevalent characteristic was not concealed last night.

COUNTRY NEWS.

CELEBRATION OF THE MAJORITY OF SIR ROBERT J. BUXTON, BART.—This festal commemoration took place at Shadwell Court, near Thetford, on Wednesday week, and was continued on Thursday and Friday. On Wednesday morning, a procession of children, neatly dressed, made their appearance from the village, and were received by Sir Robert and Lady Buxton at their mansion, and then proceeded to a temporary apartment erected on the lawn, and here morning service was read by the Rev. F. D. Panter. After prayers, Lady Buxton and the two Misses Buxton, sisters of Sir Robert, presented the latter with a peal of bells for the tower of Rushford church. An elegant breakfast to a large circle of friends followed. In the course of the morning, the Norfolk tenantry presented, through Mr. T. Fisher Salter, the agent of Sir Robert Buxton, a magnificent silver salver to the youthful baronet. The park, throughout the day, was open to all visitors. In the evening, a grand dinner and ball were given, in an elegant pavilion, built for the occasion. The guests at the banquet numbered nearly two hundred. The chair was occupied by Sir Montagu Chudleigh, M.P., brother-in-law of Lady Buxton. On his right sat Sir Robert Buxton, and on the immediate left of the chair Lady Buxton. After the loyal toasts had been duly honoured, the President proposed the "health of the bride," which was drunk with great enthusiasm. Sir Robert returned thanks. Lord Sandwich proposed "the health of Lady Buxton," eulogising the care bestowed by her on her son, and praising with much delicacy her own virtues and charities. The toast was received with three times three cheers. Several other toasts were drunk, including the "Health of the chairman," proposed by Mr. Monckton Milnes, M.P., The company then adjourned to the Park, which was brilliantly illuminated, and was witnessed a splendid display of fireworks. The day's proceedings terminated with a ball. On Thursday there were rural sports in the Park; and on Friday the poor were entertained in great numbers.

THE CHESTER COLLEGE, MANCHESTER.—In 1846 the late Mr. John Owens left a splendid bequest, amounting to about £100,000, for the purpose of founding a college in Manchester, and the trustees have now published a report of the proceedings and plans of the general character and plan of the institution, in pursuance of the directions of the testator. It is recommended that the subjects of instruction should include classics, literature, mathematics, natural philosophy, logic, moral and mental philosophy, history and political philosophy, the English language and literature, with the addition, as needed, of chemistry, various branches of natural history, physiology, and (with a special view to commercial education), book-keeping, the geography of commercial productions, and the progress of arts and manufactures, and the general principles of commercial jurisprudence. The six more important branches of knowledge are to be confined to as many professors; while the modern languages, drawing, and other commercial studies, may be entrusted to occasional teachers and lecturers. The salaries of the professors, it is proposed, should not at first exceed two-thirds of the expected annual income or the trust fund (£4000), or £160 exclusive of £250 additional for the professorship of chemistry, various branches of natural history, physiology, and (with a special view to commercial education), book-keeping, the geography of commercial productions, and the progress of arts and manufactures, and the general principles of commercial jurisprudence. The six more important branches of knowledge are to be confined to as many professors; while the modern languages, drawing, and other commercial studies, may be entrusted to occasional teachers and lecturers. The salaries of the professors, it is proposed, should not at first exceed two-thirds of the expected annual income or the trust fund (£4000), or £160 exclusive of £250 additional for the professorship of chemistry, and of the remuneration of occasional teachers. The committee think it desirable that the Owens College should be placed in connexion with the University of London; but at the same time they have given attention to the important subject of the establishment in Manchester of a university, conferring its own degrees without resort to the metropolitan university.

ST. THOMAS'S, BRAMPTON.—MORMON FUNERAL.—Some excitement prevailed on Sunday last amongst the Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, residing at Brampton and in the neighbourhood, in consequence of the Rev. J. B. Jebb, the incumbent of the district, having intimated to the friend of a member of the community, recently deceased, that he could not conscientiously read the burial service of the Church of England at the funeral, of which they had given him formal notice. The Mormons persisted in their determination to bury the corpse in St. Thomas's churchyard, without the least regard to the remonstrances and advice of the incumbent; and under these circumstances it was doubtful how the matter would end. A little before six o'clock on Sunday evening the funeral procession began to move from Factory-street; the Mormons commenced singing, and attracted a considerable number of persons, who accompanied them from motives of curiosity, by the nearest route towards the church. On arriving at the gate of the churchyard it was found closed; but the procession had scarcely halted when the incumbent appeared in his canonicals, and, taking off his hat, proceeded to read the following protest:—"In the name of God, I, John Berridge Jebb, incumbent of the district of St. Thomas's, Brampton, do hereby solemnly protest against the use of the burial service of the Church of England in this case; and I do hereby declare that it is only because I am compelled by the law of the land, that I allow a member of the community of Mormons, or Latter Day Saints, to be interred according to the rites of the Church in the churchyard of St. Thomas's, Brampton; and I further declare that I cannot knowingly officiate in any future interment of the same kind without doing violence to my conscience." After this, the new gentleman shortly addressed the assemblage, stating that, if any of those present wished to know the grounds on which his protest had been made, he would readily explain them in the school room after the service. The Rev. J. Arnold, the curate of the district, then approached the gate, and commenced the service, which was performed in the usual manner. The behaviour of the Mormons during the reading of the protest, and at the service, was decorous and proper. It is, says, from the subsequent representations, believed that they do not desire the service of the Church at the burial of their dead, but only the privilege of burying in the churchyard, even without any religious service.

ESCAPE OF ROBBERY OF JEWELLERY AT BIRMINGHAM.—On Thursday night week last, or early on Friday morning, the premises of Mr. Osborne, manufacturing jeweller, Lichfield-street, Birmingham, were broken open, and gold, silver, and plated goods, consisting of brooches, guards, pencil-cases, seals, rings, studs, pins, snuff-boxes, &c., amounting in value to between £500 and £600, stolen therefrom. In consequence of previous robberies, the doors and window-shutters were iron-plated, and deemed impregnable. The premises were entered by the privy or back yard, which was drained with great dispatch, entering the back part of the warehouse by breaking a hole in the wall, and, having thus obtained ingress, by dint of great labour and the use of crowbars, they forced open the interior doors, and ransacked the most valuable depositories of the stock. No fewer than six crowbars were discovered in the warehouse next morning when the workmen came to their employment. A reward of 100 guineas has been offered for the apprehension of the depredators.

On Saturday night the farm premises of Mr. Till, of Burnham, were destroyed by fire, with the exception of a few sheds. The buildings were insured in the Royal Exchange, and some corn which formed part of their contents in the Sun office. Immediately after the occurrence, another and more extensive fire was observed in the neighbourhood. This resulted in a very large destruction of property on the farm of Mr. Nash, of Langley, about four miles from Burnham. Mr. Nash was also insured. Both fires are believed to be the work of incendiaries, who have of late been very active in the neighbourhood.

EXPLOSION OF FIRE DAMP.—THIRTEEN LIVES LOST.—Between six and seven o'clock on Saturday morning an explosion of fire-damp took place at Messrs. Evans and Turner's colliery, in Haydock, situated about a mile and a half from Newton race-ground (Lancashire). The explosion occurred in what is called the "Rock-pit," and thirteen persons were at her burned or smothered to death, the workings being literally burned to a cinder. It appears that eleven of the parties were working in a drift 1000 yards from the pit eye, without any conductor, when the explosion took place, all of whom were burned to death. Two others were working with and 300 yards nearer the pit eye, and, hearing the explosion, rushed into the face of the fire, instead of making to the pit eye. The names of the sufferers are as follows:—John Durdom and his son (the latter having a wife and five children); William Durdom, brother, wife, and four children, William Knowles, one child and wife; Ralph Unsworth and John, his son (the elder), leaving a wife and four children; John Glare, married, and one child; John Bound, married, and one child; and Thomas Hall, the same name, John Simm, James Bailey, Christopher Hesketh, Thomas Glover, and Joseph Hatton—all young men. The men were allowed safety-lamps, if they thought proper to use them; but there does not appear to have been any person near them working with naked candles or lights, and the men had no run away from the fire the day before the fatal occurrence took place

MURDERS BY A LUNATIC.—Great consternation was excited on Monday morning, in the quiet village of Juniper-green, about five miles south-west of Edinburgh (in the neighbourhood of Currie), by the discovery of the murder of two persons in the house of Dr. Wilson, a resident medical practitioner. The crime must have been immediately on the spot, and upon entering the house found Dr. Wilson in the kitchen, lying upon his back, quite dead, with his head beaten almost to a jelly. The next object which presented itself was the lifeless body of the aged mother of Dr. Wilson, which was found lying in the passage, apparently on the spot where the unfortunate woman had been struck down and killed. The implements employed in these murders appeared to have been the kitchen poker and tongs. A person named Pearson, who was employed occasionally as a lunatic, was apprehended in the house, and has been lodged in the Edinburgh gaol.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT AT ST. VINCENT'S ROCKS, CLIFTON.—On Wednesday morning, at about nine o'clock, an accident of a very shocking kind occurred at Clifton, Bristol, to a young lady named Craven, the daughter of Mr. Craven, solicitor, of the firm of Pripper and Craven. It appears that Mr. Craven's family have been for some time past staying at Clifton for the benefit of their health, and on the morning of the accident seven o'clock, the young lady in question, who was about 17 or 18 years old, was called by her maid, and was then in her usual health. Afterwards she went out, as was her custom, for the purpose of taking a walk on the Downs, from which, as all who have visited the neighbourhood must be aware, an extensive view of the rivers Avon and Severn, and of the mouth of the Bristol Channel, is obtained. Miss Craven, who is rather short-sighted, unfortunately approached too near the edge of the cliff, and the turf, in consequence of the recent continuance of dry weather, being exceedingly dry and slippery, she missed her footing, and after striking against three or four projecting points of the cliff, was precipitated to the bottom, a depth of nearly three hundred feet. A woman who lives in a cottage below, and two men, all of whom saw the unhappy young lady in the act of falling, immediately hastened to the spot, for the purpose of rendering her some assistance, but, of course, all human aid was unavailing. Her skull on the right side was driven in, her limbs fractured, and her body altogether shockingly mutilated. This made the fifth or sixth accident of the kind which has occurred near the same spot during the last six or seven years. Only about twelve months since the Rev. Mr. Hicks, a clergyman of the Church of England, met with his death by falling from the Lion's Head Point, in the same way; and, still more recently, a young lady was precipitated over the rocks, and killed on the spot. The society of merchants, who are lords of the manor-house, caused boards to be erected at different points, cautioning visitors of the danger of walking too near the edge; but it is evident that some more effective measures should be taken.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE coming season may be said to have run its length, the Abingdon Open being the only meeting of any character left in the calendar. On the whole, if one or two clubs tell a little short of the average, the campaign may be put down as a very successful one.

Steeple chasing still shows a bold front, although rapidly approaching its close. The next week, following upon a brilliant one at Warwick, promises well. The fixtures are—Stourbridge on Monday, Chel enham on Tuesday and Wednesday, and Neasdiffe (near Shrewsbury) and the West of Scotland on Thursday. The regular "legitimate" season commences on the following Monday, at Catterick, with a bill of fare which does not appear likely to make "April fools" of its patrons.

IRELAND.

ABOLITION OF THE VICE-ROYALTY.—A meeting was convened on Thursday week, in Dublin, in accordance with the following requisition, which has been addressed to the high-sheriff of Dublin, in the absence of the Lord Mayor:—"A rumour has been for some time prevalent, which we have hitherto regarded as wholly unworthy of credit, that the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland was about being abolished; but which the announcement of the Prime Minister, in answer to an inquiry made to him on the subject, proves to be too well founded. We, the undersigned inhabitants of Dublin, of all creeds and professions, therefore request that you will call, at your earliest convenience, a meeting for the purpose of petitioning against a measure which will, if carried, inevitably bring desolation upon this city and its trade." The signatures comprised a long array of bankers, merchants, and gentlemen, both Radical and Conservative.

THE LORD MAYOR OF DUBLIN.—At a meeting of the corporation of Dublin, held on Tuesday, a motion censuring the absence of Mr. Reynolds, the Lord Mayor, from his post, was, after a warm debate, adjourned for another week to give Mr. Reynolds an opportunity of being present.

The next annual exhibition of the Royal Irish Agricultural Society is to be held in Cork.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY IN ULSTER.—It appears from the accounts from the north of Ireland, that the recent act against party processions has been most effective in preserving the peace. The Belfast Chronicle says:—"From all the inquiries we have been enabled to make, we have every reason to believe that St. Patrick's Day passed over in perfect tranquility." The Newry Telegraph has a statement to the same effect, to which it adds the following. "Castlewallan-ward accounts have reached to the effect that there were no processions, nor any sort of political display."

THREATENED RESIGNATION OF THE MINISTRY.—A meeting of members of Parliament, supporters of the present Government, took place on Tuesday, at Downing-street. About 160 were present. Lord John Russell addressed the meeting. He told them that if Mr. Hutt's motion for that evening, relative to the save-trade, were carried, he would certainly resign the office he held. Mr. Hume did not see the necessity of Lord John Russell giving up office, even if Mr. Hutt carried the motion. Lord Palmerston repeated what Lord John Russell had stated as the course he should himself follow. Lord Harry Vane and Mr. E. Denison both spoke in favour of Mr. Hutt's motion. The meeting then separated, the general feeling being that it would form matter of grave consideration how to vote on this occasion. The result is seen by our Parliamentary report.

ASSOCIATION FOR DIFFUSING PRACTICAL KNOWLEDGE.—The first meeting of the season of this association was held on Tuesday, at the Mechanics' Institute, Southampton-buildings; Mr. B. B. Cabbell, M.P., in the chair. Mr. Joseph Bentley, the secretary and lecturer of the association, said that, in the ten months during which it had been carrying on its operations in the provinces, 170 lectures had been delivered, the average attendance at which was 316. He had made minute inquiries into the physical and moral condition of the lower classes in every place he had visited, and regretted to say that mendicancy, pauperism, and crime had increased during the last three years, and that those evils were now on the decrease, owing chiefly to fiscal causes. The association proposed to give a series of similar practical lectures simultaneously in various parts of the metropolis. The meeting having been addressed by Mr. J. Cochrane, Mr. Hu st, and other gentlemen, resolutions were passed approving of the objects of the society, and calling upon it to commence the proposed lectures without delay; and the proceedings terminated with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

HIGHLAND SOCIETY OF LONDON.—ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF ALEXANDRIA.—On Thursday, the annual dinner of this society took place at the FREEMASONS' TAVERN, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, to commemorate the victory of Alexandria: Lieutenant-General Sir James Macdonnell in the chair, supported by Sir T. M. Wilson, the Chisholm, Major-General Sir John Reid, Sir John Campbell, Captain J. Forbes, Colonel Crabb, Sir Charles Forbes, M.P., &c.; numbering in all about a hundred gentlemen, many of whom were dressed in the Highland costume. The dinner was of a peculiarly national character, and during the entertainment the boys of the Caledonian Asylum paraded round the room, playing the Scotch pipes, and headed by Angus Mackay, the Queen's piper, and Donald Mackay, piper to the Highland Society. Mr. Moody and Mr. Cooper were in attendance for the purpose of supplying the musical portion of the entertainment, and the former sang several Scotch songs, which tended to increase the enthusiasm of the guests. The usual loyal toasts having been drunk, the chairman proposed the "Navy and Army." Captain Forbes returned thanks on the part of the navy, and bore testimony to the bravery of Sir Ralph Abercromby and those who served under him at Alexandria. He (Captain Forbes) served in that battle, and one of the grandest sights he ever witnessed was the fighting of the British navy on that memorable occasion. Sir John Reid acknowledged the compliment on behalf of the army, and alluded in the most eulogistic terms to the gallant conduct of Sir James Macdonnell the hero of Hougoumont—in the field of Waterloo. The Chairman next proposed "The memory of Abercromby, and the heroes who fell with him in Egypt." The toast having been drunk in solemn silence, the chairman proposed "Health and long life to those gentlemen who had survived the glorious campaign, which they had this day met to celebrate." Sir John Reid returned thanks, and took the opportunity of singing a song illustrative of the naval and military achievements of the gallant sons of Scotland. Mr. Guthrie then proposed the President of the Highland Society, Lieutenant-General Sir James Macdonnell, and in doing so he drew attention to the merits of the Highland Society of London. The chairman having acknowledged the compliment, several other toasts were successively proposed and warmly responded to. Amongst them were "The Duke of Wellington," "Chiefs and Clans," "The East India Company's Service," "Sword and Food," "Pipe and Banner," &c. The national enthusiasm was kept up throughout the evening, and the company separated between seven and two o'clock.

JUNCTION OF THE MIDLAND AND LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAYS AT BIRMINGHAM.—The contract for the construction of this connecting loop has been obtained by Messrs. Branson and Gwyther, the eminent builders and railway contractors, of Belmont-row, Birmingham.

EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT AND MEDIÆVAL ART.

On Monday, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Colonel Bouverie, visited the Society of Arts, in John-street, Adelphi, for the purpose of inspecting this Exhibition previous to its being opened to the public. The Prince was received by the Earl of Enniskillen, Mr. Franks, the hon. secretary, Mr. Hope, M.P., Mr. Botfield, M.P., and the gentlemen forming the committee under whose direction this temporary museum has been formed. His Royal Highness expressed himself much gratified; and, indeed, there is here presented so much that is interesting in an antiquarian, historical, and artistic point of view, that this Exhibition can hardly fail to prove highly attractive to all classes of the community. Many, perhaps, who are aware of the inestimable treasures contained in the private cabinets of our nobility and gentry, or which are jealously guarded as precious heirlooms in the coffers of the various colleges and corporate bodies to which they belong, have yet never had any opportunity of examining the numerous specimens of ancient art which now (we believe, for the first time in this metropolis) have been systematically collected and chronologically arranged; indeed, it is doubtful whether such an opportunity may ever again occur; and it should be borne in mind that, on the present occasion, the twofold object has been kept in view, of conveying useful information and practical instruction to the modern artisan, and of affording that gratification which every cultivated mind must feel in the contemplation of all that is rare and exquisite in art.

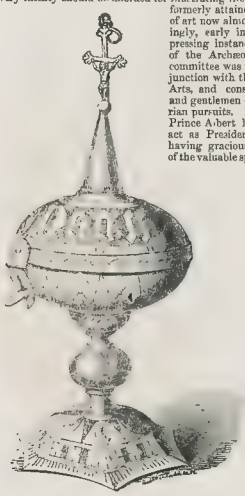
SALT-CELLAR.

It had long been felt that an Exhibition of this description would have a beneficial effect, and various plans for forming one have at different times been suggested; but these attempts have hitherto proved abortive, owing to the difficulties with which the execution of them was surrounded. It was felt, too, that no time could be more appropriate than the present to make an effort for carrying out this long-mooted idea, when, pending the Great Exhibition of the Works of Industry of all Nations in 1851, it had become in the highest degree desirable that every facility should be afforded for illustrating the degree of excellence formerly attained in many branches of art now almost obsolete. Accordingly, early in the year (at the pressing instance of some members of the Archæological Institute) a committee was formed to act in conjunction with that of the Society of Arts, and consisting of noblemen and gentlemen engaged in antiquarian pursuits. His Royal Highness Prince Albert having consented to act as President, and her Majesty having graciously permitted many of the valuable specimens from Windsor Castle to be exhibited, the possessors of works of art have not been slow to follow the illustrious example thus set them, and have placed their treasures at the disposal of the committee: the result has far exceeded the most sanguine anticipations of success.



METAL PYX.

Owing to the immunity which we have so long happily enjoyed from intestine commotions or political revolutions, whilst so many of the nations of Europe have been convulsed, this country has become the receptacle of some of the best productions of those great masters who would only otherwise be known to us by their fame; and when it is considered that few of the objects here exhibited do not possess some private episodes, lending them increased interest in addition to their intrinsic value, it will readily be understood that it has been a matter of no little difficulty to select such subjects for illustration as will be most generally acceptable to our readers.

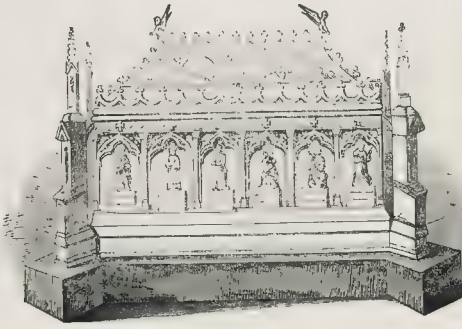
Commencing, therefore, with the earliest periods, we give the following groups of antique Roman bronzes from the cabinet of the Hon. Richard Neville, which, besides presenting a beauty of form not unworthy of Herculaneum, are curious as affording us a specimen of the Roman metal-work during their occupation of Britain—these vases having been found in a barrow at Thornbrough, in Buckinghamshire.

Sir John P. Boileau, Bart. has also contributed several specimens of antique art; and the graceful design of the Roman drinking vase exhibited by him is not unworthy of modern imitation.

There are also some very beautiful Etruscan and Greek vases, exhibited by Mr. Audsley. But it must be admitted that this Exhibition is rather deficient in numerous examples of classic art—and it should not be forgotten that we are principally indebted to the Greeks for the purest forms as models even at the present day; nor have succeeding ages ever been able to surpass those extraordinary productions of the plastic art, which could only have emanated from a people who had attained the height of excellence in design, and reached a degree of mental culture under which alone the universal appreciation of the beau ideal could have been acquired by and fostered amongst them. That the Romans were not slow to recognise this fact, is evident from the adoption both of their style of architecture, and also of the design of many of their utensils in general use; nor was it till the decline of the Empire and the corruption in taste that ensued from excess of luxury, and an increasing intimacy with barbaric nations, that the antique severity of form gave place to the more florid and composite style which immediately preceded the Byzantine era, and which finally proved destructive of anything like simple ideality in art, i. e. art which has the power of pleasing without the adventitious aid of a redundancy of ornament.

It cannot be supposed, however, that the dexterity of handicraft which had been gradually acquired should not have left us some permanent traces of its existence, consequently, although the indications that remain to us of the skill of the artisan during those which are emphatically termed the "dark ages" are necessarily very few, still we might have expected there would have been more specimens illustrative of this particular epoch.

At length the general introduction of Christianity, and the stimulus afforded to the mechanician by the piety of its early professors (creating a demand for the embellishment of their churches and private oratories), introduced a new and necessarily more conventional style of art; and from the tenth to the close of the fifteenth centuries, the specimens of what may be called "Mediæval art" are not only very numerous and curious, but afford undoubted proof of the genius and taste of the artisans of those periods which we are now too apt to consider as utterly rude and unpolished. The reminiscences, too, of an age of chivalry and religious enthusiasm appeal strongly to the beholder in behalf of this section of the Exhibition; and it is to the Crusaders' armour, the jewelled crosier, the carved triptych, the enamelled or highly-wrought reliquary, the sacramental chalice, and the enriched Gothic monstrance, that it will doubtless owe much of its interest. Proceeding to illustrate this class of objects, we have selected a Pyx, or Ciborium, from the museum of the Archæological Institute. This was the vessel in which the paten or holy wafer for sacramental purposes was kept; and the will of Henry VII. supplies us with some curious particulars. From this we learn that for the purpose of furnishing all such parish churches as only possessed one of "copre or tymbre," he directs that a great number of these Pyxes shall be made of silver, and gilt, each of the value of £4; and then describes how that the said Pyxes shall be "garnished with our armes and rede roses, and portcelis crowned." It is worthy of remark, however, that of all the vessels so ordered, few, if any, remain: perhaps, from the circumstance of having the Royal arms engraved on them, they were regarded as family plate by the next successor to the crown, and appropriated accordingly!!



SILVER-GILT SHRINE.

Not the least remarkable of these religious emblems are the shrines or caskets in which the relics of Saints were kept, and which were consequently often set with precious stones of immense value. There is one in the Cathedral of Cologne, decorated with jewels valued at more than £250,000; and the cost and artistic skill lavished on those even of more modest pretensions evince the great care and labour usually bestowed on their production. The beautiful example below of one of the fifteenth century is from the collection of Mr. Magniac. It is of silver gilt, relieved—having figures of Christ and the Apostles placed round it, in canopied niches—and derives a striking effect from the pinnacled buttresses placed at its angles. Although its history is involved in obscurity, the simplicity and elegance of its design attract immediate attention, in preference to those more elaborately-enriched reliquaries, of which there are several in the Exhibition, from the Cathedral of Basle and elsewhere. Several of these shrines are enamelled by artists of Limoges; and amongst other names of scarcely inferior note those of Jean Courtois and Leonard of Limousin may be recognised. But, as it is impossible to do justice to the colours of these exquisite enamels by wood-engravings, it is to be hoped that they will not be overlooked by Mr. Shaw, in his work on the "Decorative Art of the Middle Ages."

Want of space compels us to abbreviate our notice of this portion of the Exhibition, to which the Hon. Robert Curzon, Mr. Hallstone, Rev. Drs. Wiseman and Rock, have largely contributed, and on which we would willingly have lingered; although undoubtedly the period of the Rénaissance, or Cinque-Cento, which we now approach, is that which has contributed most largely, and perhaps most usefully, to the objects had in view, and therefore demands most attention.

Words, indeed, can scarcely convey an idea of the magnificence of the works of these great men, whose talent was principally fostered by the patronage of the Italian merchant princes of the fifteenth century; and the bust of Lorenzo de' Medici, executed in terra cotta by Michael Angelo, could not be more appropriately placed than amidst many of the chef-d'œuvres of those very artists whose skill was acquired in the schools and ateliers of Florence founded and supported by his munificence and that of his illustrious family. The wares of Raffaelle and Luca della Robbia, with those of France and Germany, may each in turn afford a hint to the Birmingham or Staffordshire manufacturer, and of these specimens of pottery there is an endless variety. The elaborate Saltcellar and Candlestick, which we have been enabled to illustrate, form part of the collections of Baron Lionel de and Sir A. Rothschild; and the beautiful white Ewer is the property of Mr. Magniac. These three are fine examples of the ware of Henry II. of France, the secret of making which is now completely lost.

It may not be out of place here also to call attention to the quantity of beautiful Venetian glass, chiefly the property of the Duke of Buccleugh, Mr. Auldjo, and Mr. Farrer, but of which the fine tazza belonging to Sir Charles Price, Bart., presents one of the most elegant examples.

It is a popular fallacy to suppose that glass is, comparatively speaking, a modern invention, and that, too, in spite of numerous vessels, of decidedly Roman manufacture, having been repeatedly found even in England. The Venetians acquired the art (which had probably been almost lost during the dark ages) from Byzantium; together with that of making blood cameos, for which the capital of the Eastern Empire was once so celebrated. Of these there may yet be seen some few interesting specimens in the museums of Vienna, having the early Christian symbols engraved on them. The principal period, however, at which the manufacture of glass flourished at Venice or Murano seems to have been about the middle of the fifteenth century; and few, if any, of the objects exhibited, can claim a higher antiquity than this, although, from an elaborate description in an old MS. of a glass crucifix in the church of the Dominicans, at Treviso, it is manifest that even as early as the year 1170 they had had acquired great perfection in the art.

Unquestionably, however, the chief attraction consists in the metal works of the celebrated Benvenuto Cellini, who was born at Florence in the year 1500, and, having been patronized at the Court of Francis I. of France, a fitting theatre was afforded him for the execution of those great masterpieces which have rendered his name so famous. The Founder's Cup, from Emanuel College, Cambridge, of which we annex a representation, is a good specimen of his skill, and there are several others in the room, from Windsor Castle.

BRONZE VASES.—ROMANO-BRITISH.

The election cup of the Clothworkers' Company, which is commonly called "Pepys' cup," probably because it was presented to them by Samuel Pepys, who, we find, was master in the year 1677, is here given; as are, also, representations of the three Hanaps belonging to the Carpenters' Company, and which were the gifts of sundry masters and wardens in the years 1611 and 1612. At first sight, it strikes us as somewhat singular, that, of the numerous grace-cups or wassail-bowls exhibited by the City companies, none bear the stamp of any very high antiquity; but this will cease to be matter of surprise when it is considered how often in times past the liveries were called upon to make contributions (sometimes facetiously termed "Benevolences") towards the support of foreign wars, by which means they were perpetually impoverished. Even so lately as in the year 1643, during the Civil War, most of the companies were obliged to sell, pawn, or melt up their plate, in order to be enabled to comply with the requisitions of the Parliamentary Commissioners. The goldsmiths, indeed, in the year 1667, sold the greater part of their old plate for the purpose of repairing their hall; and this circumstance will partly account for the fact that they have made no contributions in aid of the present occasion. Not always, however, did the good citizens of London submit with a good grace to these excessive exactions; for we find that a requisition being made upon them in the reign of King Richard II., which they resisted, the Mayor and Aldermen were deposed; for, saith the old chronicler, "Ye would not lend him (the King) a thousand pounds, and ye Kynge rrived them of their liberté, and ordeined that they should no meyhir have, but a wardeyn." A summary method of raising the necessary supplies, which, if it could be successfully practised in these times, would not only save her Majesty's Chancellor of the Exchequer much perplexity, but operate as a wholesome check on the clamorous diatribes of some of her faithful Commons.

The real connoisseur in art will not fail to bestow due attention on the beautiful carvings in wood and ivory, which, indeed, are amongst the chief attractions. There is a series of tablets, the property of Mr. Vulliamy, carved in ivory by Flamingo, representing Bacchantes, which is probably one of the most successful efforts of this celebrated master. Many of the triptychs are very remarkable for the intricacy and extreme delicacy of their design and execution; and, strange as the remark may appear (when it is considered of what comparatively perishable materials this class of ancient work is composed), it is yet no less true, that it affords more accurate information of the peculiarities of style from the twelfth to the seventeenth centuries than any other species of art. Where all have done their best to assist in promoting the objects of this Exhibition, it may seem invidious to particularise any one specimen, except for the purpose of illustration, and we have been obliged to postpone giving the Engravings of the celebrated rosary belonging to Henry VIII., now in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire, and one or two other examples of ancient carving, until a future Number of the Journal, in consequence of the extreme skill required from our Artists in order to do full justice to them. There is a fine carving in stone of the portrait of the Emperor Maximilian and ascribed to Albert Durer; it is the property of her Majesty, and bears the impress of a masterly hand both in its boldness of design and perfect manipulation. The antique sardonyx cameos, contributed by Lord de Manley, are also very fine examples.

The beautiful carved ivory Tankard, of which we subjoin the representation, is the property of Baron Lionel de Rothschild, and is of Flemish workmanship. It is richly mounted in silver, and the allegorical figures surrounding it are thrown out in bold relief.

The fact cannot be disguised however, that, acceptable as this Exhibition is not unlikely to prove in a utilitarian point of view, it owes its origin chiefly to those causes which of late have induced so many men of leisure and learning to devote so much of their time to the study of the science of archæology as a useful accessory to that of history; it is also attributable, in no small degree, to that feeling of reverence for all that relates to our forefathers, which seems inherent, fortunately, in the breast of every Englishman. At the private view on Tuesday last, the rooms were crowded from 10 A.M. till 10 P.M. with the élite of the fashionable world; and certes, to judge from the number of the fair sex who were present, it were a libel on them to assert that antiquity has no charm for them.

The clock and watch work, which has been (with some few exceptions) almost entirely contributed by Mr. Octavius Morgan, M.P., will not fail to attract the notice of the cognoscenti in this subject; though it may be doubtful whether it would be altogether safe to work the longitude at sea by one of those venerable warming-pans, with their cat gut mainsprings, in preference to a chronometer made by M'Cabe or Dent. There is one watch, however, of which we cannot omit mention, since there is a degree of historical interest attached to it, from its having once been the property of that ill-fated monarch, Charles I., by whom it was given to Sir Thomas Herbert, as he was being conducted to the scaffold on the morning of his execution. It remains as an heirloom in his family, and is here exhibited by Mr. Mitford.

Having endeavoured to lay before our readers a brief recital of the more prominent features of this Exhibition, we can only now refer them for further details to the Catalogue itself; the compilation of which under circumstances of great difficulty, reflects much credit upon Mr Isaacs, by whom (subject to the classification adopted by the committee) it was principally prepared; albeit it might have been perhaps more satisfactory, had a more strictly chronological arrangement been attended to.

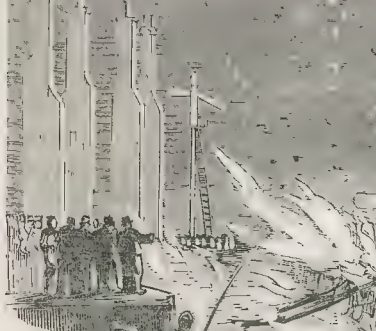
The tapestry surrounding the room was kindly lent for the purpose by the Earl of Granville and Mr. Webb, of Bond-street; and the suits of armour and ancient weapons, which have been tastefully arranged, were placed at the disposal of the committee by the Master-General of the Ordnance. In addition to the companies we have named, the Fishmongers, Sadlers, Ironmongers, Mercers, and Barber-Surgeons have each sent some antique specimen to aid in forming this museum.

FOUNDER'S CUP, EMANUEL COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

It has not been found possible to prepare illustrations of many of the specimens of the greatest interest in time for this day's Journal. Our Artists are now busily engaged in making fac similes (by her Majesty's permission) of the works from the Royal Cabinet; but as it is a work of time to give due effect to the beauty and extreme minuteness of these objects, we have been compelled to postpone the notice of these, and the various other subjects selected for the engraver, until a future Number.

We cannot conclude these observations, however, without remarking that the arts will ever flourish most where the best encouragement is afforded them. We have seen how the enlightened policy and liberal patronage of many of the potentates of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries produced men whose genius shed lustre on themselves, their country, and the age in which they lived; the time is now at hand when the "merchant princes" of England (by emulating those of Italy in bygone ages) may testify that they are not indifferent to the light in which they will be regarded by the future historian of these eventful times.

IVORY TANKARD.



GREAT FIRE AT THE SOUTHERN AND WESTERN RAILWAY STATION, CORK.

On Tuesday morning, a destructive fire broke out in the Cork terminus of the Great Southern and Western Railway. The permanent buildings, the engine and traffic department, were at one time in considerable danger, and would have been very seriously injured were it not for the exertions of the company's officers, who were at the place a few moments after the fire made its appearance. The station-house, comprising the booking-office, the waiting-rooms, the porters' room, the master's office, and the lamp-room, were burned in the ground floor before any effective assistance arrived. The amount of damage is not known as yet, but none of the goods which had been sent in during the day for transmission were injured. The premises are reduced to the four chimney-shafts shown in the accompanying Sketch.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

We understand that arrangements are in contemplation for the appointment of Lieut-General Sir William Gomm, K.C.B., to the situation of Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, vice Sir Willoughby Cotton, G.C.B., who is expected to give up his command in the course of the ensuing autumn.

STATIONS OF HER MAJESTY'S SHIPS.—The squadron under Commodore Martin were at Gibraltar on the 8th inst., to sail shortly for Lisbon, consisting of the Prince Regent, Indefatigable, Theia, Leander, Terrible, Hogue, Encounter, Arrogant, and Janus steam-sloop.

NAVAL CADETS.—The total number of cadets admitted into the royal navy during the year 1849 was 96. The select committee on the army and navy estimates recommended that the number admitted within a year should not exceed 100

THE SLAVE-TRADE.—The total number of deaths which took place amongst the officers and crews of her Majesty's ships employed in the slave-trade on the coast of Africa, from 1840 to 1848 inclusive, was 638. The mortality per cent. varied during that period from 2 1 to 7 9 per cent. The number of slave-vessels captured within the nine years was 625, of which 578 were condemned. The total number of slaves captured was 38,033. Of these, 2192 were taken in 1840; 4519 in 1841; 3177 in 1842; 3612 in 1843; in 1844, 3472; in 1845, 4443; in 1846, 2260, in 1847, 6706; and in 1848, 6712. The number of deaths which occurred among the slaves between capture and adjudication was 564.

EMIGRATION FROM PLYMOUTH.—The number of emigrants from Plymouth during the week was as follows To Port Adelaide, 127 cabin and 2553 steerage passengers, Port Phillip, 123 do. do., Sydney, 141 do. and 3543 do., Port Stephens, 2 do. do., Van Diemen's Land, 23 do. do., 2 do. do., 1134; United States, 0 and 101; Cape of Good Hope, 6 and 338; Port Nicholson, 16 and 83; San Francisco, 15 and 47; making a total of 15,885. The number of ships was —To the Australian colonies, 109 ; Canada, 3 ; Cape of Good Hope, 5 ; Port Natal, 3 ; United States, 2 ; San Francisco, 1 : making a total of 130. In 1847 there were 36 ships and 1230 passengers; in 1848, 85 ships and 2505 passengers.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

At the meeting of the Directors of the Bank of England to "consider of a dividend," the profits of the half-year were not found so having been greater by £16,106, than at the last meeting, when a dividend of 3½ per cent. was declared. A dividend of 4 per cent. for the half-year, free of income-tax, was in consequence resolved to; after payment of which the rest will amount to £3 091 312

The prevailing topic of the week during the past week has been dulness, with a tendency to recede, and this may be greatly ascribed to the Budget. It is considered that a handsome surplus has been frittered away, and every one asks what is to gain by taking the duty off bricks. In the case of a poor man's dwelling, not thirty shillings will be saved, and to the middling classes as well as the labouring poor, no reduction of rent can possibly arise from it. Neither does the alteration in the stamp duties meet with more approbation. It was confidently anticipated that at least one million would be devoted to the reduction of the national debt; consequently, although Consols opened on Monday at an advance of ¼ upon Saturday's closing quotation, a decline to 95¼ rapidly succeeded. By a slight reaction the closing quotation was 95⅝. An improved tone at the opening on Tuesday raised the quotation to 95⅞, but a large sale towards the close of business caused a decline to 95½. The division in the House of Commons on Tuesday was favourable to Ministers, this price was maintained on Wednesday. Absence of business was the marked feature of the Market on Thursday, Consols quoting 95⅛ during the day, with the exception of a brief interval, when the price advanced to 95⅜ Reduced New Three a-Quarter per Cents, Bank Stock, and 1¼d a Stock, are closed. Exchequer Bills have advanced a few shillings, notwithstanding an improved demand for money in the discount market. At the close of the week prices were heavy, quoting—For Consols, 95⅛ ; Three per Cent. Annuities, 1726, 95 ; India Bonds, £1000, 87 p ; Consols for Account, 95⅛ ; India Stock for Account, 266 ; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 63 p ; £500, June, 63 p ; Small, June, 63 p.

There has been some animation in the Foreign Market during the week, Peruvian having recovered the depression of Monday, and Buenos Ayres Stock fluctuating four per cent. Mexican has also improved in consequence of the remaining proportion of the dividend due January, 1847, having been advertised for payment on the 5th of April, by Messrs. Schneider and Co. A new Danish loan for £800,000 sterling is in the market and the scrip is already at 2 pm. The loan is taken at 90, and the first day of payment will be the 22nd of April. Chilian Stock is firm, the dividends on the Six per Cent. and Three per Cent. Stock, due the 31st instant, being both advertised by Baring Brothers and Company. Although at the close of the week business was not very brisk, prices closed as follows:—Brazilian Bonds, 89¾; Ditto, Account, 90; Ditto, Small, 89¾; Buenos Ayres Bonds, 6 per Cents, Account, 84½; Chilian Bonds, 3 per Cent., 60; Danish, Scrip, 2¾ p; Granada Bonds, Deferred, 28½; Mexican, 5 per Cent., Account, Coupons, Account, 30⅝; Peruvian Bonds, 4 per Cent., 73; Ditto, Deferred, 27⅞; Portuguese, 4 per Cent., 33; Russian Bonds, 107; Ditto, Scrip, 1¼ p.; Spanish 5 per Cent., 1840, Account, 16½; Ditto, 3 per Cent., 35¾; Venezuela Bonds, 5 per Cent., 32; Ditto, Deferred, 12; Dutch 2½ per Cent., 59⅝; Ditto, 4 per Cent., Certificates, 88½.

Since last week Scrip Leavy, prices in many instances declining, as the annexed list will show:—Aberdeen, 11¾ ; Caledonian, 10¾ ; Ditto, New, £10, Preferences, 7¾ ; Caster and Holyhead, 2¾ ; Dublin and Belfast, 8 ; Eastern Counties, 2¼ ; Ditto New Preference, 6 p.; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 11¾ ; Ditto, £100, No 2, ¼ premium; East Lincolnshire, Guaranteed, 6 per Cent., 27½ ; Great Northern, 7¾ ; Ditto, ⅛ A, Deferred, 2½ ; Ditto, 5 per Cent., Preference, 10⅝ ; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 27¾ ; Great North of England, 220 ; Great Western, 57⅛ ; Ditto, Fifths, 11 ; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 37¾ xd ; Ditto ditto, 37 ; Ditto, Fifths, 1¾ d ; Ditto, New, Guaranteed Six per Cent., 12½ ; Leeds and Thirsk, 7¾ ; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 80 ; London and North-Western, 104⅝ ; London and South-Western, 53 ; Ditto, New, £50, 8½ ; Ditto, New, £40, 19 ; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, 8 ; Midland, 39 ; Norfolk, 26⅛ ; North British, 8¾ ; Ditto, Quarters, 2½ ; Ditto, Thirds, 3 ; North Staffordshire, 6¾ ; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 16 ; Scottish Central, 124 ; Shrewsbury and Birm., 9 dis., Do., Class B, 4½ ; Do., New, Class, 8 xd ; South-Eastern, 16½ xd ; Ditto, No. 3, 10⅛ ; Ditto, Registered, No. 4, 6½ ; South Wales, 21 ; West Valley, 6 per Cent., Guaranteed, 20½ ; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 13⅝ xd ; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, 8⅞ xd ; Ditto, G N F Preference, 2 ; York and North Midland, 6⅞ xd, D. to, Preference, 4 ; Hull and Selby, 8 ; Hull and Ambens, 6¾ ; Luxembourg, 2½ ; Northern of France, 12¾ ; Rouen and Havre, 9 ; Tours and Nantes, 3¾.

The amount of business transacted in the Consol Market on Friday was comparatively small, but no material fluctuation took place in prices. The Three per Cents, Money, were marked at 85¾. India Bonds, 84a to 87a, and Exchequer Bills, 56a to 63a prem ; Russia Scrip, 1 to ¼ ; and Dutch Scrip, 2 to 2¼ prem. In other Foreign Securities, as well as in Railways Shares, very little doing.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—During the present week the arrivals of English wheat up to our market, coastwise, have amounted to 6400 quarters; by land carriage we have had one very limited scale. To-day the show of samples was trifling, nevertheless the demand for all kinds of wheat was a very dull one, and in some instances the prices barely equal those obtained on Monday. The imports of foreign wheat have been confined to 2450 quarters. Selected qualities were readily sold at previous rates, but all inferior sorts were difficult to dispose of, and the turn lower. Barley in very limited supply, and in good request, at full prices. Beans and peas without change. Oats, in moderate request, at late rates.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 1950 quarters; barley, 3160; malt, 4250; oats, 2940; flour, 1460. Foreign: Wheat, 3480; barley 4680; oats, 8670; flour, 900

English.—Wheat, 39s to 42s new; ditto, 43s to 45s fine ditto, white, 42s to 45s. WATER-CARRIERS AT HAMPSTEAD IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

at one time was also a favourite abode of the Muses: Lord Byron lived in the Vale of Health, as did also Thomas Moore, Leigh Hunt, and Shelley; and here also poor Keats wandered about in search of health. Dr. Johnson is said to have composed his poem, the "Vanity of Human Wishes," in lodgings taken for the benefit of his wife's health at Frognall. Armstrong, the author of the "Art of Health," also lived with his brother in Hampstead, and has sung of it as Hampstead courted by the western wind."

degree to make amends for this ingratitude: monuments have been raised to his memory, and pictures painted and engraved to celebrate his genius. Yet to be treated with respect after death is but a poor recompense for being neglected and persecuted during life.

WATER-CARRIER AT HAMPSTEAD.

The Londoners still crowd to Hampstead in the summer time; and here, forgetting the toils, and cares, and strife of business, may be seen men, women, and children, with light and merry hearts, some seated in groups on the grassy slopes, others running and jumping and enjoying the gambols of country life. Others, again, find diversion and exercise upon the numerous donkeys, which are always in waiting in front of Jack Straw's Castle. The easy distance of Hampstead from London, within a sixpenny ride from the Bank, renders it an accessible as well as delightful resort of the Londoners.

FINE ARTS.—EXHIBITION OF THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

We have this week engraved one of Mr Selous's contributions to the collection, which he terms, in the catalogue, "The First Impression," and appends these words:—"Guttenberg shewing to his wife his first experiment in printing from movable types; supposed to have been the Bible, printed in 1450-60." The picture measures 4 feet 8 inches in height by 6 feet 1 inch in width, and hangs in the South Room. The subject is an extremely interesting one; yet this commemoration prompts painful reflection. Guttenberg, it will be recollected, experienced the hard fate that all great inventors have had to endure from the misconceptions and ingratitude of mankind. Posterity has endeavoured in some

Our second Engraving is from one of Mr. Branwhite's "frost" pictures: it is entitled "The Frozen Mill," and shows us an ice-bound wheel and stream, the bare-boughed trees and distant country relieved with mantlings of snow, and forming altogether a very striking scene, which the artist has admirably painted

LITERATURE.

ANTONINA, OR, THE FALL OF ROME: A ROMANCE OF THE FIFTH CENTURY. By MR. WILKIE COLLINS, Author of the life of William Collins, R.A. In 3 Vols. London: R. Bentley.

The subject chosen by Mr. Collins for his adventurous essay into the regions of Romance, is an ambitious one; it would task the highest powers to do it justice: but though full of difficulties, it is also full of opportunities. Alaric the Goth and Honorius the Emperor of Rome are two characters provided by history, around whose fortunes might be grouped the details of one of the most stupendous tragedies upon record. The period, the manners, the sentiments, the gigantesque proportions of the actors in the scene, the pomp, the grandeur, the terror, and the sublimity of the events that lead, in due succession, to the catastrophe, all offer the most tempting materials to the daring and self-confident writer of fiction. Alaric, or Allraich, himself, who stands in such bold relief on the page of history, is a character of which a man of genius might make anything he pleased. "Instead of attempting," says Gibbon, "the hopeless siege of Ravenna, the prudent leader of the Goths proceeded to Rimini, stretched his ravages along the sea-coast of the Hadriatic, and meditated the conquest of the ancient mistress of the world. An Italian hermit, whose zeal and sanctity were respected by the barbarian themselves, encountered the victorious Monarch, and boldly denounced the indignation of Heaven against the oppressors of the earth; but the Saint himself was confounded by the solemn asseverations of Alaric, that he felt a secret and preternatural impulse which directed and even compelled his march to the gates of Rome. He felt that his genius and his fortune were equal to the most arduous enterprises; and the enthusiasm which he communicated to the Goths insensibly removed the popular and almost superstitious reverence of the nations for the majesty of the Roman name!" To fill up this sketch adequately, and to group around it all the minor characters and events—the love, the passion, and the sufferings of individuals, which give the human interest to tragedy and romance, would be a task worthy of the highest dramatic genius. Nor is the character of Honorius a less inviting one: the contrast presented by the luxurious, half-witted, frivolous, and doomed Emperor of Rome, to the simple, intelligent, severe, and victorious king of the Goths, might be made highly interesting, effective, and powerful. Mr. Collins seems to have been fully aware of the grandeur of the subject, but to have doubted his own powers to do it full justice. He says in his preface:—

It will be observed that the only two historical personages introduced in the following pages (the Emperor Honorius and Alaric) appear as characters of secondary importance, as regards the conduct of the story. Upon consideration of the principle on which he should write, the author doubted the propriety (in his case, at least) of selecting heroes and heroines from the real personages of the period. He feared, on this plea, that, while he was necessarily adding from invention to what was actually known, his fiction might be found in unfavourable contrast with truth, and that he might be able to carry out his story, written upon such a system, without confusing or falsifying dates: thus falling in one main object of his ambition—to make his plot invariably arise; and proceed out of the great historical events of the era exactly in the order in which they occurred.

Under these circumstances, he thought that by forming all his principal characters from imagination, he should be able to mould them as he pleased to the main necessities of the story; to display them, without any impropriety, as influenced in whatever manner appeared most strikingly interesting by its minor incidents; and, further, to make them on all occasions, without trammel or hindrance, the practical exponents of the spirit of the age; of all the various historical illustrations of the period which the author's researches among the existing but equally important authorities, had enabled him to garner up. While, at the same time, the appearance of verisimilitude, necessary to an historical romance, might be imagined, be successfully preserved by the occasional introduction of the principal characters of the period, in those portions of the plot comprising events with which they had been remarkably connected.

Although the Romance produced, in accordance with this plan, is an interesting one, reflecting much credit upon the talents of Mr. Collins, we must say, that it fails to satisfy us of the propriety of his choosing such a subject. In the best development of his powers he has fallen short of its full development; he has excited hopes which he has not been able to gratify, and impressed us with a far stronger idea of his ambition as a writer, than of his maturity of judgment and his brilliancy of invention. He has not faith in himself, and he will not allow his readers to have any faith in his story. He continually reminds them, without the slightest necessity, that he is writing a fiction, and that they are not to believe it to be true; and thrusts upon their attention, remarks which throw them, as it were, off the rail, and destroy the whole illusion, which it should be the first object of a romancist who knows his business to preserve and foster. Such passages as the following will show the faults we mean: "To satisfy the exigencies attaching to the conduct of this story, it is requisite to quit the lounging places of the plebeians in the streets for the couches of the Emperor's palace." And again: "Ere, however, we revert to former actors, or proceed to new characters, it will be requisite to people the streets that we have attempt to revive. By this process it is hoped that the reader will gain that familiarity with the manners and customs of the Romans of the fifth century, on which the influence of this story mainly depends." Again: "In the meantime our revelations are now at an end, and the reader's attention is released to the conduct of the story; but, before we once more address ourselves to its requirements, we would again ask those interested in penetrating the internal causes of the catastrophy of Rome, to meditate for an instant on the particles of evidence which we have here collected for them." "Let them flure to themselves this, and they will be little disposed to cavil at the probability of the scenes which may be led in the future portions of this work." We could cite dozens of similar instances. All these remarks are singularly inartistic and undramatic: they destroy the charm of the fiction, which, for the time being, the reader should imagine to be true, and which, if he is at all disposed to be pleased with the writer, or with the story he tells, he resents at last as positively offensive. These, however, are the faults of inexperience, as are, also, the occasional indications of a confusion of ideas, and the proofs of turgidity of style, in which the writer indulges. We do not, however, feel ourselves called upon to dwell at any further length upon these little matters. There is sufficient evidence in the volumes before us, to show that Mr. Collins has ability to produce far better things. He has considerable dramatic power, and only lacks faith in his readers to make a more perfect use of it. He also possesses tenderness and passion, and a sense of beauty and sublimity in art and nature, which, in due time, if he should cultivate romance writing, will enable him to acquire distinction. As a specimen of the style and treatment in the better parts of the volume, we select the following:—

No brightness gleamed from their armour; no banners waved over their heads; no music sounded among their ranks. Backed by the dreary wood, which still disgorged unceasing additions to the warlike multitudes already encamped; surrounded by the desolate crags, which showed dim, wild, and majestic through the darkness of the gloomy mist; covered by the dusky clouds which covered motionless over the barren mountain-tops, and poured their stormy waters on the uncultivated plains: all that the appearance of the Goths had of terrority in itself, was in awful harmony with the cold and mournful aspect that the face of nature had assumed. Silent—menacing—dark, the army looked the embodiment of its leader's tremendous purpose—the subjugation of Rome.

Conducting Goisvintha quickly through the front files of warriors, her guides, using as a spot of ground which shelved upwards at right angles with the main bed from the woods, desired her to dismount, and, pointing to the group that occupied the place, said, "Yonder is Alaric the king; and with him is Hermanric thy brother."

At whatever point of view it could have been regarded, the assembly of persons thus indicated to Goisvintha must have arrested inattention itself. Near a confused mass of weapons scattered on the ground and reclined a group of warriors, apparently listening to the low, muttered conversation of three men of great age, who rose above them, seated on pieces of rock, and whose long white hair, rough skin dresses, and lean tottering forms appeared in strong contrast with the iron-clad and gigantic figures of their auditors beneath. Above the old man on the high-road was one of Alaric's wagons; and on the heaps of baggage piled against its clumsy wheels, had been chosen the resting-place of the future conqueror of Rome. The top of the vehicle seemed absolutely teeming with a living burden. Perched in every available nook and corner, were women and children of all ages, and weapons and live stock of all varieties. Now a child, lively, mischievous, inquisitive, peered forth over the head of a battering-ram. Now a lean, hungry sheep advanced his inquiring nostrils sadly to the open air, and displayed by the movement the head of a withered old woman, pillowed on his woolly flanks. Here appeared a young girl, struggling, half entombed in shields. There gasped an emaciated camp-follower, nearly suffocated in heaps of furs. The whole scene, with its back ground of great woods, drenched in a vapour of misty rain, with its striking contrasts at one point, and its solemn harmonies at another, presented a vast combination of objects that either startled or awed—a gloomy conjunction of the menacing and the sublime.

Bidding Goisvintha wait near the waggon, one of her conductors approached and motioned aside a young man standing near the king. As the warrior rose in the instant when he joined the soldier who had escorted him, his face was partially concealed by an immense helmet, crowned with a bear's head, the mouth of which, forced open at death, gaped wide as if still raging for prey. But the man had scarcely stated his errand, when he started violently, removed the grim appendage of war, and hastened bare-headed to the side of the waggon where Goisvintha awaited his approach.

The instant he was beheld by the woman, she hastened to meet him, placed the wounded child in his arms, and greeted him with these words:—

"Your brother served in the armies of Rome, when our people were at peace with the Empire. Of his household and his possessions, this is all that the Romans have left."

She ceased, and for an instant the brother and sister regarded each other in touching and expressive silence. The face and manner of the young man (he had numbered only twenty years) expressed a deep sorrow, mainly in its stern tranquility, sincere in its perfect innocence of display. As he looked on the child, his blue eyes, bright, piercing, and lively, softened like a woman's: his lips, hardly hidden by his short beard, closed and quivered, and his chest heaved under the armour that lay upon his noble proportions. There was in this simple, speechless, fearless, melancholy—this exquisite consideration of triumphant strength for suffering weakness, something almost sublime: opposed as it was to the emotions of malignity and despair that appeared in Goisvintha's features. The ferocity that gleamed from her dilated, glaring eyes; the sinister markings that appeared round her pale lips, the swelling of the large veins on her forehead, as distorted her countenance, that the brother and sister, as they stood together, seemed in expression to have changed sexes for the moment. From the warrior came pity for the sufferer—from the mother, indignation for the offence.

The heroine Antonina is a singularly beautiful and well-drawn character. Vetranio the senator, the rich, luxurious, and apparently fascinating debauchee, with his disbelief in human goodness, but who finds that he has a heart to be stirred in its unfathomable depths by love and sorrow, is also exceedingly well pourtrayed. The various incidents in the fearful siege of Rome show power and invention; and the whole romance, notwithstanding the faults of treatment and of style, which we have pointed out, is not the mere discouragement, but for the warning of an ambitious but somewhat inexperienced novelist, is of sufficient beauty to justify the expectation, that at some future day the world will be debtor to Mr. Collins for a far superior work.

WOMAN IN FRANCE DURING THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. By JULIA KAVANAGH. Two Vols., with Portraits. London: Smith, Elder, and Co.

No series of events in modern times have excited such universal interest as the Revolutions in France. For seventy years that country has been in a state of continual disturbance, and appears as little likely at present to settle into quietness and order as at any moment since the commencement of the period. It has not only been disturbed itself—it has been the source of disturbance to Europe. To beat back and keep back the irruptions of its armies and its ideas, has been the great business of the ruling classes—the statesmen and clergy—of other countries. Even at this moment, its ideas are everywhere generating either the excitement of hope or the feeling of alarm. In France, so intensely interesting, the women have long played a conspicuous part; and some of them, as Madame Dudevant, are at this moment, as in the olden time, the foremost in the national ranks. Whatever might be the objects aimed at—the most frivolous pleasures, the mightiest of political changes—they have taken a lead. "The individual," said Montesquieu, speaking of France a century ago, "who should attempt to judge of the Government by the men at the head of affairs, and not by the women who swayed those men, would fall into the same error as he who judges of a machine by its outward action, and not by its secret springs." We may doubt the wisdom of giving such a preponderance to the sex; we may even suspect that some of the violent changes to which France has been subjected may have arisen from their very lively temperament, but that only makes the subject more important and instructive.

At all times the history of woman—the half of the human race, the mothers and sisters of men—and of their peculiar influence and vocations different from those of men—is of great importance. They are as powerful for good or for evil in the quietness of their domestic lives—in moulding the hearts and minds, the thoughts and characters, of their children and relatives—as in courts and cabinets, where they interfere directly with national affairs. Of woman in France, from reign to reign the history is peculiarly interesting; and all nature might be searched in vain for a theme more attractive. It augurs well of a work that the authoress has shown skill in selecting its subject. It is another favourable indication that the authoress is obviously fitted by nature for the task. Of woman, who should write but woman, who alone can comprehend her feelings? Passions, sentiments, motives, views, are as different in the sexes as their organisations are different; and it is probably more easy for a civilised man to comprehend a savage, than for man or woman fully to comprehend the feelings of the other sex. As Tennyson says—

—woman is not undeveloped man,
But diverse.
Self-reverent each and reverencing each
Distinct in individualities.

The theme, then, selected by Miss Kavanagh is a most interesting one, and, for a lady, a most suitable one. We have nothing to object to her volumes but that they are not more extensive. She has acted, as of necessity, on a principle of selection, and could only take a small part. The selection, however, is good, the descriptions excellent; still, the work is insufficient. It does not give us the whole, nor even nearly enough, of the important and delightful subject. The defect is regrettable, and we trust that Miss Kavanagh, who has generally found the encouragement she deserves, will work the mine till she has exhausted nearly all its treasure. The public appetite will be only whetted by the present volumes, and will not be satiated till it has received, in a little more condensed form, and in a little more easy and more familiar style, purified as the present volumes are of all indelicacies, a complete and popular history of the leading women of France. Many of the persons indicated by Miss Kavanagh must be fully described; many, too, that are not mentioned, because it is supposed they are generally known must be incorporated with the work, and the subject which has been so well begun, must be completed. It may require, perhaps, almost the labour of a life, but on what can it be better bestowed? Miss Kavanagh would be at once the most instructive and attractive of authoresses.

The work, in an introductory chapter, full of sensible remarks, makes the public acquainted with the state of French society at the close of the reign of Louis XIV. It then gives us a sketch of the Court of the Regent and of some of the ladies of the period. The reign of Louis XV., his mistresses, and most of the influential women of the period, and the men they associated with or used for their purposes, follow. The prominent literary characteristics of the age are not overlooked. Afterwards we have the reign of Louis XVI. and the whole history of Marie Antoinette, and most of the celebrated women of the day. Finally, we have the first revolution, when woman was the victim of much brutality, and triumphed more in her sufferings by the display of heroic virtues than ever she triumphed in the days of Court splendour and in the exercise of imperial power. Many of the persons referred to and the scenes described are already well known; but some of them, as Madame Roland and Charlotte Corday, have never been so well described in our language as by Miss Kavanagh. Nor has this part of French biography ever been so neatly and concisely brought before the English public. To understand the origin of the first French revolution, the state of society immediately anterior to that period must be known; and we take, therefore, for our first extract, a passage directly bearing on that point. The prostitution both of political power and religion is exemplified by the proceedings of Madame de Berri, one of the daughters of the Regent, the Duke of Orleans. The passage may be quoted as a test of the character of the ruling classes:—

Madame de Berri, who had been married at an early age to Louis the Fourteenth's youngest grandson, was a handsome, but violent and sensual woman. Her abandoned profligacy recalled that of those dissolute Princesses who filled Rome with the scandal of their excesses, towards the decline of the Empire. Her inordinate ambition had induced her to lay those inclinations under control until her marriage was over; but, two days after the ceremony, she was brought home intoxicated from a supper at court. Her intemperance and profligacy henceforth became notorious. Her husband, who was, at first, passionately attached to her, soon grew disgusted with her conduct. This feeling was increased by the impiety she affected in her conversations with her father, who had brought her up in his Atheistical principles. So reckless did Madame de Berri become, that she seriously insisted on flying from the kingdom, with her lover, La Haye. The danger, however, terrified him; he revealed everything to her father, who, with much difficulty, made her give up this wild plan. The early death of her husband, by giving her more freedom, increased her license; and the accession of the Regent to power, removed the slight restraint imposed upon her by Louis the Fourteenth and Madame de Maintenon.

Her arrogance, which had always been great, henceforth became excessive. Madame de Berri soon assumed the style of Sovereign Princess; she gave audiences at which persons crossed their arms in the warlike sound of trumpets, and received foreign ambassadors, enthroned in state under a canopy. Even whilst degrading herself by every vice, she exacted the most extravagant homages, and was treated with indignation that her Princely rank could not excuse her from the contempt due to her profligacy.

Notwithstanding her Atheism and licentiousness, Madame de Berri had sudden fits of terror and devotion, which led her to retire occasionally to a convent of Carmelites. The whole sisterhood were then edified by the fervour she displayed, and some of the simple-minded nuns deplored in her presence the malice of those who calumniated so pious a Princess. Madame de Berri laughed to hear them speak thus; and, after a few days spent in austerity, returned to her former mode of life. Her chief lover was Riom, a nobleman of high birth, whose handsome and commanding appearance showed the depravity of his unhappy woman's taste. Her love for him resembled infatuation, and increased with his harshness and tyranny. Riom only followed in this the lessons of his uncle Lauzun, the same who was secretly married to Mademoiselle de Montpensier; and who averred that the Bourbons required to be led with a high hand. Madame de Berri soon became the slave of her lover, who loaded her with public insults, and made her resent, by her intimacy his obscure or degraded companions, though, according to the laws of etiquette, no man, unless he were a Prince of the blood, would be admitted at her table. The Regent, indignant, not so much at his daughter's immorality as at the power assumed by Riom, often threatened to chastise his insolence; but Madame de Berri, who exercised over her father that ascendancy which her lover possessed over her, became so violent and irritated, that the Duke was glad to ask for his forgiveness. The scandal caused by this intrigue increased, when it was known that the Princess had given birth to a child in the Palace of the Luxembourg. As she was dangerously ill, the Curé of Saint Sulpice offered her the rites of the church. She accepted; but when he came, and made it a condition that Riom and her confidante, Madame de Mouchy, should both leave the palace, she refused indignantly. The Regent interfered; but could not induce either his daughter or the priest to relent. When he appealed to the Cardinal de Noailles, the austere prelate approved of the conduct of the Curé, and ordered him not to leave the chamber door of the Princess, lest some more complaisant priest should administer to her privately. The Curé obeyed; and, whenever he was compelled to abandon his post, he was replaced by another clergyman to replace him. When Madame de Berri was declared out of danger, he retired, but not till then. This conduct, which created great scandal, was, nevertheless, generally approved, as a bold and uncompromising reproof administered to the corruption of the age.

Madame de Berri vainly sought to lessen the effect of this disgraceful affair by devoting herself and the whole household to the Virgin for the space of six months; during which time they appeared clad in white from head to foot, to the great amusement of the Parisians.

That is a specimen of the profligacy of the members of the Royal Family, and of the general manner in which religion was at once mocked at and made subservient to licentiousness. The Court of Louis XV. was more profligate—if it had a shade more decency, which is doubtful—than the Court of the Regent; and the manner in which he lived with numerous mistresses made that kind of profligacy the rule of the land. Nothing could then be done or obtained but by the influence of abandoned women; Princes of the blood and men of the highest rank sought favour from them—the dignities of the Church, and the honours of the State, were bestowed at their bidding. A most influential person of the period was an ex-nun, Madame Tencin, an intriguant, who probably revenged herself—as the women of France generally did—for the conventual austerity to which they were subjected in youth, by the profligacy of her mature age. She had several lovers, and at least one child, whom she deserted, to be brought up as a foundling, and who became, as M. d'Alembert, the most renowned mathematician of his age. Madame de Deffand was another character of the same kind—a selfish intriguant, whom all the men admired. These and other similar ladies gathered round them the men of rank, the wits, the philosophers of France. Their conversation and letters were remarkable for brilliancy; and while the Monarch was given up to voluptuousness, the literature of the age was directed by selfish heartless profligacy. That the bulk of the common people were at the same time subject to intolerable oppression—were exposed to forced labour and forced taxation, from which the nobility and gentry were exempted—that they had one or more tyrants in every village, and no protector—are matters of common notoriety; and it was such oppression, joined with such profligacy, continued through a whole century, that brought on the first Revolution—sent Royalty, which had become contemptible, to the scaffold—and carried the war and pillage to the châteaux of every nobleman in France. By the example of the Court and the priesthood, sentiments of religion and morality had been swept out of the national mind, and little remained but the vilest passions, subject to no restraint. Louis XVI. and his Queen were unfortunate in coming after predecessors far more guilty than they were, and were visited in the third and fourth generation for the crimes of their ancestors; but even they were not without great faults. The King neglected his duties for making locks, was ruled by

We will take another extract relating to the period just prior revolution. Madame de Genlis, the instructress of Louis Phi and the writer of several works of fiction of a moral character. was of the most esteemed persons under the old régime. Miss Kavan which continued till her death. The following is a descript mode of exercising her influence:—

The Duke of Orleans had been for many years connected with a name of Marquise. This circumstance gave great annoyance to the lad its other court, who, unable to associate with the mistress of the Prince, we to dissociate from the fêtes and pleasure parties he gave at his various re debarred from the Marquise. In order to obviate so serious an evil, they gladly agreed— people never speak of such things—to give the Duke, if possible, a lad own rank; a nobler born accomplished lady, who would in her turn honours of her lover's princely entertainments, and to the Marchioness of Montesson, associate without degradation. They fixed upon the latter, as much in love as his a handsome widow—both whom the Prince was evidently as much in love as his philosophic nature would allow him to be with any one—and the person most likely, by her innate nature, to effect their projected purpose. Madame de Montesson was accordingly, studiously trained to the Duke of Orleans. Her beauty, her talents, her virtues, were so constantly exalted in his presence, that the weak-minded Duke at last thought she must certainly be a superior order of being, she fetched a infinite fact, he resolved of throwing the Duke's way, she fetched a infinite fact, he resolved of throwing herself in the Count of Gulnes. This noble and devoted and despairing passion for the Count of Gulnes. The old Duke, affected by the secret, and treated her with marked indifference. The old Duke, affected by the sorrow of the woman he loved, sought to console her Madame de Montesson, by secretly accepted his friendship, and, after heightening his passion by every art known to her profession, privately married him. The great disparity of rank between them made him hesitate to offer her his hand. The nobility of the principles of the Duke of Orleans, and his generosity, induced him to overcome the pro- posal. In this difference he would probably have given up Madame de Montesson altogether, if her address had not interfered. Madame de Genlis wished to secure her aunt. She also contrained the ambitious and mi- mercenary spirit of her brother, by persuading him to believe that he would succeed with the Princess family. She accordingly employed all her tact and talent to reduce the old Duke into the proposed marriage. He wavered long, but her arts finally triumphed, and in the year 1773 Madame de Montesson became the wife of one of the first Princes of the Royal blood of France.

For the events of the Revolution, when woman in France nobly redeemed her errors or p attained the martyrdom they brought on her, we must refer to the book. We must stop. Miss Kavanagh treats a fascinating subject in a graphic and pleasant manner; and, though she do not tell muc that is new to the diligent readers of French memoirs, her work will convey to the public a great mass of novel information.

MEMOIRS OF THE LIFE AND WRITINGS OF THOMAS CHALMERS, D.D., LL.D. By his Son-in-Law, the REV. WM. HANNA, LL.D. Vol. I. Sutherland and Knox, Edinburgh.

The name of Dr. Chalmers stands so high in the estimation of the religious public, that any work associated with it is sure to command the most profound consideration. In the volume before us Dr Chalmers is, to a considerable extent, his own biographer—a circumstance which greatly enhances its value. It is besides illustrated with the excellent portrait of him, taken in 1821, by Mr. Andrew Geddes, presenting him in the full maturity of manhood, such as he was at the age of forty-one, and in the vigour of his fame, in the vigour of his faculties. The title bears a beautiful vignette of the church at Kilmany. The earlier period of Dr. Chalmers' life is full of intellectual interest. "Although," says his biographer, "enjoying, for the benefit of University instruction, intellectual habits of no ordinary description, although brought up in the bosom of a religious family, he came at length to derive his Christianity purely and solely from the sacred oracles." Dr. Chalmers had experience both of domestic (in the person of his nurse) and school tyranny. At Anstruther School he was rather an idle scholar, but nevertheless showed facility in learning. His education was backward: at twelve years old he could not write correct English, and in Latin he was scarcely deficient. Two sessions in St. Andrew's University failed to mend the matter much; but the next year he applied himself in earnest to mathematical studies, and began more hopeful habits of application. He had always shown strength of will, and this had at length found a proper direction. He learned to appreciate the value of geometry as a part of intellectual training.

At first starting, Chalmers found the Church of Scotland singularly insincere in its theological bias. Calvinism was unpopular with the preachers, who sought to modify the severity of its doctrines. Though self-devoted to the Church, Chalmers was deterred from the study of Christian argument by the potential infidelity of its most able teachers. At length, however, the scheme of Jonathan Edwards presented him wholly, and he accepted the logical theory as the completest demonstration. Chalmers' earliest compositions are not marked with any degree of imaginative power. He began with a cold intellectuality, and gradually warmed as he progressed, until he became heated into eloquence and kindled into fancy. His early progress was greatly due to the debating societies formed among the students.

Dr. Chalmers commenced life as a private tutor, and as such had to endure the customary contempt of families who misappreciate the office of educator, and regard the teacher as a servant. But from this ordeal he was soon released, being, while yet scarcely nineteen, admitted as a licentiate preacher, on the plea that he had manifested "rare and singular qualities," thus anticipating, by more than two years the ordinary period of ordination. This took place on the 31st of July, in the year 1799. Chalmers' first sermon, however, was not preached until the 25th August. Chalmers' mind had yet great trials to suffer. Mirabaud's "System of Nature" had undone much that Jonathan Edwards had done. He found [illegible] to be no god. Shortly [illegible] arrived, he called it to be no god. Chalmers now rightly felt that he "was formed for a life of constant and unremitting activity." An allusion which at this period he made to the science of geology, then in its infancy, merits citation:—

It is the object of geology to lay before you the present arrangement of those materials of which the earth is composed, to conjecture the various changes which may have taken place on the surface of the globe, and to trace the history of its physical revolutions. This you may say, is a daring enterprise; but what enterprise too daring for the intrepidity of philosophical speculation? Who can presume to restrain the flight of human curiosity? spread hands, Florence beheld him give way to a burst of such irrepressible agony, that the hot tears made their way between his transparent hands, and the arteries of frame shook with sobs.

Trembling with sympathising emotion, Florence sank back in the chair she had quitted; she longed to throw herself on his neck, to beseech him to be comforted, to breathe of hope, but she felt she dared not; at length, and unable to resist the impulse, she glided forward and knelt beside him.

"Florence, my beloved sister! oh, I have terrified you, I forgot your presence, I imagined myself alone; dearest, heed it not, I am better now, it was bodily weakness, only weakness, which will overpower me sometimes; you must not mind me!"

It was several minutes ere Florence could reply, but as quickly as she could, she reverted to those treasured manuscripts, beseeching him to let her read them, it were the last service she had done so. With a faint smile he acceded. Florence, herself, was surprised; never had it seemed to her that such beautiful [illegible] Blount, such touching pathos, had breathed so power- [illegible] as these. A new spirit appeared to have lighted on them; [illegible] mournfully detached pieces, forming, indeed, a treasured volume. He showed her, too, the beautiful designs with which it was to be illustrated; and Florence no longer marvelled at the burst of agony wrung from him by the thought, that those emanations, of no common genius, must pass away and be forgotten; but even she guessed not the real reason of his longing, and the poet burst [illegible]

"I [illegible] said mournfully, "when in all the glow and heat of composition, that I was bequeathing a glorious gift to my country, wreathing my name with immortality. I seemed to forget all the difficulties, the impracticabilities, which prevented the attainment of my darling wish; but now, dearest, now I feel it is a shadow that I have sought, a vain, shapeless shadow; it needs influence, wealth, or, to say the least, a name, and I have neither—no, no, they must die with me."

"Die!" murmured Florence, almost inaudibly, and she paused in deep and mournful thought; "but if you were strong and well, Walter, would you not make some effort yourself? at least ask the opinion of some good publisher; it might not then be so impossible as it now seems."

"If I were well, oh! Florence, I should do many things, and this would be one of them, but I dare not think of this," he added hurriedly, and evidently with pain; "the struggle for submission has been mine only too lately. I know not how to trace, to love, the mandate that chainsmit me, a useless burden, to my couch, when every exertion is needed to support my beloved mother and my helpless sisters; and yet, oh! Florence, morning, noon, and night, I pray to see and feel this; for my better spirit tells me that good it must be, or it would not come from an all-loving God."

"And it will grant us both this blessed trust in his own good time, my brother: but in this case, dearest Walter, let me set for you, trust the MS. to me, and let me endeavour to do with it as you would yourself."

Her brother looked at her with affection and astonishment.

"You know not the difficulties you undertake, my Florence," he said; "how many hopes will be raised only to be disappointed; how much fatigue encountered!"

"I care not," was her instant answer; "I am so accustomed now to independent wanderings, that even the crowded streets of London have lost their terrors: do not fear for me; and if I should succeed, dear Walter, what would previous disappointments, previous anxiety be then?"

The beaming countenance of the young poet was her truest answer, and once the precious MS. deposited in her hands, Florence gave him no difficulty to defer her; weary and often exhausted as she felt from seven, sometimes eight successive hours passed in teaching, she would not return home till she had accomplished something in the furtherance of her trust.

Florence is ultimately successful in her efforts. She finds a publisher, who finds a physician. The following interview is touching:—

Much affected, Morton pressed his hand, and entreated him to set his mind at rest, and not to dwell on such gloomy fancies—he was sure they had no foundation. If Florence had still been in the room, she would not have watched Sir Charles's expressive countenance in vain: a powerful interest first removed the unnecessary perturbation; then strong emotion; and finally he rose from his seat and strode to the window. Recalled by Morton's questions if he could not prescribe for Mr. Leslie, to prevent such a constant recurrence of excitement; he asked no question, but hastily wrote a prescription, saying, as he did so,

"This will calm, I wish I could say cure, young man; change your ardent temperament, your throbbing brain, for the matter-of-fact, the unimpassioned, and health may return."

"Change!" responded Walter, clasping his hands with strong emotion "change!—become like the crowd—the hireling herd—that know no emotion but mirth, no fear but for gold—with no vision of beauty, of truth, of good! No, no; better twenty years of suffering body with mental joy, than seventy of such health and such existence. I would not change!"

But though Florence could not summon sufficient courage to remain while the interview lasted, suspense became so intolerable that she felt as if the most dreaded reality could be better borne. Hardly knowing her own intentions, she waited in a little sitting-room below, till they descended; then, summoning, at the word, the gentle hold of Sir Charles's hand, and looked up in his face with cheeks and lips perfectly blanched, and every effort to speak died away in indistinct murmurs. Only too well accustomed to such painful scenes, the physician hastily led her within the parlour and closed the door; the action recalled Florence, and she gasped forth—

"Oh! is there not hope? will you not save him? Tell me he will not die!"

"My good young lady, life and death are not in the hands of man; yet it were cruel, positively cruel, to give you hope. Your brother's mind has been his poison. I dare not tell you—he may live."

"But he will linger—he may be spared us many years yet," persisted Florence, in the wild accents of one determined against belief. "It cannot be that he will go now—so young—so—but forgive me," she added, when the hysterical sobs gave way, "I tell me, I am better now—I can hear it—I ought to know, for my poor mother's sake, how long we may call him ours?"

The reply was given kindly and carefully; but what language, what gentleness may soften the bitter anguish of such words? Florence heard, and yet she sank nor. She bade farewell to those kind friends; she saw them go, but still she stood as if thought, sense, life itself were frozen; and then she rushed up the stairs into her own room, secured the door, and sinking on her knees, buried her face in the bed-clothes, and her slight frame shook beneath its agony.

Another hour, and that suffering girl was seated by her brother's couch, holding his hand in hers, and with a marble cheek, but faint sweet smile, listening to and sympathising in his lovely dreams of fame. And such is woman; her tears are with her God, her smile with man: the heart may break, and who shall know it?

This is decidedly good writing. Altogether we may congratulate Miss Aguilar on the spirit, motive, and execution of this story. Her aims are eminently moral, and her cause comes recommended by the most beautiful associations. These, connected with the skill here evinced in their development, ensure the success of her labours.

THE POOR ARTIST; OR, SEVEN EYESIGHTS AND ONE OBJECT. Van Voorst.

In these days, when all manner of "glorious things" are said and sung in praise of the dignity of labour, there is, nevertheless, a growing tendency to abridge it wherever possible. Work is esteemed more for its results than for itself. Useless labour is a needless waste, and to prevent it a wise economy. All manner of facilities are afforded. Learning is made easy and science beautiful. In both, aforetime, we found abundance of the fabulous, by which students were misled, daily, and perplexed. But the fabulous was substituted for science and learning, and much labour has it since cost us to distinguish it from them. The mind still lingers upon it with delight, and there is still occasionally a desire to unite it with them. The present work is an attempt, as acknowledged by its epigram or motto, to enshrine "Science in Fable;" it aims, in the language of the preface, "to give a romantic account of science in illustrating the different character of vision in different creatures."

The attempt deserves commendation, as much for its novelty, its specific bearing being considered, as for its utility. It cannot but aid in the cultivation of what the writer aptly calls the "reasoning imagination." The faculty has large play in all philosophising conducted on generous principles.

The principle sought to be illustrated in this little work is that of the Oriental sage, who declares that, with each individual eye—e., it is "the thing behind the eye which sees," that causes each individual "really to see the self-same object differently, and sometimes with a very extraordinary difference; or, perhaps, not to see it at all, though it lies palpable to view." This principle is in the book exemplified by an account of "Six sketches, derived from the minute observation of one object by six different eyesights." The rationale is thus given:—

While the difference that exists between ocular perceptions among those of the same species is undeniable by reason (though constantly denied in practice, because each person is apt to make his own eyes the standard for all others), these sketches yet more forcibly illustrate and demonstrate the wonderful difference which exists between the eyes of creatures of a different species; whereby it seems clear, to adopt the words of a well-known artist and mathematician, that an external object varies with the nature of the eyes that look at it; the object is the first term, or A; the mind the third term, or C; and the peculiar eyes are the intermediate term, or X; representing and interpreting the object according to their peculiar powers. Hence, it follows that there are many different external worlds, as there are different species of eyes. "Visionary," do not you call it? dreamy abstraction, and so forth, through all the usual common-places of Materialists,—no more wise, I thank you—who talk as if they scorned to have so much as a thing as the soul within them! Why, the said earth is not more palpable to reason, though it may be more palpable to everyday feet and horses' hoofs.

"Yes, we do call it a dream!" boldly shouted two or three voices.

"A practical cradle!—a vision!" cried others, with taunting jocularity.

"I fly-ha!" sounded one of the fox-hunters.

"To those," exclaimed our excited friend, with a grave look, "who can eat beef-steaks heartily, and seek to know no more, the obvious facts of Nature as they seem and serve, are enough; but to those who have any anxiety to advance as far as is permitted to man in the study of the miraculous world that surrounds us, the wonderful differences of the visual faculty must ever possess a profound interest."

Our Artist lost this patron soon after, together with sundry engagements which had been made with certain of the guests before dinner. He also found, in other quarters, that he was not invited so often, and that the number of his commissions for pictures were rapidly falling off. One day he received an anonymous letter, containing these words:—

"Stick to cattle and clover-fields, my boy. Be wise."

He showed it to Aurelia. She smiled, and said she thought it looked like her uncle's hand; adding, that perhaps it would be well if he did not insist so often on what he had learned from sources not easily accessible to other people.

Our friend had suffered so much in his long struggles to obtain success, that he did not altogether turn a deaf ear to his counsel. Still, among his friends—those whom he felt he "could trust,"—he continually adverted to the sketches which had illustrated, if not deciphered—and for the first time the wonderful fact in Nature, that there are as many different worlds as there are different eyes—or minds: and that the Creator has thus made, for each different species an infinity out of one set of objects.

Our readers will expect that we should condescend to some explanation. A Bee, an Ant, a Spider, a climbing Perch, a Cat, a Bat, a Horse, and the artist himself, with his spiritual vision open, present different conformations of organs, differing also in number, size, and position, and consequently different representations of one and the same object. These are very cleverly and amusingly described, and we much regret that our space will not permit their repetition. The object itself was nothing, but "a bright new sovereign," with a large drop of dew upon its surface, which, by its own senses he measures yours; by his own excellence or incapacity he estimates the qualities of others. The far sight miscalculates the near sight, the near sight miscalculates the far; the simple sight, which only sees unity, cannot form any idea of the double sight, which takes in two different objects—one with each eye; nor can it judge of the compound sight, which sees only a complication of parts—perhaps only one part distinctly as a stamp, and the rest as in a dim vision of parts—perhaps only one part distinctly as a stamp, and the rest as in a dim kaleidoscope of motions. We speak of many wonders, such as the learning of man has never yet fathomed or conceived. But each of these owners of eyes (and at this moment, and, indeed, throughout this little book, all are equally regarded as the author, and no favour shown)—each of these owners of eyes, let us repeat, very naturally, and of necessity, considers his especial pair, or set, as the standard of all correct vision. If he happen to have imperfect eyes, he knows it not. Then of his species stand for his belief in perfection. It is quite clear that all of us—men, bees, ants, fish, spiders, cats, robins, and the rest—see things very differently, not only as shown in the present fragment of natural history, but throughout creation; parts and wholly certain is it, that each species sees its own world, and knows not what others see. The grand question therefore is, Which is right? Is nobody right, anyhow? or, Are we all right, somehow? As for our Poor Artist—the seventh of these eyesights—he entertained no manner of doubt but that he had "found a sovereign!"

Under all this, there runs a vein of philosophical satire and keen irony. The primary truth sought to be conveyed is, that the appearance of objects is dependent on the manner of perception; and that, though they may be something of themselves, whatever they may appear to different persons, the perogative of actuality cannot, without arrogance, be claimed for the eyesight of man. The secondary truth is, that in our judgment of a work of art we differ as much as in our original perception of the object represented, our critical opinions being modified by personal character, disposition, pursuit, profession, and prejudice. The work is charmingly written.

THE DUTY ON BRICKS.

On Wednesday, a large meeting of brick manufacturers took place at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, for the purpose of adopting a memorial to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, soliciting a drawback on the present stocks on hand of justice to which the trade considered itself entitled upon the repeal of the duty on bricks—Mr. Heron in the chair.

The following resolution was adopted—

That the sudden and unexpected abolition of the duty on bricks is both unjust and ruinous to the manufacturers unless a drawback be allowed on the stocks in hand, and calls for the immediate and combined efforts of the trade to obtain a drawback.

Mr. Rutter stated that the reasons assigned by Mr. Hayter for not assenting to the drawback were:—1. That the repeal of the duty would lead to an increased demand for bricks. 2. That there would be sufficient time for the old bricks to be worked off before the new bricks came in. 3. That the result of a drawback would be a loss to the revenue. He considered all these objections to be fallacious ments. He described the way in which judges are appointed to our colonies as "a frightful state of things, brought about by a despicable want of a true and rational economy." He concluded by moving a series of resolutions in accordance with his speech.

The resolutions were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

A short conversation took place in answer to a question from the Earl of Malmesbury, in reply to which the Marquis of CLANRICARDE deprecated the proposed non-transmission of the mails on Sunday, and stated that he was about to place returns upon the table which would show how much diminution had taken place in the amount of Post-office labour on Sundays in consequence of the recent alterations.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE DOCTRINE OF CHURCH RESPECTING BAPTISM.

Mr. HUME said he had seen two "Protests," signed by the Rev. A. Denison, one of them stating that "Whereas the Grove (in certain recent cases) has, through a Court constituted by act of Parliament, claimed a power to control, vary, or reverse the decisions of the Courts of the Church in matters of doctrine, and whereas such supreme power would be false, therefore I protest against a state of the law which empowers the Judicial Committee to take cognizance of matters of doctrine, and I pledge myself to use all lawful means to prevent it." The hon. member said he would ask the noble Lord whether it was the intention of the Government to take any notice of this document.

Lord J. RUSSELL: I think it is just to Mr. Denison that I should read to the House a statement which in his sent to me this morning, and which professes to be a statement of his opinion as regards the supremacy of the Crown in connexion with this case. The statement is as follows:—

> I have not denied, and do not deny that the Queen's Majesty is supreme governor of this Church and realm, and is, in matters temporal, supreme over all causes ecclesiastical and civil, judging in causes spiritual by the judges of the spirituality, and in causes temporal by temporal judges, as enacted by the statute 26th of Henry VIII., c. 19; and I have not impeached, and do not impeach, any part of the legal supremacy as set forth in the second canon and in the 37th article of our Church; but I humbly conceive that the Constitution does not attribute to the Crown, without a synod, any infallibility of deciding a question of doctrine; and this, although disclaimed by the Lords of the Judicial Committee or her Majesty's Privy Council, itself, at what, as appears to me, is a most important, indeed, but common, point is represented as "Graham v. the Bishop of Exeter."
> March 18, 1850. GEORGE ANTHONY DENISON.

Now, Sir, I have no hesitation in saying that I think Mr. Denison is utterly mistaken in this opinion, and that the judgment given by the Committee of the Privy Council is within their jurisdiction, and such as they were authorised by law to give. I believe also that his decision will be given by every satisfying unto the Church. But as the hon. member asks me, further, what course the Government intends to take upon these protests, I must say that, although it may hereafter be that measures adopted on the part of those who think with this gentleman may make it necessary to take a step on the part of the Government —although I guard myself by saying this may be so necessary— I should be most reluctant to take any steps against men who are giving what they conceive is a conscientious expression of their views with regard to the Church, and I should fear that any such act might tend to disturb still further the harmony of the Church. (Hear, hear.) Therefore, though dissenting entirely from Mr. Denison, I think it may be doubtful whether it intends to deny the authority of the Privy Council, or only to use every lawful means to alter the law. The real engagement the Porte was under was to prevent the Turkish territory from being made the ground of intrigue against neighbouring powers.

STAMP DUTIES.

The House having gone into committee,

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER brought forward his propositions as to the stamp duties, which he explained, at the outset, related only to transferred property, bonds, mortgages, and leases. The general revision of the stamp duties had been under the consideration of the various Governments for many years past, since that of Lord Althorp; but the enormous amount of details had deterred any Minister from bringing the whole subject forward, and he was satisfied it was best to take it piecemeal, and do as much as was necessary at one time. The general tenor of his proposition was to adopt, as far as practicable, the principle of an ad valorem duty, making the "jumps" of duty at every £25 up to £1000, and thence at every £100. Moreover, he proposed a great remission of the duties on transactions under £1000, whether in the way of conveyances or mortgages. He would state first (as the simplest class) the present and proposed duties on

BONDS AND MORTGAGES.

	Present Duty.	Proposed Duty.
Not exceeding £90	£1 0 0	£0 3 0
" 100	1 10 0	0 10 0
" 200	2 0 0	1 0 0
And so on.

CONVEYANCES AND TRANSFERS OF LAND.

	Present Duty.	Proposed Duty.
Not exceeding £20	£0 10 0	£0 2 6
" 50	1 15 0	0 7 6
" 150	3 19 0	0 10 0
" 500	7 15 0	2 10 0
" 800	13 15 0	5 15 0
" 1000	18 15 0	7 10 0

The only objection he had heard to his alterations of duty was with respect to the subdivision of freeholds for purposes of acquiring the parliamentary franchise. But he believed that, pronounced as this was by gentlemen opposite, the present duty would be no check upon it. He should be sorry to see land so subdivided as it was in France, where the proprietors were more paupers; but he also thought it would be well to hold out to the working man, as the reward of a life of labour, something better than the almshouse or the workhouse. The following were the duties upon

LEASES.

	Present Duty.	Proposed Duty.
Rent .. £20	£1 0 0	Rent .. £25 .. 3s. 0d.
Rent .. 100	1 10	Rent .. 50 .. 3s. 0d.
Rent .. 200	3 0	Rent .. 75 .. 6s. 0d.
		Rent .. 100 .. 10s. 0d.

With respect to Irish leases, he had an alteration to propose, which, however, he left it to the Irish members to accept or reject; and he would enter into no further details. In fact, he proposed a short resolution with a long se cdnte. It was desirable, as far as possible, to bring this measure to a speedy conclusion, as it would confer great convenience upon the buyers or sellers of land. He desired that the House would permit him to take the preliminary proceedings on it without discussion, for which there would be ample time, as he meant to bring the measure before the House at as early a period after Easter as possible.

Colonel SIBTHORP regretted that the duty on fire insurances had not been taken off.

The resolutions were agreed to, and leave was given to bring in a bill founded thereon.

DRAINAGE OF LAND.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER then moved resolutions to advance £2,000,000 to England and Scotland for the purposes of drainage and the improvement of land, and £1,000,000 to Ireland for arterial drainage and the improvement of land, according to the design expounded by him in his budget. He proposed that repayments should be made at the rate of 5½ per cent. per annum, so that the advances, with interest, would be paid off in twenty-two years.

After a short conversation, the resolutions were agreed to, and a bill was ordered to be brought in founded on them.

THE FRANCHISE (IRELAND.)

The House went into committee on the Parliamentary Voters, &c. (Ireland) Bill, and agreed to clauses down to clause 47 inclusive, after a lengthened discussion and several divisions. In the course of the debate,

Lord J. RUSSELL intimated that he would be willing to consider, at a future time, a suggestion thrown out by Mr. Mowatt, for grouping several small towns around parliamentary boroughs in Ireland, on the principle of the Scotch districts of burgha.

The Chairman reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on the 11th of April.

The Mutiny Bill, the Marine Mutiny Bill, and the Fees (Court of Common Pleas) Bill, were read a second time.

The School Districts Contributions Bill, on the motion of Mr. BAINES, passed through committee.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER obtained leave to bring in a bill to repeal the duty on bricks.—Adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE EXHIBITION OF 1851.

Lord BROUGHAM moved for some returns relative to the proposed Exhibition of all Nations in 1851, and took the occasion to express his opinion that it would indeed be an "exhibition." He marvelled that English tradespeople were such fools as to subscribe their money to provide accommodation for the traders of all nations to come over to undersell them in their own markets. The noble and learned Lord strenuously objected to the sacrifice of Hyde Park, one of the chief lungs of the metropolis, to this contemplated exposition, and suggested Victoria Park as a suitable site.

The Earl of CARLISLE upheld the projected Exhibition, and said that, in his opinion, Hyde Park was the most convenient and best adapted locality.

The return was ordered.

The Railways Abandonment Bill was read a third time and passed.

Adjourned to Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

Sir W. SOMERVILLE stated that it was his intention to bring in a bill, after Easter, to promote the public health in Ireland.

QUESTIONS

In reply to a question put by Mr. Gladstone, Lord J. RUSSELL stated that he did not think it would be expedient to make provision in the Australian Colonies Government Bill to make application of the principle of local self-government to the affairs of the Church of England in those colonies.

Sir FRANCIS BARING, in answer to Colonel Chatterton, admitted that it was true that the Government had accepted tenders for the supply of 1500 tierces of navy pork from a Hamburgh house, refusing tenders from Irish provision merchants for the supply of that article.

Colonel CHATTERTON gave notice that he would draw the attention of the House to these foreign contracts shortly after Easter.

THE LORD-LIEUTENANT OF IRELAND.

In reply to a question by Mr Hume, who stated that he had a motion on the paper for the day relating to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, Lord J. RUSSELL said that he had already informed the House that the question had been brought under the consideration of her Majesty's Government, and that it was his intention to bring in a Bill to abolishish the office of Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland.

THE SLAVE-TRADE—THE AFRICAN SQUADRON.

Petitions against the removal of the squadron from the coast of Africa were presented by Sir R. H. Inglis, from the Church Missionary Society of Africa and the East; by Mr. Heald from the Wesleyan Missionary Society; by Sir E. N. Buxton, from Messrs. Ivey, Saffrey, Gurney, Wade, and other places; and by Mr. Moffatt, from the Anti-Slavery Society of Exeter.

Mr. HUTT then rose to move that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that her Majesty will be pleased to direct that negotiations be forthwith entered into for the purpose of releasing this country from all treaty engagements with foreign states for maintaining armed vessels on the coast of Africa to suppress the trade in slaves. He said that the time was at last arrived when, in accordance with the reports of two committees of that House appointed to consider the subject of the suppression of the slave-trade, it became his duty to submit a motion to the House on that grave and important subject. The motion to which he wished to call the attention of the House was in effect a declaration that it was expedient for this country to abstain from all future attempts at the suppression of the slave-trade by force of arms; in order to carry out which declaration it was in the first instance necessary to release this country from all treaty engagements which bound it to the maintenance of the African squadron. The expediency of this change of policy had been very strongly impressed on the minds of the majority of both the committees to whom this inquiry was confided by the House. And here he might be permitted to remark, that censure had been cast upon the last meeting of the committee, of the allegation that the report had been carried only by his (Mr. Hutt's) casting vote (Cries of "Hear, hear"). His honourable friend opposite cheered that statement; but he could only say in reply, that the statement was false, and that it was also false that in newspapers and to the scribblers of pamphlets, he should not have disputed its accuracy. As, however, it was made by the noble Lord at the head of the Government on the close of the last session, he (Mr. Hutt) was desirous, from the House from illness, it was necessary that he should notice it. He heard with regret and surprise that the noble Lord had made that statement, since it was one which hardly became his high character and station. It was, indeed, one of those half-truths to which disingenuous men resorted, when they tried to steal an advantage which they could not fairly acquire. At the close of the session of 1848 it was considered desirable by the House that the committee which sat during that session should be re-appointed, but it happened that before the next session arrived two members of the committee were no longer members of Parliament. Lord Courtenay had devoted his great talents to the assistance of the Poor-law Board, and Mr. Barkly had been appointed the governor of British Guiana. There was one favourable point in connexion with the absence of those gentlemen, namely, that they ranked among the majority of the committee of 1848; and therefore, if in 1849 the committee was constituted as before, the casting vote of the chairman, that circumstance must be attributed, not to any change in the opinions of the committee, but to one of those casualties arising from the accidental absence of members, a casualty which occurred both in the House and in committees, and one to which he should have thought that the leader of the House of Commons would have been the last man to appeal. The report of the last committee, therefore, was virtually carried by a majority of the committee in every sense of the word. Mr. Barkly was one of the West India body, with whose votes he did not expect to be favoured that night; and he regretted that the opinion of one of the governors of Devonshire had not yet had a chance, with the evidence given before the committee had produced in the just and honourable mind of Lord Courtenay. Having thus endeavoured to relieve the report of the memorials from that imputation which had been cast upon it, he would proceed to state some of the facts and circumstances which, in the opinion of the committee, justified their report. It was now thirty-one years ago since Great Britain, having negotiated various treaties with foreign states, despatched to the coast of Africa armed vessels to carry into effect those treaties. For that end had the memorable blockade of the coast of Africa, the true circumstances of which, as well as its final abandonment, had yet to be recorded in our history (Cheers). No sooner was talking commenced than the force for the due suppression of the slave-trade than it began to increase under circumstances of aggravated atrocity. Such, indeed, was the progress of the slave-trade, that the Duke of Wellington, our Minister at the Congress of Verona, acting under the orders of Mr. Canning, then Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, laid before the ministers of the several states of Europe a memorandum to which he begged to call the attention of the House. In his opinion that memorandum contained a correct and graphic description of the slave-trade, and it gave agreed precisely with that which an eloquent person, speaking on the subject, would apply to the slave-trade at the present moment. The extract which he would read to the House was taken from a memorandum dated the 24th November, 1822. After adverting to the great sacrifices made by this country for the suppression of the slave-trade, it went on to say:—"I have the means of proving that the slave-trade has been, since the year 1815, and now is, carried on to a greater extent than ever it was before the war broke out. This contraband trade is attended by circumstances much more horrible than anything that has ever been known to former times It is not necessary here to enumerate the horrors respecting it, but it cannot be denied that all the attempts at prevention have tended to increase the aggregate of human suffering and the waste of human life in a ratio far exceeding the increase of positive numbers carried off into slavery. The dread of detection suggests expedients of concealment productive of the most dreadful sufferings to the cargo. The numbers put on board each vessel are far from being proportioned to the capacity of the vessels, and the mortality is frightful to a degree unknown since the attention of mankind was first called to the horrors of this traffic There is no hesitation in declaring that it would have been far more consoling to humanity, and that by far a smaller number of human beings would have lost their lives by lingering and cruel suffering, if the trade had never been abolished by the laws of any country." Such was the description solemnly addressed to the sovereigns of Europe, by two of the firmest of our age and country, at a time when the slave-trade had not assumed one-quarter of those horrible features which now belonged to it. Some efforts were accordingly made to continue the work of repression, and for fifteen or sixteen years afterwards Great Britain made every possible effort to suppress the slave-trade by increasing the force of forcible repression. Measures were taken for increasing the number of our cruisers; and, by and-by, steamers were added to sailing-vessels. Powers were obtained from almost all the states of Europe and from every transatlantic state in which seas suspected of being engaged in the slave-trade, and these were not only liable to seizure, but, if condemned, were broken up. Brazil, Portugal, and Spain were bound down by more rigid bonds than had existed before, and no measure was neglected which the enthusiasm of Exeter Hall or the ability of the Foreign Office could devise. Now, what was the result of all these exertions? (Hear, hear.) He described the condition of the coast of Africa. Wellington of the extent to which the slave-trade had been carried up to 1822, and he would now read a letter which was written in 1839 by another individual, loved and honoured, in his own home, and who certainly had deserved well, to be remembered afterwards. In 1839, Lord John Russell, being then Secretary of State for the Colonies, addressed a letter to the Lords of the Treasury, in which he found the following passage: "The state of the foreign slave-trade has for some time past formed a subject of the deepest anxiety to her Majesty's confidential advisers. In whatever light this traffic is viewed, it must be regarded as an evil of incalculable magnitude; the injuries it inflicts on the lawful commerce of the country, the constant expenses incurred in the employment of ships of war for the suppression of it, and the annual sacrifice of so many valuable lives in the service, however deeply to be lamented, are not the most disastrous results of this system. The horror of the Middle Passage is compromised by the habitual evasion of the treaties subsisting between her Majesty and foreign powers for the abolition of the slave-trade; and the calamities which, in defiance of religion and justice, are inflicted on a large proportion of the African continent, are such as cannot be contemplated without the deepest and most lively concern. To estimate the actual extent of the foreign slave-trade is, from the nature of the case, an attempt of extreme difficulty; nor can anything more than a general approximation to the truth be made But I find it impossible to avoid the conclusion, that the average number of slaves introduced into foreign states or colonies in America and the West Indies, from the western coast of Africa, annually exceeds 100,000." The noble Lord took the western coast of Africa only, and the average number. It continued:—"In this estimate a very large deduction is made for the exaggerations of interested persons or persons with an exaggerated view of a subject so well calculated to excite the feelings of every impartial and disinterested witness. But, making this deduction, the number of slaves actually landed in the Spanish colonies alone is very important for the abolition of the real extent of the calamities which this traffic inflicts on its victims. No record exists of the multitudes who perish in the overland journey to the African coast, or in the passage across the Atlantic, or of the still greater number who fall a sacrifice to the warfare, pillage, and cruelties by which the slave-trade is fed. Unhappily, however, no fact can be more certain than that such an importation as I have mentioned presupposes and involves a waste of human life, and a sum of human misery, proceeding from year to year, without respite or intermission, to such an extent as to render the subject the most painful of any which, in the survey of the condition of mankind, it is possible to contemplate. The preceding statement unavoidably suggests the inquiry, why the costly efforts on which Great Britain has so long been engaged for repressing the foreign slave-trade have proved thus ineffectual? Without pausing to enumerate the many concurrent causes of failure, it may be sufficient to state, that such is the difference between the price at which a slave is bought on the coast of Africa and the price for which he is sold in Brazil or Cuba, that the importer receives back his purchase-money tenfold on the safe arrival of his vessel at the port of destination. We must add to this exciting motive the security which is derived from insurances and insurance companies, which are carried on to a great extent, and by combined powerful interests. Under such circumstances, to repress the foreign slave-trade by a marine guard would scarcely be possible, if the whole British navy could be employed for that purpose. It is an evil which can never be adequately encountered by any system of mere prohibition and penalties. Her Majesty's confidential advisers are, therefore, compelled to admit the conviction, that it is indispensable to enter upon some new preventive system." (Hear.) He admitted that this letter was drawn up with the object of impressing on the minds of the Lords of the Treasury the propriety of supporting the Niger expedition; but, as he was sure that the observations which it contained were written in a spirit of sincerity and truth, he had no hesitation in referring to them. But this was not all. In the following year, 1840, a great assemblage was held in Exeter Hall. His Royal Highness Prince Albert took the chair, and he was supported by the noble Lord at the head of the Government, by the right honourable Baronet whom he (Mr. Hutt) saw opposite, by both of the members representing the University of Oxford, by a perfect constellation of Lords spiritual and temporal, and a host of well-dressed ladies and gentlemen. He (Mr. Hutt) had been accused of holding very strong language with regard to this well-dressed and well-conducted Parliamentary assembly in Exeter Hall, but he begged to call the attention of the House to the resolutions which were passed at that meeting. The first resolution was moved by Sir Fowell Buxton, and seconded by the present Archbishop of Canterbury, then Bishop of Chester, and was to the following effect:—"That, notwithstanding the measures hitherto adopted for the suppression of the foreign slave-trade, the traffic has increased, and continues to increase, under circumstances of aggravated horror." The second resolution was proposed by Mr. Labouchere, and seconded by Archdeacon Wilberforce, now the Bishop of Oxford, and chairman of the Slave-trade Committee in the House of Lords. It was to the following effect:—"That the utter failure of every attempt, by treaty, remonstrance, or naval armament, to resist the progress of the slave-trade, proves the necessity of resorting to a preventive policy, and founded on different and higher considerations." Now, he had said nothing strange in this. The noble Lord, the committee of the House of Commons, of which he had the honour to be chairman, brought forward no stronger statement than was contained in those resolutions, either with regard to the continued progress of the slave-trade or the failure of the means used for its repression. What surprised him was, that persons should now stand forward to defend this system, who then stood forward as its accusers. He had arrived now at the year 1840, when, for a few years, as well as a previous one, was distinguished by a temporary, but remarkable diminution in the slave-trade, and there were some naval officers who were anxious to persuade the world that the diminution was caused by their presence on the coast of Africa. ("Hear, hear.") and a long list he was willing to believe that Captain Denman and Captain Malson were zealous and meritorious officers; but when they claimed to themselves the merit of greatly reducing the slave trade, he believed they were claiming credit for that which was due to another power in the heavens and orderly conduct of the congregation was entirely explained by the manner in which he called the church-bell. That it was perfectly true that Captain Denman was at his post, and that the other naval officers were diligent in their work. (Hear, hear.) He saw in his place the right hon Baronet, who was now the First Lord of the Admiralty, but who happened to be in 1840 the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He was sure the right hon. gentleman would remember, if every one else forgot, that the year 1840 was a period of great mercantile depression. Now a period of mercantile depression affected the slave-trade as much as it did any legitimate branch of commerce; but there were other concurrent causes for this diminution, of a very favourable character, which were in operation at that period. Both Cuba and Brazil were honestly engaged in an attempt to prevent the importation of slaves into those countries. Mr. Crawley, whom deputations from Brazil were in the habit of visiting when he had been laid on the table of the House, attributed the diminution in the slave-trade to the exertions made for its suppression by the Brazilian Government, especially by Senhor d'Araujo Ribeiro, then Minister of Marine. At the same time Cuba had the advantage of being governed by General Valdes; but, in 1843, he was recalled, and at the same period the anti-slavery ministry of Brazil went out, and the slave-trade immediately revived, and with the revival of commerce, notwithstanding the increased efficiency of our fleet, there came a revival of all the horrors of the slave-trade. In 1842 the number of slaves exported from Africa had sunk down as low as 25,000, but in 1843 the number rose to 55,000, in 1845 to 76,000, and in 1847 to 84,000; and, although no public means had been furnished for ascertaining what had been the increase during the past year, it was known that it was great. He had every reason to believe that the slave-trade was now in a state of unusual activity. In a paper laid upon the table of the House towards the close of the last session, there was a statement made by a person well qualified to form a correct judgment which entirely sustained his (Mr. Hutt's) opinion on the subject. The paper to which he referred was called "Missions to the King of Ashantee and Dah mey;" and Mr. Cruickshank, writing from Whydah, on the coast of Africa, at the conclusion of the year 1848, stated in that paper that in the previous year, that our present blockade is no check whatever to the slave-trade; it is flourishing at this moment to such a degree, that the last accounts from Brazil report more than 500 slaves to be taking every week from those coasts; and not long ago, a cargo of slaves arrived at the same place, which found such a bad market that they were given up to pay freight. In presence of such facts as these, and the additional fact that, during the past year there have been matured cruisers on the coast, the slave-trade has gone on uninterruptedly, we must be convinced of the futility of such a system. It appears to me to serve no other purpose than to increase the horrors of the trade. In the next place, the certainty of losing a considerable proportion by capture increases the slave merchants' orders for supply to the slave-hunting African kings, and so renders more frequent and numerous the cruel forays, and the sale of captives from the bloody battle-field, where they were taken prisoners, or from their smoking huts, where they were surprised in sleep, throughout their toilsome journey over the burning plains and through the swampy forests, until their arrival on the sea-shore. In the next place, in addition to the horrors of the march, the cruisers oblige the slavers to cram these miserable objects into the stifling holds of small vessels, where it is well known thousands die from suffocation. In addition to this, I believe I may add, that it scarcely ever happens that a slave-vessel has been more fortunate than he calculated upon, and that more of his slaves have escaped capture than he expected; he does not, therefore, require the additional loss of slaves who have been hunted down for him, so long as he is fortunate enough to arrive in the hands of the captors, and sometimes are led forth to gratify them with their tortures. There can be no doubt but that much of this incredible suffering would be avoided if there were no cruisers; and only we cannot alleviate the miseries of these wretches by our blockade, let us not add to their torments by our philanthropic but fruitless exertions." Such, then, was the end to which they had arrived, after a period of thirty years. In which year had the system engaged in this work of suppression. But there was one feature in this history of suppression which was well worthy the attention of the House. Up to the year 1840 the slave-trade to the Brazils was perfectly free, and we could not molest persons engaged in the slave-trade with the Brazils. The noble Lord at the head of the Foreign Office stated before the committee of the House of Commons that up to the beginning of that year the importation of slaves into the Brazils was perfectly unrestricted. At the commencement of the year 1840 we acquired the right to suppress the slave-trade south of the line, as before we had possessed it at the north of the line, and we stationed our cruisers at the places in which they have since remained. What was the result of this step? Exemption or all slavery south of the line? It was very true that our cruisers, in the first instance, going among the slave-traders before they had well learned the art of smuggling, captured a great many of them; but was that the permanent result
